The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOLUME X. CHICAGO, JANUARY 3, 1884. NUMBER 1.

THE twenty saloons of Lawrence, Kansas, are reported as closed. The law is made effective by the faithful work of citizens, and prohibition will now be able to prohibit.

TOPEKA, Kansas, has a new mayor, the Hon. Bradford Miller, a prohibitionist, and pledged to the enforcement of prohibition. The saloons of Topeka will doubtless soon follow those of Lawrence. The people of Kansas are not to be permanently overthrown by the politicians.

CONGRESS has a committee on temperance but denied its constituency a committee on woman's suffrage. The petitions and communications bearing on this question, will, it is said, go to the judiciary committee with quite as much prospect of a candid hearing, as before a body appointed to stifle all utterance.

A VERY pleasant feature of one crusade celebration (Evanston, Ill.) was the presence and address of Mrs. Youmans, of Canada. It was a truly international affair, and the spirit thereof was blessed. Mrs. Youmans is now free from the Lever course, and is able to make engagements with some few W. C. T. Unions in the west before her return to Canada. Applications should reach her at once, care of this office.

DR. JOHN HALL preached a temperance sermon on Sunday last. He claimed that the true ground on which total abstinence bases its claims on humanity is that of expediency. Wine, he says, has neither moral good nor evil. Neither has arsenic or nitro glycerine. He made an eloquent appeal for social prohibition on New Year's day, and to Christians that they have no share in swelling the number of human shipwrecks along the shore line of humanity.

IN a station house in Brooklyn, the other night, a police officer in charge whiled away the time by taking a vote to see what were the politics of the seventeen men gathered into custody. Some of them were republican and some of them democrats, but all but two of them, or fifteen out of seventeen, declared they would vote for prohibition if they had the chance as the best and surest means of keeping their money out of the hands of liquor dealers, and preventing for themselves and their families the misery which in their better moments they promised themselves to avoid in future. If our drunkards and criminals are willing to vote for prohibiton, or anything that will pull them out of the slough of despond, surely every Christian man ought to lend a helping hand.

THE first temperance society in Connecticut, and probably the first in the world, was organized in Litchfield, in 1789. The pledge was as follows:

"So many are the avenues leading to human misery that it is impossible to guard them all. Such evils as are produced by our own folly and weakness are within our power to avoid. The immoderate use which the people of this state make of distilled spirits is undoubtedly an evil of this kind. The morals are corrupted, property is exhausted and health destroyed. Whereupon we do hereby associate, and mutually agree that hereafter we will carry on our business without the use of distilled spirits as an article of refreshment, either for ourselves or those whom we employ, and that instead thereof we will serve our workmen with wholesome food and common simple drinks of our own production. This was signed by thirty-six men. These facts are recorded in an old county history, and are believed to be well substantiated."

THE liquor dealers' association having pronounced by resolution and practice against the ballot in the hands of woman because it will be the destruction of their "craft," the daily papers in their interest have entered the ring of falsehood and cobbled up all manner of misrepresentations concerning the results and processes of woman's suffrage in the territories, especially Wyoming. The mayor and prominent citizens of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, hastened to protest against such false statements and to declare that public opinion in that locality would not support them. Whenever and wherever such paragraphs appear it is safe after all the reliable testimony as to the beneficence of the woman's ballot, to attribute them to liquor sources.

A BOOK of noble aim is Mrs. Mary A. Livermore's "What Shall We Do With Our Daughters?" A little eight-year-old, in a home that we wot of, picked up the book a few days since, and with an elocutionary instinct already quite developed, read the title very emphatically, "What shall we do with our daughters?" Such emphasis there is need of in many homes of to day, and this Mrs. Livermore seeks to meet. She does it not by any superficial suggestions, and lopping off of unlovely growth and awkward development, but she digs deep about the roots of character, feeds them with the wholesome elements of God's truth as she finds it in nature, history and revelation, and stimulates the whole life with earnest purpose, reaching to the heavens. The book would be an excellent one for weekly readings in Y. W. C. T. U. meetings, and deserves to rank by the side of Frances Power Cobbe's "Duties of Women."

ONE of the methods by which the Chicago Tribune attempts to "down" prohibition in Iowa is by sending to prominent politicians and members elect of the next legislature, the following questions:

"1. Do you consider the amendment now to have a binding force, in spite of the adverse decision of the supreme court?

"2. Do you favor the submission of a new amendment?

"3. Do you favor establishing prohibition by statute?"

To the first, every intelligent prohibitionist in the state, as well as every well-posted legislator will answer "No."

To the second, a similar answer, because it is believed that the amendment adopted June, 1882, will yet have "binding force," and to the third, the honest republican, as well as the loyal prohibitionist, must answer "Yes." But the first two responses, the Tribune construes to imply hostility to prohibition, and counts accordingly, stating to the interested public that the incoming legislature will not protect the people, as the party that elected it has promised. To such base uses must the venal newspaper come at last.

THE Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago feeling the great need of a more thorough, permanent and aggressive temperance organization among the children, called a meeting of the pastors and Christian workers of the city reported in these columns, some weeks since. At that time a central board of management was formed. A constitution adopted and a superintendent engaged to organize and strengthen Bands of Hope by planning entertainments, programs, etc., also to prepare and publish supplies.

We are glad to record the fact that this action has brought out prompt and hearty co-operation on the part of Sunday-school superintendents and workers not only in the city, but in other portions of the state. Shall we not try to recruit "three hundred thousand more" before another glad New Year rolls around? Let us ask God for this number of young people who will if properly trained, in a few brief years, lift from our land the curse that now blackens it, and hands free from the "primeval eldest curse"

"Shall fling the dear old flag in foemen's faces;
And stand together till they flee dismayed."

IT is lamentable that some excellent periodicals are giving currency to garbled versions of the action taken by the late National convention at Detroit, concerning woman's ballot. Among them we find several of our own exchanges, and their opportunity for doing us justice is certain. One says:

"An attempt was made to pass a resolution through the National Union, pledging it to woman suffrage. After an able discussion this resolution was tabled, though afterward it was taken up and passed when its leading opponents had left the convention."

The Christian Witness and Advocate of Holiness might have known better as THE UNION SIGNAL goes regularly to its table. The facts are, once again, that the convention passed a resolution strongly in favor of the ballot in the hands of woman. It was passed without a single dissenting vote or voice. Following it, a resolution declaring in favor of a petition to congress for the passage of the sixteenth amendment now pending there, was tabled. It was never renewed—but a resolution to memorialize congress in the interest of legislation for extension of the suffrage to women, was passed, and in a full meeting when all the few well-known opponents of the measure were present, and they did not oppose it. We hope this may set the matter right in some quarters.

THE Rev. Dr. Vandyke gives sound views of prohibitory law in a recent issue of the New York Observer. He says very concisely:

Drinkers, as well as venders, need something more potent than linguistic persuasives. Some of them are not likely to be permanently reformed till the places of temptation are closed. They may determine to discontinue drinking, but with legalized venders coining money from broken vows, it is impossible that a majority of drinkers should conquer the appetite. Will-power is too feeble. The hope of future good is obscured by the desire for present gratification.

Nor is it worth our while to conceal the fact that the cause of temperance is seriously weakened by conceding that moral suasion is the only agency at our command. We thereby give currency to the opinion that drunkard-making is not wrong, though it is a little inexpedient. Please desist. Those who regard this as the only legitimate agency would do well to reflect whether it might not be well to repeal all laws against crime, and organize society into a coaxing fraternity. When a man finds his safe emptied of government bonds by a neighbor, let him set to work and coax the thief not to appropriate his "Bland" dollars also. If on returning from his business he discovers his wife murdered by the coachman, let him cry over him, pray with him, sing for him and implore him to spare the helpless children.

Nor will religion, unaided by law, effect the needed remedy. The only hope of the drunkard, it may be, is a genuine conversion. Is this any reason why society should go on manufacturing drunkards? Have we, as citizens, a right to go on making inebriates, and then as Christians implore God to undo the work of our hands?

THE OLD AND THE NEW CRUSADE.

DEDICATED TO THE W. C. T. U.

BY MRS. MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

Tell us not, O song of poet, tales of how their white plumes tossed
Like the snow-capped waves in sea-storm, when the knightly lances crossed,
And Christian warred with Saracen for tomb, beloved and lost.

Blood and anguish little counted, life and courage all unpriced,
Gave they to this holy warfare—nought too much, yet nought sufficed;
For an empty tomb they battled, these—the living Christ.

Christ, the Christ alive, yet buried, wrapped and hidden in His own,
Under fold on fold of evil, till the heart, meant for His throne,
Is a grave from whose dark doorway none could roll away the stone.

By such tombs watched weeping women, darksome night and dreary day,
For one sight of Christ the Master, through the folding shroud of clay,
For the coming of an angel who could roll the stone away.

And God sent, not one but many, soft of word and sweet of face,
And the stony portal trembled at this miracle of grace,
Till the buried Christ awakened, and His presence filled The place.

From that day, where'er the evil shrouds the good in hearts of men,
Is this miracle of wonder wrought afresh, until again
Good, that stifled in its grave-clothes, reappears to mortal ken.

And defeated souls and fettered, loosed from bonds, in freedom stand,
Ready both to do and suffer at the King's divine command;
And the angel touch that frees them—is a loving woman's hand.

"RENDER TO CÆSAR THE THINGS THAT ARE CÆSAR'S"

An Address to my Sisters of the W. C. T. U.

BY MRS. GOVERNOR WALLACE.

If the relation which the progress and development of humanity, the triumph of the principle of individual liberty and responsibility sustain to the purity, perpetuity and universality of republican institutions, themselves, in their fullness the outgrowth of Christianity, is so vital that one cannot long exist without the other, it seems to me that there is not anything which can be of more importance to us than a knowledge of the true relation which we, as Christian women, sustain to the civil government, growing out of our high privileges as citizens of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus.

I take it that our further progress as a Christian nation, in all that constitutes true civilization, depends greatly upon the assumption by women, and the recognition by men, of our rightful place in the church and state, as they cannot, without us, be made perfect.

I may not in this paper bring anything new to your consideration; but, if I shall succeed in awakening in your minds a consciousness of duty in this matter, I shall be more than compensated for any effort or criticism which it may cause me, as I am well aware I shall expose myself to the animadversion and censure of many good men and women, whose prejudices I shall antagonize in thus addressing you.

We hear a great deal about woman's sphere, her duty in the home, in society, in the church—a great deal about her duty as wife, mother, daughter, sister; but are there no duties as a citizen growing out of these high and holy relations, which she has been taught to ignore, and which it would be unwomanly for her to assume.

The command to "render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" is just as obligatory upon us, as the command to render to God the things which are God's. And Cæsar suffers because this command has not been obeyed by us. Do you doubt it? Look at the civil government, which Paul teaches is one of God's ordinances; and yet the best that an exclusively masculine government has done for six thousand years makes necessary four million and a half of men and a thousand million of dollars annually to maintain such government even on a peace-footing, not to speak of the carnage and bloodshed and waste of war. Is it any wonder that want and disease and vice run riot, and that a vast majority of the governments of the world are bankrupt?

How long, at this rate of progress, will it be before the triumphant and universal reign of the Prince of Peace, when men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks?

May we not well inquire, Is God's ordinance a failure? or is there not some element of the Godhead in humanity as expressed by the voice of the people, which has not yet been heard directly or effectually in legislation? To-day Cæsar or, in other words, civil governments or, if you will, our own government, stands pleading as it never did before, for the help of good women in every department of human society, political as well as religious and domestic.

This is no question of woman's right, but a question of woman's duty. Good measures fail, good men stand appalled and helpless before the corrupting influences which are coming in like a flood. Shall we lose our faith in human progress and give up the hope of man's ability for self government? Never. God's purpose stands firm to make humanity in his own image, and give them dominion over the works of His hand.

And right here, dear sisters, I wish to impress it upon you that this dominion is not to be given to men nor to women as a class, but to humanity. And this dominion over the forces of nature and over ourselves, as the grandest force of nature, for which all others were made, is to be secured by united, continuous effort, and maintained by self-imposed laws. The theory of our government is, that a government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed. Have the women of this nation by the ballot—the ballot by which humanity rules in God's stead, the ballot, which is the protection of the poor against the avarice and selfishness of capital and monopoly—the ballot, the most peaceful and potent means in popular governments of all moral and social reforms,—I ask, have the women by this means consented that vice shall be legalized; that schools of crime may be opened under sanction and protection of law; that sin, pauperism and disease may be multiplied a thousand fold, and our door-yards made the dead lines, beyond which our boys may not go in safety? Oh, is there any stake in the country like a mother's interest in her children, and shall not this interest make us labor for the realization of the ideal republic? when all shall be clothed with every prerogative of citizenship, and exercise their sovereignty for the good of all, when the weal of all shall be the care of all. Then shall we see a government of the people, by the people, for the people—a government deriving its just powers from the consent of a majority of all the governed, a government which cannot be overturned by violence or revolution, as, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, there can be no successful appeal among the free from the ballot to the bullet, and those who invoke it do it at their peril, and must pay the cost.

President Quincy has said, "Human happiness has no perfect security but freedom; freedom, none but virtue; virtue, none but knowledge; and neither freedom nor virtue has any vigor or immortal hope, except in the principles of the Christian faith, and in the sanctions of the Christian religion."

Is not the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as much the birthright of women as of men? Has woman no sense of justice, no love of virtue, no faith in God or humanity, no love of country or liberty, no sense of duty as a citizen, no love of home, which, if allowed to crystallize into law, would tend to protect and elevate herself and others?

I am sick to death of the treason that "politics degrade." Call no ordinance of God unclean. A wise man has said that the whole destiny of humanity is comprehended in these four words—education, religion, morals, and politics.

What is politics? Webster defines it to be: "The science of government; that part of ethics which has to do with the regulation and government of a nation or state; the preservation of its safety, peace, and prosperity; the defense of its existence and rights against foreign control or conquest; the augmentation of its strength and resources, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, with the preservation and improvement of their morals."

Is there anything in such a science to corrupt or degrade? Will it not rather ennoble and develop?

If it be true, as has been well said, that without a pure, wise, strong, faithful government nothing can prosper, and that the relation of Christianity to civil government is the great problem of Christian civilization, and has involved in it all the moral and religious, as well as all the temporal and physical elements of national prosperity, how can the women of this nation, who compose more than two thirds of the Christian church, and in whose hands is held the numerical strength of the moral forces of humanity, longer refuse to render that support and influence to Cæsar which the author of our holy religion enjoins?

If all power inheres in the people, and if the voice of the people be the voice of God, then it is evident we have never had the voice of God fully expressed in human government, while one-half of the people are deprived of all legitimate means of expressing their voice in legislation, and thereby largely rendered ignorant and apathetic to the best interests of the state. There is nothing in this woman's movement antagonistic to the best interest of the men. They have done the best they could without us, and we recognize the magnitude of the work which they have accomplished; but they cannot solve the problem of the whole with one-half.

Their clear brains, brave hearts, and strong arms have secured to us a material and physical prosperity, unheard of in the history of nations; but are there no other interests?

As the vertebra is to the human frame, so is the moral and spiritual to government; and, if we would not have a recession in our civilization, they must keep pace in their development with the physical and material.

If we succeed in working out the high destiny of humanity, and demonstrate its ability for self-government, this moral power which rests so largely with women must have proper recognition, and every opportunity for making its impress upon human society.

Woman is the great moral conservator of the race.

Look at the statistics of crime. In my own state of Indiana we have only 44 criminals in the penal department of the women's prison, against 1400 men in the male penitentiaries; and statistics show that woman bears the same relation to crime in every country, not only in our favored land, but all over the world.

Now, why is this? It cannot be that she is not exposed to equal temptation.

The conditions of human life bear as hard upon her as men, in some countries much harder.

Our recently returned minister from Russia, Mr. Foster, speaking of the Russian peasant women, who, in the absence of a male to represent the freehold, cast a ballot, says: "To their credit, be it spoken, that their influence is uniformly on the side of temperance, virtue, and education.

Now if this can be truthfully said of the poor peasant women of Russia, what have we not a right to expect of the women of these United States?

In relegating the women of this country as citizens, to the sphere of children, idiots, criminals, and traitors, an injustice is practiced which works a loss to all.

Yea, more, an indignity and insult, which should crimson the cheek of every loyal woman with shame and indignation.

A distinguished divine has said, that, "Under God the women of America are to save America," and, dearly beloved, if we save America, we save the world. The hope of the world is in us, upon whom the great conflict of the ages for truth, justice, and equality has come.

My dear sisters, we have come to the kingdom for such a time as this, and God expects us to be in advance of those who have preceded us. We are to aid in taking the world for Christ, and to do this successfully we must be unqualifiedly free.

I confess that in contemplating the destiny of this nation and the part we are to play in redeeming the world from the degrading influences of despotism, superstition, and class legislation, I wonder that the heart of every woman is not fired with a holy zeal to take part in the conflict. At this crisis in the world's history, which has unveiled the great forces of nature, and men are enabled to apply them, advancing the race in enlightenment and happiness, are there not great moral forces which, if applied, would be calculated to sweep away evil and enable men to rise above their lower natures and be governed by higher impulses? If there are not, then revelation is a cruel mockery.

To woman, and through woman, do I look for the application of these great moral agencies. The distinguished Alexander Campbell, in a lecture on the amelioration of the social state, regards woman and the Bible as the two superlative agencies in civilization. But nothing more fully exemplifies the growth of the idea of human liberty and human responsibility than that even he, great man as he was, did not comprehend the boundary and limit of woman's sphere as an individual to have and to hold all her powers for her own development and God's glory, subject only to such restrictions and limitations as are imposed by the laws of God and of love.

This is not the time nor the place neither is it my purpose to consider the objections which are made to woman maintaining her rightful place in a government of the people. I wish only to arouse the minds of the Christian women to inquire how far they are responsible, if human government is one of God's ordinances for the suppression of crime and the promotion of virtue, that they, a part of the people, permit, in a government of the people, 200,000 schools of vice under sanction and protection of law, outnumbering our school-houses and churches ten to one, and that the best solution which the Christian civilization of the nineteenth century has reached for the suppression of vice is to attempt to regulate and license it, build jails and prisons for its victims, and derive a revenue from its practice.

Do not understand me as referring to the liquor traffic alone. There are other great crimes against humanity perpetrated under sanction of law which call for reform, and which I believe woman's proper recognition as a factor in government would go far to change. It is not my desire in this article to depreciate men or extol women beyond what is true, but it is evident that by just so much as the whole is greater than the half, would the united wisdom of good men and women ultimately reach the best results in the state, as they do in every department of human life. To deny this is to say that humanity is a failure, and to assert this is to say that God is a failure.

We are called into liberty, my dear sisters, children of God by faith in the Lord Jesus— joint heirs in a kingdom which recognizes neither caste, class, race, or sex—children of the free woman, and there is in this, as in every Bible truth a power and potency which, if put into combination with conscience and brought into vivid development and full action, must bless the world.

Let us then stand fast in the liberty with which Christ has made us free. Only let us not abuse this liberty, but by love serve God and humanity in our day and generation by every means in our power. That the Holy Spirit may quicken our perception as to our privileges and duties, and help us to remember that of those "to whom much is given, much will be required," is my prayer in the name of Jesus.

SAYS Father Burke, of the Roman Catholic church: "When God made us He gave us soul and body together, in all the activity of their powers. The man that annihilates his own soul for a single instant by drunkenness, commits an outrage against the God that has made him, against the author of his nature."

BATTLE HYMN OF THE WOMEN'S CRUSADE.

For the Week of Prayer.

The light of truth is breaking;
On the mountain tops it gleams;
Let it flash along our valleys,
Let it glitter on our streams,
Till all our land awakens,
In its flush of golden beams;
Our God is marching on.

Chorus—Glory, Glory, Hallelujah!
Glory, Glory, Hallelujah!
Glory, Glory, Hallelujah!
Our God is marching on.

With purpose strong and steady,
In the great Jehovah's name,
We rise to snatch our kindred
From the depths of woe and shame;
And the jubilee of freedom
To the slaves of sin proclaim.
Our God is marching on.

From morning's early watches
Till the setting of the sun,
We will never flag nor falter,
In the work we have begun,
Till the forts have all surrendered
And the victory is won.
Our God is marching on.

We wield no carnal weapon,
And we hurl no fiery dart;
But with words of love and reason
We are sure to win the heart,
And persuade the poor transgressor
To prefer the better part.
Our God is marching on.

When dawns the day of terror,
And the awful trumpet's sound
Shall waken up the sleepers
From beneath the quaking ground,
May no blood of fallen brothers
On our startled souls be found.
Our God is marching on.

Our strength is in Jehovah,
And our cause is in His care;
With almighty arms to help us,
We have faith to do and dare,
While confiding in the promise,
That the Lord will answer prayer.
Our God is marching on.

ALCOHOLIC HEREDITY AS IT AFFECTS THE YOUNG.*

BY NORMAN KERR, M. D., F. L. S.

To the well-informed student of the true nature and causes of intemperance, it is a matter at once of amazement and profound regret that comparatively few temperance reformers appear to be alive to the fact that intemperate drinking has a physical as well as a moral aspect. By the majority of those interested in the promotion of temperance, drunkenness is regarded only as a vice or sin, something arising from moral causes alone.

Were this an accurate representation of the truth, the problem which so puzzles our statesmen and our philanthropists would be solved. If intemperance be simply a moral evil, a sinful act, having its origin in the depraved heart of man, moral and spiritual agencies alone would be called for, and would prove of service

This, however, is a defective view of the genesis of excessive drinking. Alcohol is an irritant narcotic poison, irritating and inflaming the vital organs, the blood, and all the important tissues of the body, and dulling, deadening, paralyzing the intellectual, moral, and spiritual faculties. Therefore it is that the use of all intoxicating liquors, i. e., all liquors containing such a proportion of this irritating, poisonous narcotic as is sufficient to produce even the incipient physiological symptoms characteristic of this poison (for example, whisky, brandy, rum, gin, port, sherry, champagne, claret, porter, beer, cider, etc.), is never free from certain risks.

It is true that the majority of the users of these treacherous and perilous drinks, notwithstanding the tendency of all narcotics to create a desire for more of the narcotic substance, are able to limit their drinking; but there are large numbers of our fellow creatures who are unable to stop at "moderation." These persons can be excessive drinkers or total abstainers, but to be moderate users of intoxicating liquors is utterly beyond their power. The fact is patent that there are many individuals who, from some peculiar susceptibility to the narcotic influence of alcohol, are certain to drink to excess if they drink at all. This is an inherent physical susceptibility, and is the result of the operation of an inviolable natural law. This natural state of special alcoholic susceptibility is in certain constitutions as well defined as is in others the natural predisposition to gout or to any other disease.

Hence the difficulty of reformation in the case of the dipsomaniac, in whom habits of intemperance have induced a truly diseased condition of both body and brain. The labor of permanently reclaiming confirmed inebriates is more arduous than any other with which I am acquainted; yet either so apathetic, or so absolutely ignorant of the physical aspect of habitual drunkenness are the temperance and religious worlds, that almost the whole responsibility of such an urgently called for and straightforward attempt to treat these hitherto neglected cases with reference to both their bodily and spiritually shattered state, as the Dalrymple Home for Inebriates, is left upon the shoulders of one or two persons already overweighted with Christian and total abstinence work.

So very hard and often disheartening is the endeavor to promote the cure and reformation of the habitual drunkard, that, if philosophy did not teach us the wisdom of such a course, common sense would drive us to the conclusion that we ought to make every effort to restrain the young from taking the first step on the slippery path of moderate drinking, down which so many slide to the confirmed and exceedingly intractable diseased state of habitual inebriety. If you are called to treat a man three minutes after he has swallowed a dose of poison, your chances of keeping him alive are much greater than if you are called to him an hour later; but if you see him in the act of raising the poison to his lips, and if you spill the deadly potion on the ground, there can be no doubt as to his safety so far as that particular attempt at his life is concerned.

So much for the advanced stage of drinking, the actual diseased development into habitual inebriety, and for the paramount need for the young to be brought up in total abstinence, the only mode of life which can effectually prevent many of them from becoming habitual drunkards.

What is the main predisposing cause of this special constitutional liability to intemperance? The answer must be—TRANSMISSION BY INHERITANCE.

No one doubts the existence of the inherited tendency to gout or to consumption, and to the physician the evidences of the alcoholic taint are as unmistakable as are the evidences of the inheritance of these two English scourges. Without their consent many innocent human creatures are, through the selfish indulgence of parents, born into the world with a fearsome birthright. Stamped upon their whole nature is the seal of alcoholic heredity, the seal of a law of nature as immovable as the law of gravitation, in virtue of which raw of inherited alcoholism the unconscious babe is of the number of these "weaker brethren" who have so delicate a susceptibility to alcohol that, if they drink at all, they drink to excess.

There is but one means by which these can be sure of escaping this terrible fate—by persisting in declining to drink their intoxicating, their hereditary foe, in any circumstances. The abstinence must be unconditional for them to be safe. On no pretence of custom, of business, of fashion, of physic, or of religion, can such persons sip the intoxicating cup without imminent peril to their temporal and eternal welfare.

This inherited tendency to excess in drink lasts with the life of the inheritor. The longer he perseveres in the resolve of strict abstenion, the stronger will he be to resist the advances and defeat the wiles of his ancestral enemy; but if ever he parley with it he is in immediate danger of being overcome. He must never lay aside his armour of absolute abstinence, and if at the close of a long, noble, and truly temperate life he look back, he may truthfully say, in the words of the poet:

"What secret fight
Evil and good, in woven passion mailed,
Waged through that silent throng—a war that never failed."

This baneful inheritance may be handed down by parents who have never drank to what is commonly called "drunkenness"; and, as the human eye cannot discern the innate bias, the constitutional proclivities of the newly born, how needful it is to train up the young people in the only safe habit of total abstinence!

The inherited alcoholic tendency to excess may very quickly be developed on tasting an intoxicant, sometimes, indeed, almost as speedily as a train of gun-powder may break out into a flame on the application of a light. This, to a considerable extent, accounts for the existence of that shocking juvenile drunkenness, which so few philanthropists seem to recognise to be a deep dishonor and foul disgrace to the British name. It is true that the constitutional failing may not openly assert itself till late in life, as in the case of a clergyman who became a drunkard at the age of eighty-six; but an inquiry into the family history of any group of our numerous boy and girl inebriates will disclose the proofs of the active life of this inborn and appalling cancer at a very tender age.

Let the young ever remember, and the old never forget, that the only certain escape from the awful consequences of alcoholic heredity lies in absolute and unconditional abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

The consistent membership of a Band of Hope is an excellent and effective safeguard to every young person, as it is to every youthful legatee of alcohol, against the might and the magic of the "mocker," which God's holy word has truly declared intoxicating wine to be; but Bands of Hope, juvenile and adult total abstinence societies, and all moral and Christian effort put together, will never eradicate drunkenness from amongst us if unrighteous legislation persists in planting public temptations to drinking all around.

Intemperance is a physical before it is a moral evil. It is in virtue of the soothing, deceptive, narcotic influence of the alcoholic poison on the brain and nervous system that drunkenness is so pre-eminent a curse in this country. As there are many individuals endowed with a special susceptibility to the characteristic action of the narcotic poison—alcohol, the ordinary social use of intoxicating drink cannot prevail without a large crop of alcoholic drunkenness, pauperism, crime, disease, insanity, and death.

There is but one effectual way to rid our country of this destroyer, which, beyond all other destroying agents, is wasting our substance, weakening our vitality, dimming the fair escutcheon of our fame, and marring the happiness of our people. That method is the uprooting of the whole drinking system. Tempted by the presence of the intoxicating cup at no hospitable table, at no sacred festival, and freed from public temptations to drinking, the youthful Nephalist, the enlightened member of the Band of Hope, however weighed with the burden of alcoholic heredity, would have a fair opportunity of standing true to his convictions. And there would be the inestimable advantage that, as the inherited alcoholic taint is probably not more than three generations deep, a space within the span of many modern lives would suffice for the complete emancipation of the British nation from the power and thraldom of the most ignoble tyranny under which any race of men on earth can lie.

"Our lives are songs; God writes the words
And we set them to music at pleasure.
And the songs grow glad, or sweet, or sad,
As we choose to fashion the measure.
We must write the music, whatever the song,
Whatever its rhyme or metre;
And if it is sad, we can make it glad,
Or if sweet, we can make it sweeter."

"The Present, the Present is all thou hast for thy sure possessing;
Like the patriarch's angel hold it fast till it gives its blessing."

THE ANNIVERSARY AT HILLSBORO.

Dear Union Signal:—Our beloved National president (and sister), with her dear little ministering spirit, Miss Anna Gordon, have just left us for Washington C. H., and before I take up any other line of work I must give you a peep into our nine o'clock meeting this morning, in the dear old "crusade church," which you have so beautifully preserved in your memorial number of The Union Signal.

You remember it was on the morning of the 24th of December, 1873, that our women first essayed to do what God approved, heeding only the inward monitor, "this is the way, walk ye in it;" so having observed the 23d, we, at the "old fort," thought our "anniversary" not complete without this crusade service.

The same faithful pastor, Dr. McSurely, of this same old church, ever true to our cause, as he was ten years ago, by request of the W. C. T. U. opened the meeting, and after devotional exercises and the saying of many good things (which I only wish I could report), he turned the meeting over to the ladies, calling to the chair the president elected on the 24th of December, 1873. After reading the 146th psalm she gave her testimony to the faithfulness of the "covenant keeping God" who had verified his promises made to her ten years ago, by "vindicating the wrongs of the oppressed," by loosing the prisoners, by opening the eyes of the blind, by raising those up that were bowed down, and although not so visible to mortal eye, by turning "the way of the wicked upside down." Well knowing that all hearts and ears were open for the words of our dear Miss Willard, whose presence has been such an inspiration to us, she was invited to speak, and her words, always eloquent and touching, on this occasion were the more so because of the surroundings and associations, which she seemed so fully to appreciate, and the crusaders and their friends, who by a wondrous amount of courage had braved the weather and gathered into the lecture room of the blessed old church this morning, received rich compensation from the soul-stirring utterances of this gifted and inspired woman.

"Give to the winds thy fears" was sung by request of Miss Willard after which a "memorial" paper was read by Mrs. Janes in which tender mention was made of many of the original crusade band who have gone from labor to reward.

Mrs. Gen. McDowell (our first vice president) was then requested to give a brief account of the wonderful conversion of her noble husband at a prayer meeting in the first room set apart for the use of the temperance women in which a continuous morning meeting was held during the month of February following December, 1873. It was at one of these precious meetings that Gen. Jos. McDowell confessed Christ. The whole narrative is so very interesting that it must be given in a separate article, and this we have promised Miss Willard.

Mrs. McDowell gave us many incidents of interest connected with those wonderful days; this stirred the souls of others and one after another related some striking reminiscence of '73 and '74, until the noon hour admonished us that time was only too short for the pent up memories of those days of spiritual power. And now I have not time before the mail leaves to tell you of many things that you should know of that morning meeting, but must note a few of them.

Mrs. Margaret Stevens, a faithful worker, though a most retiring one, was urged to relate an incident of the war of bloodless victories. She did so in about the following words: On one occasion when we were trying to save the poor men from entering these places of death, our leader, who was holding a prayer meeting in front of a saloon, noticed that the back entrance was becoming popular, and suggested that it would be well to guard that point. I said I will be one to go, and Mrs. Doggett joined me. Very soon two young men approached—evidently not sober—one, having upon his shoulder a gun, insisted upon having their rights. We said, "You have no right to destroy yourselves." The gun was taken down in a menacing manner by the young man as he approached me. Just at that instant Mrs. Doggett stepped up, and in her kind, gentle way, laid her hand upon the shoulder of the young man and said, "John, I know how your mother prays for you, and now we will join her." The gun was laid down, the tears of contrition began to flow, and as they left they said, "You are brave, good Christian women, and we thank you for your interest in us."

We had two brave crusaders with us from Wilmington, Mrs. Farquhar and Mrs. Clevenger, who dared the worst weather that has ever been known in this region, to come over and help us in celebrating our 23d; they gave us very earnest words of sympathy and cheer, also enlivened our meeting by some of the incidents of their work, which was so successful that for months they rejoiced in having no open door to destruction in their midst.

To have heard the experiences of these good women on this "decennial anniversary" morning would have proven to the most doubting minds, that the crusade movement was from God, and that the purifying and quickening influence of the Holy Spirit was one of its seals.

Two earnest Presbyterian sisters gave wonderful testimony to the power of the Spirit upon their hearts during the days of prayer.

Mrs. Stephenson said the "sword of the Spirit" had severed from her soul (through the influence of the crusade) that formality of service which for years had enslaved her spirit and fettered her tongue, so as to cause a lifeless, dumb service; that she had been delivered from the fear of the world, and had ever since rejoiced in the will of her Heavenly Father, and continually upon her heart was the psalm of joy, "Praise ye the Lord."

Mrs. Ellifritz gave a most thrilling account of the struggles that she endured with her own heart when she first went out with the crusaders,—lifetime usages, the rules and forms of her own church, which in the past, she claimed, had not brought out the latent spiritual power of woman. Finally, after a sore and prolonged battle with the powers of darkness, the Spirit set her free, since which time she had been free indeed.

Mrs. Gov. Hart, who was one of our most earnest and liberal workers, always counting "sacrifice" a portion of "service," gave a talk this morning that seemed to set the calendar back a decade, for the tongues of fire that rested upon the original band seemed again visible. Mrs. D. K. Fenner (first secretary) also proved the undying nature of this zeal for God and humanity.

Mrs. Rev. McSurely brought out a very noticeable feature of our work as crusaders in the relation of an incident that occurred just as we were forming in line for our march to the street, on our way to do God's work. Some one said: "Why, Mrs. Thompson, are we really going to sing and pray in the saloons?" The answer was, "We don't know what we will do; God will lead and guide us."

Indeed it was a wonderful meeting, one long to be remembered; and with glad hearts we raised at this decade our Ebenezer, and sang together with the sisterhood of all lands, warmed by the same fire, "Blest be the tie that binds." Again we go forth with the "sword of the Spirit in hand," putting on anew the whole armor of God, resolved to battle with renewed zeal and courage, "for God, and home, and native land." Elizabeth J. Thompson.

LATTER DAY CRUSADING.

Dear Union Signal:—You ask me to write The Union Signal how I spent anniversary day? I spent it on the road. A most urgent, importunate call that would take no denial, urged "For the sake of God, and home, and native land," took me away from my own state, the day after I reached home. The summons was to Louisiana, where a most heroic campaign had been mapped out for me, in about the roughest part of the state. The trip had to be by private conveyance, and we sometimes travelled for half a day in the pouring rain in an open buggie. The roads were almost impassable, the mud being up to the axle. We forded creeks, spoke in churches where the wind poured through the windows, which in most cases were destitute both of sashes and shutters. It made me very sad to pass along where I had traveled years before the war, and mark the dreadful contrast. The comfortable home of the planter and the white washed cottages of the servants are both numbered among things of the happy past. In the majority of cases the plantations have passed into the hands of strangers, mostly Jews, who never are an agricultural people. They hire an agent, or overseer. A large shop is put up on every plantation, at which the negroes are expected to deal, and as they all keep whisky, there is not much money to the darkies' credit at the end of the year. Women, as well as men, drink; and it is no unusual sight to see a colored woman reeling with a baby in her arms. The huts they live in would not have been considered fit for dog kennels in the old plantation days. The negroes actually swing in rags. I have seen hundreds of them march behind their masters (saloon keepers) to the polls, shouting for whisky, and holding up a ticket with a barrel on it, and in many cases the women are worse than the men. Do you wonder the south protests against female suffrage? We have had ignorance enough cruelly let loose upon us. God protect us from any more. Only let us have an educational qualification, and our women will join yours in asking for the ballot. Force it now and its epitaph may be borrowed from Aunt Betsey:

"Who went to rest
From taking a Seidlitz, 'fore it effervesced."

"Emancipation" has been like a tornado, and as yet has only torn up. When we see the demoralization of the negro, we ask who has been benefited? The negro is more of a slave to the whisky seller than he ever was to an owner. He works harder, lives harder, dresses meaner, and when sick has no one to give either food or shelter. A physician told me that in two years he had been called in to forty-three cases of cutting, stabbing, and shooting among the negroes, all done under the influence of liquor. Ought they not to have it taken out of their way? Thank God, with all the dreadful things charged on the south, they can't charge us with making drunkards of the colored people. Whisky was strictly prohibited them, and ought still to be.

I started to tell you how I spent the anniversary, but my feelings are so drawn out in sympathy for Ouachita parish, which the colored vote has turned over to the whisky traffic, that I forget it. Early in the morning we (Rev. Mr. Kelley and myself) drove down to the river, and waited for the ferryman to put us over. It was bitter cold, and as it took him nearly an hour to eat his breakfast we were almost frozen. He informed us when he came, that the boat wasn't safe, and he would have to take us first, then the horses, then the buggie; the long waiting on the river bank, knowing that the next appointment was "twenty-two miles straight, and ten more around the bog's" was anything but pleasant. We never had a mouthful from the morning until the evening any day. I spoke to a large crowd that night, and although the whisky men built a bonfire outside, and furnished free whisky, I was listened to with the most respectful attention, and one saloon keeper surrendered unconditionally. The next day, when speaking, two very fine looking young men, under the influence of liquor, walked up to me and said they were from Ohio, and knew Mother Stewart, they took their seats on the side of the door, which in southern style, like "the gates of gospel grace stand open night and day," and in a few minutes one of them lay sprawling and snoring in the aisle. Some mother (I have no doubt) in that western home prays for her boy. We must try to get national prohibition to save the boys of the nation. I am writing this letter from a sick room. "The spirit truly was willing but the flesh was too weak" for so hard a campaign in such terrible weather. The doctor says I "shall be most fortunate if I escape pneumonia." I hope I shall, for there is a great work to be done at the south, and we are too poor to pay any one to do it. The liquor men are leagued against us, and are moving heaven and earth to delude the poor negroes. The W. C. T. U. of Trenton, La., are doing valiant service, they go out in the parish, and organize wherever they can get a foothold. No nobler names have ever been enrolled than those upon the pages of the W. C. T. U. of Trenton, La., and they have the hearty co-operation of the ministers both of the Methodist and Baptist churches, in all they do. They held a district convention which, for numbers and interest, far exceeded many of our state conventions. I have been from Canada to the Gulf since the National, and have worked in nine of my states. If it please God to restore my health, I shall try to meet all my engagements, and if not some one else will. "For though the workmen perish the work will go on."

Yours in the work, S. F. CHAPIN.

A LETTER TO THE WOODSMEN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Many centuries ago the angels announced the birth of the Savior singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and peace on earth to men of good-will." Ever since at Christmas, people have been sending friendly greetings to one another. I hope this letter will be accepted as one of these messages of peace, since it comes from a heart full of good-will for you. It is not meant for my son, only, who is in the woods with you; not for the young men, only, who, but a few years ago, were my pupils, and who are now employed in the camps in various ways. Indeed to these I send a special word of love, praying that wheresoever they are they may honor God and respect their manhood. But these lines are intended for every camp-man who is willing to accept them from a Christian woman.

For years I have been praying for you. Living in East Saginaw, I have ample opportunity to observe the ways of the camp-men. I know that hundreds of lazy and unprincipled men grow rich on the hard-earned wages of the woodsmen by keeping saloons and other death-traps open for them. The dangers that beset your path in the cities are certainly very great. I often pray that a good, comfortable temperance boarding-house may be opened soon. But the question is, Would the camp-men patronize it?

Not long ago a man said to me: "It is not possible to live right in the woods." I suppose he meant to say that the men who spend the winter in the woods away from their homes and from the sound of the gospel, have many things to pull them down and but few to help them up. But there are men in the camps who do "live right." We can do all things through Christ.

I know of a camp where the men, when they come to their early breakfast, sit down with their backs to the table and listen to a short Scripture lesson which the Christian foreman reads. Then follows a short prayer, and then the men have their breakfast. The Lord's day is kept sacredly in this camp. We well know that this is a splendid exception to the sad rule. I think many of the proprietors, managers and workmen in the woods are somewhat like the little boy who accompanied his father on a visit to Chicago, and before starting, prayed: "Good-bye, God, I am going to Chicago. You won't see me in two weeks."

Many act as though God could not see into the camps, nor read the leaves of the time clock, nor hear the dreadful prayers for damnation of soul and body. They forget God, but He does not forget them. Eighteen hundred and eighty-three years ago, He sent "His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life. Neither Satan nor saloon, neither camp nor city, can keep us from Christ if we are willing to belong to Him.

Some of you know Mr. W. F. Davis, who several years ago came from the east to preach the gospel to the woodsmen in the camp, and to work for a better state of things in the cities and the towns. He is the friend and missionary of the boys in the woods. Through his efforts other men have gone out to visit the camps and to tell the story of the Savior's love.

Mr. Davis has opened a mission in East Saginaw, where woodsmen are always welcome. His wife takes charge of the work. I wish you all knew how earnestly she prays for the woodsmen. She is a friend worth having. She left her home in Boston to come here and help her husband in his labor of love. If you are in East Saginaw do not fail to call at the mission, 202 Washington avenue.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union send to you THE UNION SIGNAL and the Lever. The former is our woman's paper. From it you can see what we are doing for the cause of temperance. From time to time you will find in the columns of these papers letters addressed to you by Mr. and Mrs. Davis and other friends.

Wishing you the protection and blessing of God, I am,
Yours in the Lord, EMMA OBENAUER,

LOYAL VERMONT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One would not think that the announcement of a thank-offering to the National W. C. T. U. could awaken such varied emotions in the mind of the workers. Were the wealth of the Indies ours, how gladly would we lay them at her feet, but empty state and local treasuries, lame financial schemes (lame because no one believes in them but the originator), plans for work awaiting the silver and golden bands and belts, which would electrify the machinery into active life, look us in the face. Over our mind's tablet we had written, yea we had printed it, that a part of this collection might be made for the state, we only reserved in our thoughts a tenth part. We were led to do this from our experience the past two weeks: having presented the educational phase of our work, and seen its kind reception and its varied needs; spoken at an educational meeting in Chelsea; organized two unions, one at Cornith, another, a Y. W. C. T. U., at Cornwall; given a Bible reading Sunday afternoon at Pittsfield; speaking nine times in all, and traveling sixty miles by stage, over the Green mountains part of the way; meeting the union at Rutland for an afternoon talk; reporting the National meeting and state work; attending a co-executive meeting at Middlebury; talking over the plan's for work with the interested superintendents of the juvenile press and literature departments, and the helpful corresponding secretary; reading the many letters that rolled in upon us; planning their replies—the active and efficient recording secretary keeping us mindful that the minutes would soon claim their attention—the concise, business-like letters of the treasurer placing just the state financial condition before us, prospecting the future from the past—all of the above and a troop of other claims, showing us equally as well, the need of funds for our work, caused us to lay our patterns on our cloth with the womanly fashion of "ye olden times."

But reaching home and finding THE UNION SIGNAL with its offer extraordinary; remembering Miss Willard's inspiring address at the National convention, the circulars, report from Plumpton Union, programs, and above all the tiny, but capacious envelope of the National, which looks up so wistfully at us, we began to feel that the eyes of the whole list of revenue officials were upon us, and had somehow figured that our treasury was the Lord's and that if we put state and local one side for a time, He could replenish that also. Therefore my private envelope is now ready for the National, my Scripture text selected: were the money my own to give I might enumerate a list of objects which I am robbing of their due, but since it is God's I can trust him for more if He hath need. The sum is not large since we find a corresponding want stands over against every penny if our pennies are in circulation and not put away for safe keeping.

Loyalty to God first and to our cause next shall be the watchword which I would speed along the lines of the Vermont Union. E. G. GREENE.

A PLEASANT GOD-SPEED.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I cannot forbear expressing my surprise and admiration at sight of your crusade memorial number.

There has been during the past ten years, no event, no movement, no popular uprising, in any part of our new world, more signal or more fraught with good hope as to the near future, than this which the day you celebrate stands for. It is but the simplest statement of the fact, to say that "to the women it was an awakening and a revelator." It was both. And that it did not come about sooner is, perhaps, about as remarkable as that it came when it did. A more perfect holiday, or memorial number of any newspaper has not lately appeared.

If it be possible, as our poet Whittier puts it, "for the women of the country to save the men of it," God and all good people shall speed them in it.

Sincerely yours, SIMEON GILBERT.

"I SLEEP BUT MY HEART WAKETH."

BY ANNA HOLYOKE HOWARD.

The fire-light flickers from the burning ember,
Curtained and close I dream of days of old,
From broken sleep I start when I remember
That while I rest so warm, the poor are cold.

The wind blows fierce without. Upon the billow
The seaman struggles with the raging storm,
From cold, close wrapped, I lie upon my pillow
And pray for all without who are not warm.

Oh, Thou who once to this poor world of sorrow
Rebuke the storm and send a bright tomorrow,
Oh, help the needy, for Thy name is Love.

All that we have we owe but to Thy favor,
The earth is Thine with all its boundless store;
Impart to us from Thine own heart the savour
That we may cheer and bless hearts sad and sore.

The poor Thou leavest always to our care
And what we do for them we do for Thee.
Thou lovest them. Then be our deeds our prayer.
Who helps My loved ones doeth most for me.

WHO IS THE KING OF TERRORS?

BY S. P. B.

'Twas only the same old story that we had heard every summer every since we were old enough to read a newspaper,—an unexperienced sailor, a sudden squall, a boat capsized, a plunge into the water to rescue the drowning, a desperate struggle in the frenzied clasp of the dying, and at last the strong, brave one gone down to death in the hopeless effort to save the unaccustomed swimmer.

It was an old story, and when it appeared in the city papers next morning, it would seem to others just as like stories had seemed to us before. But to us this one was very different. This time it was "our Hal." There was another one to be sure, but we hardly thought of him, or of his mother. Our heart's were full of Hal and his mother. Our handsome boy, the pride of the village, the quickest in his studies, the most skilful in all boyish sports, the gayest laddie in all the town, yet the kindest and most thoughtful, gone forever, and gone for what? To save the life of a comrade. Yes, but that comrade was very little to us. What right had he, a young fellow, well enough for aught we knew, to come to lure our Hal on to his death? And then for an instant our thoughts were almost bitter against that pale young face upturned upon the grassy bank so near our Hal's.

But Hal's mother, who could tell her? A quiet woman, she had lived among us years, almost unknown. We had thought her sad until we noticed how her face would kindle at the sound of Hal's footstep, or the mention of his name. We knew she lived in Hal, who could go to her now? Only one amongst us had known her well and long, and she was, as we supposed, miles away, at the bedside of a sick daughter. Who could go but our minister? a good man, a gentle and kind man, but not the one to go to Hal's mother at such a time as this.

"My dear madam," he began, "may the dear Lord give you strength to bear the most terrible news that ever came to you."

"The most terrible news that ever came to me!" she repeated standing erect, every trace of color leaving her face. "The most terrible news that ever came to me!"

The good man trembled, he dared not speak in that presence. If he could have known what those words meant to her, what visions they brought before her eyes, how she was living over again that dreadful night, when long years before, the most terrible news had come to her; how she was again watching at midnight, again unlocking the door to admit what up to that moment she had never seen, an intoxicated man, and that man the one who was dearer than life to her, if the good pastor could have known all this he would have hastened to tell the simple truth.

"The most terrible news that ever came to me," she said again and again, she was lost in that fearful vision. Again she was sitting, hour after hour, holding her baby boy close to her aching heart, fearing, yet almost hoping that the deathlike stupor might prove to be some mysterious, but not dishonorable illness, although she knew in her inmost soul that it meant death to her idol, sorrow and shame to herself, and danger to her darling boy.

She had lived through that long years before. True, the fearful memories sometimes haunted her still, but time had kindly dulled the pain, and as her boy grew older and so much like what his father had been in early manhood, she had come to think of that father only as he was before that awful night, and had grown cheerful, almost happy again. But now the most terrible news that had ever come to her, could anything be worse than that?

Yes, infinitely worse. Bad enough to have had the sun that flooded her joyous youth with glorious light suddenly lose its radience in impenetrable shade, but now to have her boy—

Merciful Father, it must not be.

"The most terrible news that ever came to me," she said slowly and distinctly, and then darting forward she seized the minister's arm, as she demanded, "Where did he get it? He is not of age yet. Tell me, where did he get it?"

"Hush, child," and the blessed form of Grandma Dayton appeared in the doorway.

"Mr. Barret, she doesn't understand."

"Mary, dear, your boy has not had it. He has never touched the accursed stuff. But he is dead; died doing his duty."

"Is that true? Is that all?" she asked. "Thank God if he is only dead. He told me it was the most terrible news I had ever heard, and yet my boy is only dead."

And then with quiet tears, such as may come to happy wives and mothers when they are called to lay their loved ones away to rest, she heard the story of her boy's brave struggle and heroic death.

"Bring his friend here, too," she said, "and let his mother come." And then, as if that were the one thing needful, she added, "Tell her I know her boy is safe, for in this room six months ago he promised to 'touch not, taste not, handle not,' the intoxicating cup, and Hal said he kept his word."

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is Death," said Mr. Barret as he turned away, "and yet to how many thousands is Death shorn of all his terrors as compared with his great ally Intemperance."

Jan. 13. LESSON I. 1884.

TEXT.—James 1: 16-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only.

TIME.—A. D. 50. Claudius, Emperor of Rome.

PLACE.—Written at Jerusalem.

TEACHINGS FOR TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

1. First of all then is this assurance for us: All our Father's gifts are good gifts—good for us, riches are good for some people, and not for others. God knows. Only the other day a rich, noble-hearted Christian man asked his wife what should be her Christmas present from him. "Seventy-five dollars," was the quick reply, "with which to send Mrs. Skelton to her poor, sick boy in California." One can readily see why riches are good for such people. But some of us say, "O if I were only rich, too, how gloriously I would endow the temperance reform." Perhaps you would, but maybe the abundance out of which you could so bountifully provide for the work you love, might bankrupt the soul of your beautiful boy. God knows. It may be that it is good for our cause to be poor, to be weak now, that it may strike its roots down deep into the hearts of the common people, who are ever the ones to welcome and hear Christ gladly.

2. Doers of the word—what stress the eminently practical apostle lays on doing. John's love, Peter's impulse, Paul's faith, are all comprehended in James' doing. Love prompts, impulse starts and faith sustains doing. Without deeds, love is only empty profession; without deeds, impulse is like the ungoverned engine; without deeds, faith is dead.

If Christian people say they love the temperance cause, ask them how much they have done for it. If they say they believe in it, find out if their example, their prayers, their gifts, their votes show that they believe in it. It is so easy to deceive oneself with mere words. It is easy to delude oneself into the notion that because he likes to go and hear a fine temperance speech, he is a faithful follower of the doctrine. Test yourself at the ballot box and the contribution box before pronouncing yourself a true disciple.

3. The law of liberty—the perfect law is that which when studied in its own spirit and with gracious aids, is obeyed with such glad assent as to constitute the most perfect liberty. Such a law of liberty is given us in the New Testament regarding total abstinence—as the Church of England Temperance Society's pledge suggests when it reads:

"For my own sake, for my brother's sake, for Christ's sake, I promise to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage." There is no more joyful liberty often than in renouncing liberty.

4. As if to give us still further reason for our creed, comes stoutly home to us the concluding phrase, "to keep himself unspotted from the world." A wise little boy once quoted St. Paul's saying, "I keep my body under," as "I keep my soul on top." This rule of life would go far to keep our "unspotted from the world," the soul lifted to the very heights of being—right under the full strong rays of the Sun of Righteousness. Some people's souls are in their stomachs, like those of whom Paul said, "whose god is there belly." Drink makes willing slaves of such, and indeed of many more to whom self-indulgence is the prime necessity of life.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO RAN AWAY.

BY MRS. SUSAN T. PERRY.

"I'm going now to run away,"
Said little Sammie Greer one day.
"Then I can do just what I choose;
I'll never have to black my shoes,
Or wash my face, or comb my hair,
I'll find a place, I know, somewhere,
And never have again to fill
That old chip-basket—so I will.

"Good-bye, mamma," he said, "good-bye!"
He thought his mother then would cry;
She only said, "You going, dear?"
And didn't shed one single tear.
"There, now," said Sammie Greer, "I know
She does not care if I do go,
But Bridget does; she'll have to fill
That old chip-basket—so she will."

But Bridget only said, "Well, boy,
You off for sure? I wish you joy."
And Sammie's little sister Kate,
Who swung upon the garden gate,
Said anxiously, as he passed through:
"Tonight what ever will you do
When you can't get no 'lasses spread
At supper-time, on top of bread?"

One block from home, and Sammie Greer's
Weak little heart was full of fears;
He thought about "Red Riding-Hood,"
The wolf that met her in the wood,
The bean-stalk boy who kept so mum
When he heard the giant's "Fee, fo, fum,"
Of the dark night and the policeman,
And then poor Sammie homeward ran.

Quick through the alley-way he sped,
And crawled in through the old wood-shed.
The big chip-basket he did fill;
He blacked his shoes up with a will;
He washed his face and combed his hair;
He went up to his mother's chair
And kissed her twice, and then he said:
"I'd like some 'lasses top of bread."

WHO STOLE THE THIMBLE!

BY ROSE HARTWICK THORP.

"Pet Hopkins, I'll thank you for my thimble." The little girl spoke in an angry, commanding voice, and a dark scowl marred her usually bright face.

Pet Hopkins looked up quickly from her sewing, with a surprised wonder deepening in her blue eyes. She was plainly dressed, so plainly, in fact, that she reminded one of a little woodland violet in a garden of brilliant flowers, for the dainty misses about her were all dressed handsomely, and chattered merrily with each other, while Pet sat by herself at one side of the room, and scarcely lifted her earnest eyes from the seam she was sewing. She usually came early and took her seat before the rest arrived, remaining in her quiet little corner until her companions had all departed. Once, when Miss Alice asked her why she always remained sitting while the other children were present, she answered, while a flush crept over her sensitive face, and a mist of tears filled her eyes:

"My old dress don't look so shabby when I'm sitting down, and they can't see where my stockings are darned."

Miss Alice respected the child's desire to attract as little attention as possible after that, for her own experience had taught her the pains of poverty.

This was how the little class came to be formed: The benevolent mammas of the village discovered in Alice Hartman a worthy young lady struggling with poverty, utterly alone in the world, and without health or strength to endure hard labor. They wisely concluded that it would be kinder to provide her with easy employment than to present her with money. Upon holding a consultation they decided that she must have a sewing class of little girls, to meet for an hour every afternoon in her own tidy, little parlor. Each of the mammas present was able to contribute to the class one little pupil, and some two. When they came to discuss the matter more fully, they were amazed at the general ignorance of their children in this particular branch. The little ones could read and write quite nicely. The most of them could dance very gracefully; some of them could sing and play easy acccompaniments on the piano; but not one of them could use a thimble.

And so the class began with a dozen little girls, each carrying a tiny work-basket containing wee scissors, needle-pad, patch-work, and dainty silver thimble. Pet's mother was very poor; but was quite desirous that her little girl should learn to sew, and as she had no time to teach her, she made arrangements to do Miss Alice's washing if she would allow Pet to join the class.

When Miss Alice asked the class which finger should wear the thimble, there was an ominous silence, broken at last by a little girl timidly suggesting her thumb.

"You all have thimbles, have you not?" asked Miss Alice, and instantly half a dozen bright, new thimbles were triumphantly disclosed to view.

"Now," said Miss Alice, smiling, "you may each place your thimble on the finger where you think it will do the most service."

Then, as she glanced down the class, she asked May Anson why she placed her thimble on her little finger.

"'Cause it's most out of the way there," answered the child.

"And you, Pet, where is your thimble?"

"I haven't got any thimble to put at all," answered Pet, shrinking further back into the corner.

It was at the beginning of the third lesson, and Miss Alice was in the next room when Delia Eller spoke up sharply:

"Pet Hopkins, I'll thank you for my thimble."

Pet looked up in surprise, but as she had no idea where the young lady's thimble was, she did not hand it to her. All the girls in the room looked at Pet expectantly, some of them quite severely.

"Don't you intend to hand me my thimble, Pet Hopkins?" exclaimed Delia in a louder key, her face flushing up with anger.

"I don't know where it is," said Pet, meekly.

"She don't know where it is! Just hear the bold, little thief, girls. There she sits with my pretty silver thimble on her finger, and says she don't know where it is! You all heard her say that she hadn't a thimble, didn't you?"

"Yes, we did," answered the children, clustering about poor, bewildered Pet.

"Well," continued Delia, "if her mother had bought her one since, do you think she would have bought a silver one? Washerwomen don't have more money than they know how to spend. If you didn't steal my thimble, Pet Hopkins," she continued, "you'd just as soon I'd look at it close and see if it is like mine."

"It was mamma's when she was a little girl," faltered Pet.

"A likely story," sneered Delia. "Why didn't you bring it before? Let me see it."

"It was mislaid, and mamma just found it this morning," answered Pet, as she slipped the thimble from her finger and handed it to Delia.

"Oh, what awful stories you do tell, Pet Hopkins," said Delia, as she examined the thimble. "This is my very thimble; I know it by the little vine about it."

She calmly placed it on her finger as she spoke, and walked to her seat with a very injured air, while the other little girls clustered about her and talked very excitedly about the forlorn child in the corner.

"I think we ought to tell Miss Alice," said one, decidedly. "She ought to know what kind of girls she has in her class."

"No, said Delia, reflectively. "I'm willing to forgive her as long as I've got my thimble back."

"But she may take other thimbles."

"I guess that this lesson will be sufficient," said Delia, loud enough for Pet to hear.

When Miss Alice entered the rooms she discovered that something had occurred to disturb the children, but as none of them brought complaints to her she forebore questioning them.

Poor little Pet was obliged to sew her seam over twice that afternoon, because the tears blinded her so she could scarcely see where to put her needle.

"I wouldn't care so much, mamma," she said, as she laid her head on her mother's loving breast, and sobbed out her grief, "only it was your thimble, when you was a little girl, and I meant to be so careful of it. I wonder if it was a punishment 'cause I was so proud of having a real silver thimble, like the rest!"

When Delia reached home that night she, too, told her mother all about the lost thimble.

"It is very strange," said Mrs. Eller, when Delia had finished. "I always supposed that Pet was one of the most honest little girls in town. Let me see your thimble, Delia?"

Delia opened the work-basket, and handed the thimble to her mother.

"Why, Delia," exclaimed Mrs. Eller, the moment she had taken the thimble, "this is not your thimble. Oh, my child, what have you done? You have been the thief, after all."

"I surely thought it was mine," sobbed Delia, "'cause mine wasn't in my work-basket, and, anyhow, Pet must have stolen it, for her mother couldn't afford to get a silver thimble for her."

"My child," said Mrs. Eller, solemnly, "you have made yourself and poor little Pet a great deal of trouble by your hasty conclusion. It is just possible that you may have slipped your thimble in your pocket."

"Oh, no, I didn't," said Delia, decidedly. "I always put it in my basket."

She slipped her hand into her pocket as she spoke, and an exceedingly foolish look spread over her face as she drew forth and displayed the missing thimble.

"Oh, mamma! she sobbed, "what shall I do?"

"There is only one thing for you to do, my dear. You must take Pet's thimble to her tomorrow, and ask her forgiveness before the whole class."

"I will, mamma," answered the little girl, humbly. "Do you know, mamma, she never told Miss Alice a word about it. She just let me keep the thimble when I said it was mine and sat there, looking so sorry all the afternoon."

The next afternoon Delia told the whole story about the thimble before the class, and Miss Alice listened in great surprise.

"I stole your thimble, Pet," said Delia, standing humbly before Pet. "I am so sorry. I wish you could for give me but I don't see how you can."

And Pet without a thought of the eyes that were on her, or her shabby clothes, just put her arms around Delia's neck and the two little girls sobbed together, and though the other little girls could not have told what they were crying for, they all joined in the chorus, while Miss Alice slyly wiped her own eyes.—The Interior.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

DEAR CHILDREN:—The blessed Christmas is gone, and I hope you had the happiest time possible for even that happiest of time. One shadow dimmed the beautiful golden sunshine of the day to my thought. It was when I remembered the sadness of the drunkard's home and the want and misery of his wife and children. It was when I thought of the little innocents who not only know nothing of the delight of well-filled stockings or Christmas tree laden with beautiful gifts, but who suffer for the things they need to keep them warm, and food to make their bodies grow. A gentleman who loves children was walking along one of the principal streets of a large city not long ago, and pulling his cap down over his ears and buttoning up his overcoat tightly to keep out the keen, cold wind and gathering snow, he hurried off as if for a race, and nearly ran over a little girl not more than four years old who had fallen on the sidewalk near him. He lifted her to her feet again, and she put up her lip and was going to cry, but stopped when he spoke to her: "Whew! bare-footed, and such a day as this! Why don't you run home, sis, and put on your shoes and stockings before you freeze your toes?"

The little creature answered, "Don't dot any shoes and stotins."

"Don't got any, eh? How does that happen? Don't your father buy you any shoes and stockings?"

"O no," she answered, with a tone that meant "of course not," and in a way that summed up the whole case: "no, my papa dets drunk."

Think of it! boys and girls, and don't let the blessings of these holiday times be enjoyed selfishly, but see if you cannot comfort or help some poor little one whose papa gets "drunk." CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

52. CHARADE.

My first two letters is one of sex,—so much I do confess;
Add two more will make me brave, the gender you to guess.
My first and second alone or combined are opposite of my whole
Yet meaning the same—great, brave and bold.
My whole is a word you know so well,
The sex and meaning I leave you to tell.

DIO LEWIS AND THE "VICES".

It is greatly to be regretted when one who has done such yeoman's service in the cause of temperance as has Dr. Dio Lewis, deliberately gives aid and comfort to the friends of intemperance, for in this light we must look upon his recent lecture at Cooper Institute in New York. His utterances will not greatly injure the temperance cause directly, for men are too well aware of the evils of intemperance, and too much in earnest in their determination to do away with them, to stop to analyze them and to draw the fine distinctions which Dio Lewis has in his lecture. The theoretical stage of the temperance reform has passed, and nothing that is so far from the practical as the subdivision which he insists upon is likely to find acceptance with temperance people. For a quarter of a century law has been stumbling over the fine distinctions between "vices" and "crimes," between strong drinks and mild ones, and between license and taxation, until every one save Dio Lewis and the drinkers themselves are heartily disgusted.

But to those whose sympathies are upon the side of free indulgence, and who are waging a continual warfare with conscience and with reason in behalf of their indulgences, the lecture of Dio Lewis will be aid and comfort of a very acceptable sort. A straw from the side of temperance will be as good to them as a haystack, if under it they may hide their "vices" from the gaze of public opinion and from the law.

But are vices entirely above and beyond the law? Must men be granted complete liberty to do as they please so long as they do not murder or steal or commit flagrant adultery? This strange doctrine that vices are not subjects of law, and that society has no resource except to be eaten up and corrupted by the influences of incipient crime (for such Dio Lewis admits that vice is) will find little sympathy with sensible and reasoning people.

But even this strange doctrine recedes before the still more extreme assertion, that as men have a perfect right to indulge in any or every vice of which the heart of man can conceive, the government must permit and foster (for the second is included in the first) the public means for the indulgence of these vices. There is but one more step to be taken in this direction, and that is to insist that the saloon and the house of ill fame be put into the appropriation bill by the side of the postoffices and the harbors, and supported as towering monuments to the perfect personal liberty of the subject under our remarkable government. We may approach the ridiculous in our argument as well as Dio Lewis.

The government which cannot protect itself from the destroying influence of internal corrupting vices has no more right to exist than the one which cannot protect itself from foreign enemies. It makes little difference whether a government dies by its own hand or the weapon of a foe. Either is foul murder of all the attributes of national existence and prosperity. The public safety, which Dio Lewis declares is the sole object of law, is as good an argument against the vices of men, as against their crimes. We do not say that laws should be made to prohibit vice, but we do say that they should not recognize its public exercise as perfectly proper and legitimate where such exercise is evidently antagonistic to the public good and the public safety.

The personal liberty which Dio Lewis magnifies and makes the beginning and end of all progress and happiness, has never existed in the earth as an inherent right since God gave Adam his helpmeet. When Eve came, the personal liberty of Adam became merged into the public welfare of society as it was then constituted, and one would think that the fearful consequences attending the exercise of personal liberty by Eve, would forever deter any one from insisting upon it as a principle. Adam's plea of being tempted, though a plea of supine weakness, or of sublime love and gallantry, was a just one. Where woman's hand extends the wine cup, men's lips will sip of its destroying contents. Where fathers drink, children will follow their example. Where the strong lead, the weak will be sure to follow. And who shall say what proportion of wrong will belong to the tempter and to the tempted, in the day of final account?

But prohibition does not prohibit, claims Dr. Dio Lewis! How that old ghost of Banquo does persist in coming up! Well, suppose it does not? To avoid any ambiguity of terms we will adopt a stronger word and frankly admit that prohibition does not exterminate. Where men with law-breaking and avaricious tendencies are found in conjunction with those of overpowering appetites, the strongest prohibitory law will be, not only occasionally, but frequently, broken. And yet prohibitory law is a step, and a necessary step, to prohibition in fact.

That liquor is sold in Maine, and that in considerable quantities, we do not doubt, and yet Maine is infinitely to be preferred to New York city in this respect. The cloudy day is much to be preferred to the starless night, and if the clear light of absolute prohibition does not yet shine in Maine or Kansas, we will patiently wait until the clouds of self interest and of self deceit clear away from human minds, taking good care meanwhile that liquor dealers and their friends do not turn back the wheels of progress and plunge us again into midnight darkness.

Will Dio Lewis admit that absolute prohibition would be a final and complete solution of the question of intemperance, and one devoutly to be wished for by all patriots and philanthropists? Or does he look upon a condition where all tipplers and moderate drinkers have perfect personal liberty, while minors, drunkards and idiots are denied it, as the summit of human progress in this direction? If absolute prohibition is to be the beacon light of our hopes, then prohibitory law is a necessary step in this progress, and the sooner we get to it and through it, the better for all concerned. If the serpent is not killed at the first blow, it may be at successive ones, and it would be the height of folly to insist that it should go free because its tail wiggled and its fangs spit out venom after one blow only had been struck.

We have no quarrel to wage with our old friend Dio Lewis. But we do insist that half truths should not be enunciated as principles, and that to lower the standard of temperance work below that of ultimate prohibition, in this stage of the temperance reform, is to do the cause of temperance a grievous wrong.

THE spirit of the press toward our decennial anniversary, and its crusade memorial issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, has been kindly even to generosity. No more brotherly and appreciative notice has reached us, however, than that of the Congregationalist, from the pen of its western editor, Dr. Simeon Gilbert, late "advanced" from the western organ of Congregationalism, to the eastern "elder brother,"—the veteran religious journal of New England, and now deservedly popular in the west. Dr. Gilbert's pen is ever at the service of a good cause, and never more so than when he brings his best thought to bear in criticism on the methods of its advancement, as he is courageous enough to do whenever, in his judgment, the need requires. But in the present instance his kindness takes the form of thorough approbation. Some have thought (the Interior notably) that our beginnings were too recent, and our celebration insignificant for lack of history, but not so the Congregationalist. It says:

"The friends of temperance have not in the least exaggerated the significance of the day which marks the beginning of the temperance crusade, just ten years ago December 23. The crusade memorial day not unfitly comes just after Forefathers' Day. Without a doubt this new memorial day dates an epoch in American history.

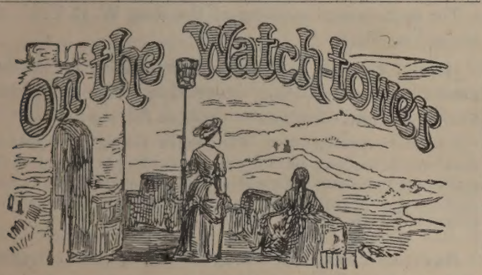
"'Ten earnest, wonderful years,' says Mrs. Bolton, without extravagance, 'that will go down in history as the dawn of a triumphant day.'

"That during this short period every state and territory in the union should already be organized for woman's temperance work is a very notable achievement, and one which suggests fresh meanings for our Christian joy. Throughout the great west, at least, there has been no distinct movement, these past ten years, half so full of significance and hope, 'for God, and home, and native land,' as this which dates its inception from that 'crusade' started in the Hillsboro' church in Ohio. And there's more to follow!"

THE congressional committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic is made up of the following gentlemen: Messrs. Hill, Bland, Kleiner, Carleton, Evins, Davis, Guenther, Goff and Campbell. Two German-Americans will represent the alcoholic beer interest. Among those who fought valiantly to secure such a committee, was senator Vance, of North Carolina. Congressman Davis, of Chicago, who has hitherto been "counted upon by the brewers, this year voted for the committee, and is placed upon it. We wait to see what for.



THE gracious mother of Dr. R. H. McDonald, lovely in character as in countenance, our temperance millionaire, is 83 years of age, and has been a consistent and continuous member of the M. E. church since she was sixteen years of age. There is probably not another woman on the Pacific coast who has been so long in the service.

* * * * *

"IT is half melted ore that will not fuse, and it is a crude public opinion that will not harmonize, but when it reaches white heat then crystallization is sure to follow, and its whole force can be counted on to complete the work of prohibition." So spake a delegate to a recent W. C. T. U. convention.

* * * * *

THAT was a blessed bit of forethought in the Y. W. C. T. U. of Effingham—only a few weeks old too—deciding to give every man and boy who had signed the pledge during Mr. Hoofstitler's very successful rescue work, an old-gold colored badge to wear as a sort of talisman, and on it, the Latin words "Ut Purviam"—That I may do good—It takes the Y. W's to think of things.

* * * * *

I am sure both editor and publisher ought to feel comforted over the crusade memorial issue. Letters of congratulation are pouring in upon them from every quarter, but what has pleased me as much as anything, is the assurance from the Rev. Dr. Eliot, chancellor of Washington University, St. Louis, that he regarded it so worthy an edition as to desire a copy for every clergyman in St. Louis, which he proceeded to order.

* * * * *

Rev. James D. Webb, of Lompoc, California, is lecturing in Oregon. He is everywhere aiding the work of the W. C. T. U., which he reports in terms of strong encouragement. He writes that Henry Villard, president of Northern Pacific R. R., gave $100 to the W. C. T. U. of The Dalles, Oregon. It seems the voters (not the people) of Oregon vote on the question of woman's ballot next June. Perhaps the example of their brave young sister, Washington Territory, may broaden their ideas of public policy.

* * * * *

AND now comes Mrs. Ellen Watson, the indefatigable, and says to THE UNION SIGNAL:

"I am sure you have been a great help to the temperance day in the week of prayer. Now can't you help THE UNION SIGNAL by persuading the executive committee that it would be a good investment to use part of the 'thank-offering' in subscribing for a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL for at least 100 important mission stations, not forgetting our 'own Alaska.' That sort of thing would do wonders in helping to organize the 'World's' W. C. T. U. and then by next year we could perhaps get a great many of our foreign missionary societies to pay for the papers."

* * * * *

Right here let me quote the action of the synodical committee of the Presbyterian church, assembled in Pittsburgh, Pa.:

"We give in the name of the synodical committee of the Presbyterian church, a hearty response in behalf of temperance, and to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union a desire that our Presbyterian women might co-operate with this noble work more universally than has been done heretofore."

A similar set of resolutions were passed at the Presbyterian society of Wellsboro, which met at Tioga, June 17, 1883. This is the attitude of the Presbyterian church in the state where Frances L. Swift, the wife of a Presbyterian pastor, holds the reins of W. C. T. U. government.

* * * * *

Alice Guernsey, always alive to "temperance in the schools" sends in a bit of unwritten history:

I caught a whisper in our state convention at Cambridgeport last week which may not reach your "watch tower" through the official report. "How shall we interest the teachers?" was asked again and again by those wide awake women who mean to have scientific temperance instruction in the schools of Massachusetts. "We are going to give a coffee party to the teachers, very soon," said a lady from one of the lovely suburban towns just out of Boston. "We shall invite them all, our three unions uniting in the invitation: then we propose to have a first-class speaker to address them,—we shall secure Dr. ——, if possible, and to have a pleasant, social time beside." Why cannot more of our unions with the "wisdom of serpents" go and do likewise?

* * * * *

It's a good while ago, but some faithful reader may remember that an editorial paragraph in THE UNION SIGNAL commended that "grace before meat" of somebody's, wherein a blessing was asked for the maid in the kitchen who had prepared the food. A discreet husband whispers in my ear that such a "blessing" might answer in some localities, or for great occasions, but would never become popular in private families, in this part of the country at least, as it would need to be pronounced with one eye on madam and the other on the female domestic, watching results, with a general view to personal safety. Out upon him!

I think I see help for Oregon in this good Sunday school of the Rev. T. L. Eliot, son of Chancellor Eliot of St. Louis, and pastor of an Oregon Unitarian church. He sends out to the homes of his Sunday school scholars this little communication and almost always finds it productive of immediate good:

Four resolutions, which (with their parent's consent) I earnestly recommend to the children of our Sunday school, to be kept until they are twenty-one years old, and then returned to me. 1. Not to use profane or indecent language under any circumstances. 2. Not to taste any intoxicating drink. 3. Not to use tobacco in any form. 4. Not to play any gambling games. I ask each one in our school to consider these resolutions, and if you think well of them, keep them, putting your name under mine if you choose, and keeping this paper too.

I hear a murmur of disapproval from those blessed Detroit women who entertained the W. C. T. U. with such bountiful lunches at the "boomings" of the convention, because—I hate to say it right under the guns of the U. S.—but because the usually faithful reporter did not give credit to other denominations than the Methodist for their furnishing. The facts are, and I know the editor will thank me for saying so, that she was up to the hour that the convention number went to press, in such a "seventh heaven" of appreciative delight that she failed to come down to the prosaic matters of eating and drinking as would have been meet (no pun intended or allowed) in this case. I have heard her say repeatedly since that she would never again trust herself in such a position without a stenographer. And now let me say that nothing could be better than the lunches, set forth by the women of the Congregational, the Presbyterian and the Baptist churches on the three last days of the convention.

ON DUTY.

Signal Notes.

IN the district bounded by the river, Sixth street, Third avenue north and Tenth avenue south, Minneapolis, reside over 10,000 people. In the same territory there are 199 saloons, twelve open houses of ill-fame and three gambling houses, and not more than half a dozen English churches.

THE state of Maine votes next September on a proposition to add a prohibitory amendment to the constitution. Several hundred town committees have been appointed to organize the movement in favor of the amendment. The temperance women have special committees. It is said that over 2,000 speeches in favor of the amendment have already been made in the state. The question will complicate matters some what in the next canvass, when a governor and other officers are to be chosen.

THE Romans under the republic were prohibitionists after a fashion. Men of honorable families were forbidden by law to drink wine before they were of thirty, or to drink to excess; while for women of any condition, free or slave, to touch wine on some solemn occasion, as a sacrifice, was an offence visited by severe penalties. Hence originated the custom of girls kissing their parents on the lips as a means of discovery whether they had been sampling the contents of the family amphoræ. But the law, as affecting women, was in time so far modified that they were permitted to drink wine made from boiled must or raisins.

SOME figures which we find in the Philadelphia Record are suggestive. According to official information furnished that paper by William J. Pollock, collector of internal revenue, more beer was made in the five Pennsylvania counties of Philadelphia, Montgomery, Bucks, Chester and Delaware, during the twelve months ending July 1, than in any previous period. The aggregate of such production reached 1,133,000 barrels, involving an expense to consumers of $23,000,000, and yielding an average of 450 glasses for each man, woman and child in the five counties—an increase over the previous year of sixty glasses per capita. Since 1876 the beer supply has increased 100 per cent. Of course it will be said at once that this enormous increase in the consumption of malt liquor has occasioned a large decrease in the use of whisky, but Mr. Pollock shows that the whisky supply has been greatly multiplied, 282,282 gallons having been distilled, representing a total of 18,384,330 drinks, costing about one-tenth as much to the consumers as the year's beer cost. By the full showing, the district named paid $34,000,000 in twelve months for its liquors, its tobacco and cigars. All of which might—better have been thrown into the Delaware.—American Reformer.

A MOST interesting meeting was held in early part of December by the W. C. T. U. of Montreal, Canada, forty members being present. The various committees reported progressive work, and the treasurer's report showed gradual increase of membership, the whole now numbering between five and six hundred. The literary committee reported that steps were being taken toward opening a repository in some central part of the city, under the auspices of the union, where people could examine and order temperance publications, "a sort of armory where people could arm themselves for the fight against this present evil." A canvasser was appointed to solicit subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL. The reports from delegates to the National convention at Detroit were full of interest and enthusiasm.

THE W. C. T. U. of Portland, Oregon, held a fair December 12 and 13, in a fine hall in a busy part of the city, which proved quite successful. The hall was decorated with great taste and beauty. Among the novel features was a well, with an old-fashioned windlass, rope and bucket attached for drawing, the whole being decked with moss, cedar and ivy, giving it a beautiful appearance. "Rebecca" presided at the well, furnishing a delicious drink. A prominent feature was the motto over the rostrum, Zachariah 4: 6, last clause. The two Bands of Hope were represented by their beautiful banners, and Mrs. Hayes' picture was given an honored place. An ice-cream booth, plant and flower stand, with rare luncheon at noon and evening refreshment, were all managed delightfully, and the zeal and large attendance of the workers insured deserved success.

CRUSADE CELEBRATIONS.

Atlantic, Iowa.—The W. C. T. U. was fortunate in securing Miss Kimball to aid them in celebrating the crusade anniversary and the following are some extracts from her address:

"The crusade has transmitted divine love and pity and tenderness into human life and action.

"I believe that the women who knelt on the sanded floor of saloons and amid the rude crowds on the streets were as truly inspired and upborne as were the martyrs of old on the torturing rack or wrapped in the devouring flames.

"This new departure knows the crusade had for its watchword, prayer; for its remedy, Christ, and multitudes of redeemed souls, during these past ten years, have arisen from their loathsome graves of intemperance and all manner of sin, as a testimony that it was born of God.

"Does any one say it was ephemeral, a meteor, a flash? Nay, verily! the crusade was never so truly alive as on this tenth anniversary.

"The peculiar form of manifestation passed away, as in the nature of things it must, but its spirit crystallized into a mighty power, whose influence is world wide. The praying bands, intense, intrepid, inspired, have become the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, steadfast, patient, far-reaching in purpose and plan. We might almost say there is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard.

"After the crusade came the blessed gospel temperance work of reform, and it still goes on and must ever go on. So long as the nation legalizes the drink traffic, so long must a helping hand be stretched out to its victims. But we have learned that an army can never hope for victory that spends the chief part of its time on the wounded, leaving its soldiers untrained, and therefore an easy prey, filling the ghastly ranks of the conquered.

"Not from lack of sympathy with, or pity for the drunkard, but because of it, because we have learned something of the awful bondage of the drink habit, do we plead for such education of our children and young people as shall prevent their becoming entangled therein.

"If the recognition of childhood is the thermometer of a nation's progress, may it not be as truly that of any effort for the permanent uplifting and betterment of humanity? Tried by this test we can claim for our society and the Christian churches, whose co-operation we we seek, a great and blessed advance during the past few years.

"The wish to secure righteous law is germane to the spirit of the crusade, and its prophecy will be fulfilled when we have a national prohibitory law, and such education as will insure its enforcement. Let us ever remember that the battle is not ours, but God's; and that of our Leader it was said ages before He was manifest in the flesh, 'He shall not fail nor be discouraged till He have set judgment in the earth.'"

Cincinnati, Ohio.—A beautiful program was carried out by the W. C. T. U. at Smith & Nixon's Music Hall, beginning at 3:30 p. m. with a praise service, after which followed the distribution of the Amendment Herald and The Union Signal, and singing of "Glory to God in the highest." The sketch of the crusade was given by Mrs. L. A. McKenzie, the address by Mrs. Chas. Ferguson, and "Reminiscences, by crusaders." Interspersed were hymns used in crusade, accompanied by organ, grand piano, cornet and a full chorus of voices, also other fine music was given. An interesting feature was the reception of thank-offerings. The crusaders were honored with seats on the platform. Exercises closed with the temperance doxology.

Girard, Ill.—The W. C. T. U. arranged a good program and had it well advertised in the town paper. Though the evening was unpropitious a fair audience assembled in the Christian church, the majority being boys and young men. The program consisted of a praise service with an added song by the Band of Hope, the following out of the plan sent from headquarters, adding to the "sketch of the crusade," the reading of Sarah K. Bolton's article, "The History of Ten Years," from The Union Signal. The pastors of the Baptist and Methodist churches gave earnest talks, followed by a prominent member of the Christian church. The exercises closed with a collection, the distribution of copies of the memorial number of The Union Signal, and the benediction.

Carlinville, Ill.—The W. C. T. U. concentrated effort in a gospel meeting. Had it well advertised, and decorated the hall with suitable mottoes and flags. The leader used the program sent out from national headquarters, except in substituting a report of the local union, instead of a stated address, as by a happy coincidence the day happened also to be the third anniversary of the organization of the local society. Following this came a praise service, participated in by the women of the union, reformed men, and ministers. One hundred copies of The Union Signal were distributed and a collection was taken for the national society.

St. Paul, Minn.—Service was held in the Central Presbyterian church December 23, and an earnest and impressive sermon was given by the Rev. Mr. M'Laren. He urged upon the women that they require as high a standard of moral character for men as men require of them, also the recognition of Christ in all their temperance work, and that they take up some particular branch of work in memory of the crusade, pushing it with sacred zeal.

Galva, Ill.—The crusade meeting was a success. The W. C. T. U. raised $70.78 for national and state work, and obtained sixteen subscribers to The Union Signal.

MICHIGAN

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING OF MICHIGAN W. C. T. U.

This meeting was held at Jackson, Dec. 4, 5, and 6. Morning and afternoon sessions were held in the hall of the Jackson W. C. T. U., evening sessions in the parlors of Mrs. M. T. Lathrap, and a public meeting on Thursday evening in the First M. E. church. On Tuesday evening a short business session was held, occupied chiefly with reports, followed by a social re-union with choice refreshments provided by Mrs. Lathrap.

On Wednesday afternoon and Thursday forenoon and afternoon every member of the committee was present.

The program sent out from the national headquarters relating to the observance of Decennial Day, was heartily approved of by the committee and the observance of the anniversary urged upon all the unions of the state. The cause of The Union Signal was ably presented and Mrs. Lathrap exhibited a book containing blank certificates for stock holders, stating that the proposition was to ask each district to take one share at least, at $25, the hope being that in all the twenty shares for Michigan might be taken. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse this action of our state president, and pledge ourselves to aid in securing stock to The Union Signal.

It was decided that one hundred copies of The Union Signal and one hundred copies of the Lever be sent each week into the pine woods, from the first week in December to the last week of March; these papers to be disposed of by Wm. T. Davis and Rev. C. W. Bennett, lumbermen's missionaries. Each local union was urged to send at least one dollar to the district president for this purpose, before January 1, 1884.

Mrs. Kellogg, superintendent of department of hygiene, suggested a plan for a normal institute to be held at Battle Creek, at which instruction should be given in the principles of hygiene and heredity.

An earnest impetus was given to the work in all the departments.

Mrs. Helen M. Davidson, of Port Huron, was appointed superintendent of relative statistics, Mrs. Hudson having been unable to accept that office. Mrs. C. J. Hood, of Big Rapids, was appointed superintendent of the flower mission. A letter was read from the financial secretary, who is suffering from ill health. She expects to resume work after the holidays, and engagements can be made with her. Mrs. Geddes, Mrs. Benjamin and Mrs. Lathrap were appointed a committee to consider the whole question of headquarters and report hereafter.

Any district with five hundred paying members is represented in the national convention by its president. Any district with one thousand paying members would be entitled to two national delegates. The fractional or surplus dues from these districts added to the dues of districts having less than five hundred members entitles the state to a certain number of votes. It was decided that for the coming year, these votes shall be given to those districts which have less than five hundred members, in the order of their membership, that is, first to the district having the greatest number of members less than five hundred, and so on, until the delegation is full.

A good audience assembled at the church; the music by the church choir was excellent and most inspiring. Mrs. Lathrap introduced the members of the board, one after another, telling who they were from a Christian and temperance point of view. Their speeches were varied, but full of crusade memories. It was a most fitting service to close the executive committee meeting, bringing all hearts nearer to each other and to the Master. The people gave a good collection, a large number of ladies by a rising vote, pledged themselves to aid the temperance union, and forty-four names were placed upon the cards of enrollment, as members of the Jackson union.

The next annual meeting of the state W. C. T. U. will be held in Flint.

Heretofore every local union was entitled to two delegates in the annual state convention. The constitution has been amended and now reads as follows:

Representation.—Article 6. Every union having twenty, or less than twenty, paying members, shall be entitled to one voting delegate in the annual state convention. Every union having a greater number, shall be entitled to one voting delegate for each additional twenty members.

Battle Creek.—Realizing that the subjects of hygiene and heredity are two of the most important links in our chain of temperance work, the ladies of the Battle Creek Union have recently organized a physiological club for young ladies, for the especial purpose of studying these subjects as thoroughly as possible. This is in conformity with the plans of both the national superintendents of heredity and hygiene, both advising the formation of clubs or institutes as branches of the W. C. T. U., for the dissemination of a knowledge of hygiene and heredity among the young ladies, the future mothers of our race. Thinking perhaps others who contemplate carrying out the same plans may find our experience of value, we will briefly tell you how we brought about our organization. First, a committee of ladies waited upon the different ministers, physicians and sanitarians of our city, and explained our purpose and enlisted their interest and co-operation in our behalf and invited them to attend our first meeting and express their sentiments respecting our undertaking. A program of lessons was arranged, including those subjects specified by the superintendents of hygiene and heredity, and arrangements made with different physicians and teachers of our schools to present these lessons in as simple and attractive a manner as possible. Some of the physicians consented to take charge of several lessons, and nearly all agreed to assist in some way. Ladies of the union, also, were assigned subjects to study up and present before the club.

Having thus fortified ourselves and advertised our meeting through the city papers and announcements from the different church pulpits the previous Sunday, we were prepared for the genuine enthusiasm and interest manifested by those present at our first meeting. The object of the meeting was presented and endorsed most heartily by the ministers and physicians, some of whom accepted our invitation to be present. An organization was effected, officers elected, and arrangements made to meet once a week for the lessons.

A large audience greeted the first speaker at our club, whose subject was biology, and who illustrated with blackboard and stereopticon his lesson on the science of life in general. The club with note book and pencil jotted down the principal points ready for the "quiz" by the president at the next meeting.

The work promises to be one of enjoyment as well as profit, and we are sure our sister unions will find such an organization an excellent help in their work in the departments of hygiene and heredity, and we doubt not the interest of its members will extend to other branches of the temperance work. A Member of the Club.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS, BY R. P. PENFIELD.

FLORENCE:—Has a well organized juvenile association, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The prohibition sentiment is very strong. Mrs. J. T. Ellis spent a Sabbath at this place, addressing the W. C. T. Union in the Baptist church on Saturday evening, and at the town hall she spoke to the children on Sabbath afternoon; in the evening gave to the union meeting of the "township alliance," an intensely practical speech. We shall be glad to see her here again.

FLEMINGTON.—This stronghold of the rum-power has at last been shaken from center to circumference. One thousand have signed the pledge, a Reform Club and a W. C. T. Union have been organized. This is the home of our state corresponding secretary, where she and others have prayed and toiled so long. A juvenile society was organized several years ago by Mrs. Ellis, and now through the labors of Messrs. English and Maybee, the entire community, nearly, have been aroused to action. The largest building in the place was secured, which was packed, and toward the close even standing room was not obtainable. This movement has commanded the sympathy and assistance of the clergy, and a select choir of four furnished excellent music. Mrs. J. T. Ellis has also given several short, effective addresses. So great was the interest that on the last evening stores and offices were closed at 7 o'clock, to give clerks, employes and employers an opportunity to attend the meetings. The Reform Club and cornet band met at the M. E. Church, where a scene of grand enthusiasm took place; the vast audience arose in their seats, and for five minutes a sea of handkerchiefs waved from the body of the church and the galleries. Every heart seemed to say, "God bless the Flemington Reform Club!" Then followed a stirring program, including a resolution of the most hearty endorsement of the labors of these noble workers, which was unanimously adopted, and the presentation, on the part of the Reform Club, of a purse of $118.75 to Messrs. English and Maybee, and one of $26.00 from the W. C. T. U., with appropriate responses from these gentlemen. Thanks were also unanimously offered to all who had aided in this grand movement. The officers of the W. C. T. U. are as follows: President, Miss Sarah Hopewell; vice presidents, Mrs. W. H. Fulper and Miss Martha Kuhl; corresponding secretary, Mrs. John A. Bullock; recording secretary, Miss Minnie Ellis; treasurer, Miss Julia Higgins.

MINNESOTA.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Miss Kimball spent Sunday, Dec. 16, with us, and in one evening aided our young woman's work in such a wonderful way that I felt a statement of results might encourage other Y. W. C. T. Unions.

How did she happen to come to us for only one lecture? Because she loves the work, had organized our union, and at the time of organization recommended the taking up of kitchen garden work and calling Miss McClees to instruct us, when she hoped Chicago would have a class and divide expenses; but Chicago failed to be ready for Miss McClees, so the expenses incurred in the St. Paul and Minneapolis Unions was more than expected, and Miss Kimball offered to give to St. Paul and Minneapolis the first two evenings she had unocupied to meet the extra expense, speaking free of charge and paying her own expenses. We had secured the largest church in the city for her Sabbath evening lecture, and at the hour appointed a large and eager audience awaited the speaker, and for an hour she held the undivided attention of all, and when our collection was counted it was found to amount to $76.54. To other unions I would say, "Go and do likewise."

Our work as a union is prospering. Have rented a store for our use at $40 per month, have two sessions each week for the charity kitchen garden, and one session for the pay class. After the holidays hope to open an evening school for boys. LYDIA P. WILLIAMS,

Pres. Y. W. C. T. U. Minneapolis.

TEXAS.

STATE W. C. T. U. WORK.

Miss Willard's visit to us was certainly opportune. Surely heaven directed her call to us for a state convention. Under the efficient leadership of our state president the W. C. T. U. is rapidly gaining strength. I send a list of the Texas officers: President, Mrs. J. B. Beauchamp, Denton; vice presidents, Mrs. Dr. Rutherford, Houston; Mrs. Ira Evans, Palastine; Mrs. Jere Ward, Marshall; Mrs. John Martin, Paris; Mrs. E. J. Sanbourne, Sherman; Miss Nettie Hess, Fort Worth; Mrs. J. G. Templeton, Corsicana; Miss Nettie B. Stone, Galveston; Mrs. J. J. Preston, Austin; Mrs. R. Robinson, San Antonio; Mrs. J. B. Chancey, Weatherford; organizer, Mrs. M. S. Hathaway, Paris; recording secretary, Mrs. C. H. Harvey, Denison; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, Paris; treasurer and assistant secretary, Mrs. Ellen Robinson, Paris.

ILLINOIS.

MACOUPIN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. county convention met at the Presbyterian church, Virden, Dec. 5, 1883, at 1:30 o'clock, opening with devotional exercises.

Miss Ellen Squires was appointed secretary. The usual committees were appointed. Reports from local unions followed.

Mrs. Alice Boulter reported for Brighton. They have a successful union with twenty-four paying members and six honorary members.

Mrs. Peebles, of Chesterfield, reports a membership of twenty-four, with a Band of Hope numbering sixty. They hold their meetings weekly and are doing good work.

Dr. Corr gave a report from the Carlinville union. This is the largest union in the county, numbering ninety-two. Carlinville is one of the two places in the state that carry on weekly gospel temperance meetings.

Mrs. Gay reported the Girard Union with a membership of thirty. They have been organized about three years.

Mrs. Steed, of Medora, gave a report from the youngest union in the county. It was organized in October with a membership of eighteen and eight honorary members.

Mrs. Brown, of Plainview, reported that their union was organized in July with eighteen members. They also have a Band of Hope of thirty members.

Mrs. Boulter read a report from the secretary of the Piasa Union. They have fifteen members, and a Band of Hope numbering twenty-five.

Mrs. Wilcox reported the Shipman Union. They have a membership of eighteen, and a Band of Hope numbering about seventy-five or eighty; fourteen copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, are taken in the town.

The secretary of Virden Union reported forty-nine paying members, and a Band of Hope numbering one hundred and twenty-five.

A telegram of greeting was received by the president from the Good Templars' convention, in session in Shipman. Mrs. Boulter was appointed to reply, and the following dispatch was sent:

Mr. L. H. CHAPIN, Shipman, Ill. To the Good Templars convention:—Greeting. Read 1st Corinthians, 16th chapter and 13th verse. MRS. EVA WILCOX.
County President, W. C. T. U.

The enrollment committee reported sixteen delegates, and five visitors present. Adjourned until 7 p. m.

The exercises of the evening opened with a song by the Band of Hope. As they marched in so bright, brave and true, all felt that King Alcohol had reason to tremble; that his overthrow in the near future was certain. A fine selection was given by the choir, and prayer offered by the Rev. Mr. Sage. Mrs. Duncklee, of Virden, gave the address of welcome, to which Dr. Corr, of Carlinville, responded in her usual happy manner.

The address of the evening was given by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, of Evanston. After words af cheer to the Band of Hope boys and girls, Mrs. Willard presented the subject of "Home Protection."

A solo and chorus followed, during which enrolling tablets were circulated by four ladies appointed by the chair.

Mrs. Nutting, of Carlinville, followed with an original poem—a story of the crusade, which was so highly appreciated that it was requested for publication in the memorial issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

After the collection Miss Minnie Sage gave a fine solo, and the audience was dismissed with the temperance doxology, and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Fortune.

The convention met at the Presbyterian church at 9 a. m. Devotional exercises by Mrs. E. V. Long.

Notes from the national convention were presented by Mrs. Alice Boulter, who said there was a W. C. T. U. in every state and territory, and our prairie state leads off in numbers. She also stated that the second Tuesday in January was set apart as a day of prayer in behalf of our work. A vote of thanks was given Mrs. Boulter for her interesting and instructive notes.

Mrs. Lawson, of Carlinville, presented the subject of juvenile work, as did also Mrs. Nutter, of Brighton, and an interesting discussion followed.

Miss Ruby Gilbert spoke on the subject of finance. She stated that the state officers asked for $300 from this district, composed of six counties. The president asked what Macoupin with her ten unions would do in this matter? On motion Macoupen pledged herself for $180. Miss M. Brown pledged $20 for the Girard Union. The Virden Union also pledged $20 and called a meeting of their members and paid $10 of the amount. On motion the president was authorized to appoint a financial secretary.

At the afternoon session a paper on "Our work: its relation to the church," was read by Mrs. V. Harbert, of Chesterfield. Discussion followed.

Many interesting questions were taken from the "question box" and answered.

The committee on resolutions and plan of work presented their report which was adopted. This comprises acknowledgement of the guidance of God; a resolution to stand firm in the principles and policy of prohibition in national and state government laboring to extend the franchise to women as a sure means of attaining to that end; as local unions endeavoring to extend influence by holding temperance meetings in neighboring churches and school districts, and forming new societies wherever practicable; urging the same high standard of morals for boys as for girls; and closing with suitable resolutions of thanks to all who had aided in making the convention a success.

Mrs. Willard made some remarks relative to THE UNION SIGNAL gospel work. Consecration service was conducted by Mrs. Nutting, of Carlinville, and it was a blessed service to many.

The convention closed by singing "Shall we meet beyond the river?"

Benediction by Rev. Mr. Morrill.

OGLE COUNTY W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

December 13 and 14 Stillman Valley opened her hospitable doors for the entertainment of this convention. Miss Addie Goodrich, the district president, Mrs. Mary E. Babcock, Captain Linscott, and some Rockford ladies were the only visitors from out of the county. The meetings, morning, afternoon and evenings, were well attended by an appreciative audience. Various topics were discussed, the most important being the financial plan, the cider question and temperance literature. An address by Mrs. Babcock, Thursday evening, interested all, and Captain Linscott, in his lecture Friday evening, was so well liked that he was invited to deliver another lecture in a few days.

But a novel feature for conventions were the two reports given of two Bands of Hope from New Milford. Freddie Foley and Harry Bicket, boys of thirteen or fourteen, came and reported the work done by their respective Bands. These were the best prepared reports given during the convention, and would afford excellent patterns for their elders.

Band of Hope work and scientific instruction in the schools came in for their share of discussion, and all united in pronouncing the convention a success.

CATHARINE G. WAUGH, District Sec.

COLFAX.—Our little town has been blessed recently with the efforts of Mrs. Lucy Simpson, of Detroit, Michigan, who delivered five interesting lectures in her truly earnest Christian manner. Under her supervision we organized a W. C. T. U. with a membership of fifteen persons who seem truly in earnest in this new work. The following are our officers for the year: President, Mrs. Dr. Douglas; vice presidents, Mrs. H. Anderson, Mrs. J. Pewitt, Mrs. Dr. Green; corresponding and recording secretary, Mrs. E. B. Rogers; treasurer, Mrs. Major Brown.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Extracts from the Report on Unfermented Communion Wine at the Pennsylvania State Convention, by Mrs. E. D. C. Mair, Superintendent:

"We thankfully perceive the added love and care which is superintending this precious, emblematic feast, and gratefully note the increasing number of those who annually substitute the pure fruit of the vine for the desolating cup of previous usage.

"More than two hundred cards of inquiry have been sent asking for information regarding this special practice. To these many replies have been received; most of them giving not only the desired satisfaction, but also breathing a deep and tender interest, indicating personal care and preparation in this work for the Master. In Mercer county, which has received more systematic attention, and is more fully reported than any other, we find out of 128 churches 82 are using unfermented wine for sacramental purposes. Under such faithful supervision, doubtless the number will, with extending light and knowledge, soon embrace nearly all the communion tables within its precincts.

"One sister writes that 'she prepares the wine and spreads the table of the Lord with her own hands.' Another says 'this whole decision greatly rests with the individual who has charge of procuring the wine.' One reports 'the German element most indifferent;' and another remarks, 'our ministers need information.' In one town 'all the churches use unfermented wine, all the ministers are temperance men and temperance workers!' I also read that 'some of the churches have used unfermented wine, and found it unpalatable, and so have abandoned the attempt!' One lady gives the account of a young Christian whose father had died from intemperance, who solemnly came to his mother after partaking with her at the table of the Lord, saying, 'Mother, I, too, shall be a drunkard if I go to the communion.' The writer judiciously adds, 'The latent heat, heredity, was taking flame from the communion sparks.' A minister replied to an inquiring sister, 'When I am sure that any soul has been endangered by the use of fermented wine at the sacrament, then I will adopt the other.' Several among the clergy had never heard of unfermented wine, therefore could not be expected to obtain it.'

"Thus we see how heavily the responsibility grows upon us, and how plainly the dear Father manifests His will for us to demonstrate the need for this great change. In no other department of our work is womanly conviction more deeply felt, or her influence more unbounded. Whenever she gives patient thought on this subject her heart is convinced, her own church soon stands purified in its practice, and gradually her holy power extends through her neighborhood, until each church is impressed within her limits.

"In almost half the churches reported throughout the state, we find the substitution adopted; yet doubtless in sections where no effort is made, the proportion is sadly smaller. Now, while we find more and more of our women presenting the pure juice of the grape upon the altars of their Lord, and He writes the acceptable service in his book of remembrance, yet might, and ought, there not to be a wider and more thorough attention to this sacred charge? May not every union appoint its committee for this distinct department, selecting women whose thought and convictions are clear, and who are willing to present the truth prayerfully, gently, yet persistently, to the wives of the elders, to the elders themselves, to the ministers, to sessions and conferences, according to opportunity? 'How any church can conscientiously object to an innovation so manifestly in the interests of religion and morality, we cannot understand; and as the guardian of public morals we should take the lead in extirpating all forms of this great evil.' But we constantly see congregations and their pastors who have given no thought to this view of the truth, and who need its full presentation to their minds and hearts. The lives of so many Christians and ministers have been so exempt from contact with the sin of intemperance as to make them utterly unconscious of the danger which arises from even the slightest use of alcohol. It, therefore, rests upon us, to whom has been more fully revealed the weakness and hopeless despair which the dread habit brings upon souls, to protest in the spirit of Christ against offering the temptation to those who have no power to resist. Ought we not, as the chosen daughters of our Immanuel, more entirely to lay aside every weight, and yielding each detail of daily life into the hands of Him who is able to keep all we commit, beseech the Captain of our salvation to gird anew the armor which He has put upon us; 'and looking unto Jesus,' will we not be instant in season and out of season, always abounding in this work of the Lord?

"Do not these annual meetings, with some dear missing faces, give us thrilling warning of the shortness of our own time, and bid us do quickly whatever He brings to our hands? And does not all else sink into nothingness, compared with being his instruments in the help or salvation of one poor soul? Will we not, then, dear sisters, each one go to our homes with more loving worship toward our adorable Redeemer, with more tender pity toward those who are struggling with sin, and a fuller consecration toward the glorious work which he has entrusted to us, striving with whole hearts to make each communion a true passover, where the angel of eternal life, seeing only the precious blood, shall hover on soft, snowy wing, bearing all strengthened souls nearer to the throne of God?"

KANSAS.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT IN KANSAS?

In country towns, yes! in cities, no! not as yet. But the majesty of the law has a wonderful influence on the side of prohibition, and I went the whole length of the state from north to south, and never saw a single person intoxicated.

Kansas is truly the garden of the United States. The population is increasing rapidly, property advancing in value, and only one place there where the population has decreased since the enactment of the prohibitory law—that place the penitentiary.

A fine audience greeted me in Kansas City, and at the request of the women, I organized a W. C. T. U. Old friends from Cooperstown, N. Y., greeted me, and the lady who was chosen president of the union hailed from my birthplace, and I felt at home at once in this western city. In Lawrence I visited the State University and the Indian school building, and rejoiced that our country has decided at last to do something for the education of Indian children. SARAH M. PERKINS.

CARBONDALE.—The Osage county prohibitory union held a convention in this city December 11. The three sessions were largely attended, delegates being present from all parts of the county. So far the efforts of this union have been very successful, and the indications are that the saloons will be closed by January 1, the saloon keepers having voted to close December 26. The temperance people, however, will not relax their efforts, and seem determined to continue their organization until every saloon in the county is permanently closed.

WELLINGTON.—Our W. C. T. U. are devoting their energies to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, and had a mass meeting early in October last, at which was pledged the necessary funds to prosecute the violators of the law. If the voters of Kansas can be reached by enforcing the prohibitory as well as any other law, our school-houses and churches will flourish, and our police stations be deserted. C. E. LARNED.

MASSACHUSETTS.

TAUNTON.—Prohibition has ruled here since May last, derided by its enemies and faint friends; still though such a mere farce, a powerful and successful effort has been made to overthrow it, the city voting strongly for license, the liquor dealers voting for the ex-temperance mayor because he was one who would execute the law whatever it might be, which plainly indicates that there has been some execution of law. Rum has doubtless been sold, under difficulties, but much less than when an open and legitimate business, and if a firm hand could have been held another year it would have become "small by degrees and beautifully less."

We have had fine speakers, Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. McLaughlin, and bright stars from the west, still the backward step has been taken. But we are not discouraged for we remember there was more than one Bull Run, but Richmond was taken.

The W. C. T. U. are working diligently; have changed their monthly entertainment to a temperance school. They send for lecturers, circulate petitions, and meet twice a month for prayer and consultation; and devise various means to defray expenses. One of their earnest and faithful workers, Mrs. Hubbard, has been called by death to a higher field of labor, but her memory will still bless the cause so dear to her heart. A. L.

News in a Nutshell.

A W. C. T. U. of ninety members was organized at Whitesboro, Texas, December 16, with bright prospects for usefulness. Mrs. March is the president, and Mrs. White the corresponding secretary.

A W. C. T. U. was organized Dec. 23, at Carmel, N. Y., with thirty-three members. President, Miss Martha Barnes; secretary, Miss Julia R. Livingstone; treasurer, Mrs. Quick. Carmel is enthusiastic in regard to the temperance question.

AT Helena, Montana, a union temperance meeting is held once a month in the churches, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The society is also looking out for a suitable place on Maine street in which to establish a temperance reading and coffee room.

THE ladies of the Louisville, Ky., W. C. T. U., have just closed a most attractive entertainment in the form of a "Paper fair," which was highly remunerative, They also served lunch in connection with the fair, and realized a nice sum from this source.

The Montana Christian Advocate comes clad in garments of beauty, and we hail it as a fearless and strong champion of the truth in every form in that new field of labor, where men can know the blessedness of helping to "lay the foundations" for the future grandeur of a noble state.

THE W. C. T. U. of Springfield, Illinois, under the leadership of Mrs. G. C. Smith, arranged for an entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, for the evenings of December 18, 19, and 20, consisting of representations of ancient characters and custumes, foreign groups, royal and national characters, and various other ingenious exhibitions both of olden and modern times, involving an immense amount of preparation, but winning corresponding success.

"BRITONS," said President Cotton, "spend annually £140,000,000 or $700,000,000 in drink, an average of $19 for each Englishman." Germany has 11,800 breweries which turn out 846,000, 000 gallons of beer. America spends $900,000,000 annually for rum and tobacco. The money wasted in drink in England, Germany, and America would buy all the bread and meat eaten by the three nations. This awful burden compels twice the amount of labor in the world. This drink burden makes two-thirds of our sickness and three-fourths of our crime.

THE crusade anniversary was celebrated at Bristol, Conn., in the Good Templar's hall, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The meeting was well attended, Rev. Mr. Staats, in his address, gave the women the credit of the prevailing temperance sentiment of the town, in view of their courage and persistence in keeping up their organization and work for years in the face of many discouragements and difficulties. We note that the Bristol Press quotes in full "The History of Ten Years," by Sarah K. Bolton, which appeared in the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL, but without giving credit to the latter.

MISS NELLIE ARTHUR, the president's daughter, is president of the Washington "Children's Christmas Club," an organization composed of young people connected with the Washington Sunday schools, who provided a mammoth Christmas tree and a dinner for poor children. This idea, which originated last year with a lady in Portland, Maine, and is described in the Christmas number of St. Nicholas, has been cordially taken up all over the country, and many similar clubs are forming. Not only will thousands of poor children be made happy, but the blessedness of giving will first be felt by many others who have only known, so far, the half pleasures of receiving.

A YEAR ago in November, at Lewiston, Idaho, a woman's society was organized, arranging to meet once a week, taking for each week a different subject for study. In April a regular union was formed. When warm weather came they obtained a vacant, shady square, and under the blue sky and green trees, held a series of out-door temperance services every alternate Sabbath afternoon. Many difficulties attend the work in Idaho. The country is sparsely settled; one of its counties is said to contain but one white woman and she is the W. C. T. U. president; another county has but two villages where work can be done, yet the whisky barrel is the first article of merchandise brought into any new place.

STATE AND COUNTY FAIRS.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—I have sent cards to all superintendents in this department, asking how many circulars they will need for their state work, if they wish to use mine instead of issuing a special one of their own. I have received so few replies as yet, that I have not felt justified in having the new circulars printed.

Last year I labored under great difficulty in regard to this matter. I had no idea how many circulars would be needed, and toward the latter part of the season found my supply so short that I was unable to fill all orders that came. The time has arrived for workers in this department to begin practical work. Agricultural boards will begin to meet and arrange the business of the coming season, in January. If there is to be any effective work accomplished, we must begin now.

The circulars containing suggestions, instructions, and details for work, ought to be in every county and local union, by the middle of January. Will you not send in your orders, giving the number of unions in your state, immediately?

I would also be glad to receive any practical suggestions that you consider of value, that I may use them in the general circular. In those states and territories where there are no superintendents, I hope the presidents of such will either appoint one as soon as possible, or attend to the work of this department themselves.

If reports are to be secured from counties, now is the time to begin work in them, and not wait until the rush of the season is upon us, when it is impossible to do any preparatory work. Yours, J. R. NICHOLS.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

To Gen. John A. Reynolds, Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic: and the Veterans of New York.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, representing the daughters of America, being organized in fifty states and territories, is endeavoring to rescue her sons from the worst foe that has ever invaded her soil.

In this benevolent work it is a most gratifying and encouraging fact that our brothers, whether civilians or soldiers, are equally interested, for all good and true men and women have pulses beating in unison with sad and suffering hearts.

We have noticed with grateful pride the patriotic zeal which has actuated your large organization, in perpetuating from year to year, the memory of valorous deeds which wrought out the salvation of our union.

Your moral courage, too, in times of threatened danger from that "enemy which steals away the brains," and lays low many of our fairest heroes of the battle-field, is worthy of our recognition.

We would give our tribute of praise for the action of your authorities at Denver last summer, in forbidding the sale of intoxicating beverages within certain limits of the encampment of the G. A. R. And now our Empire state calls its sons from three hundred and fifty camp-fires to a council of peace.

The veterans diminishing in numbers, but united in patriotism, will begin a new year with a tolling bell which counts out some fellow-comrades who have gone "to encamp on eternity's plains" since last you met together.

Perhaps some have gone down to dishonored graves by reason of the destroyer, alcohol, who reaps his victims from all classes and conditions, even choosing the fairest and noblest who have walked by our sides.

Kindly, respectfully, yet urgently, your sisters of an organization each day strengthening itself by new recruits from the young women of the band, ask that your committee of arrangements will require a prohibition of the traffic in intoxicants within and about your encampment, during the coming assembly in Rochester. It is during seasons of relaxation and hilarity that the temptation to indulgence is hardest to resist, but our "Boys in Blue" are loyal to command. They will respect authority; they will obey the laws which they have put upon themselves, as free and self-respecting men, willing even to deny themselves of what they may regard a harmless luxury, for the sake of some noble comrade who has not the virtue of restraint.

They will practice total abstinence in sympathy with wives, mothers, and sisters left behind as home guards, who, perchance, have trembled to see the warrior don his military garb lest he return to the fireside covered with shame, rather than glory; with prostrate, not erect form; conquered by a treacherous enemy, who by traitorous deceit had won the victory over his strong manhood.

We present this appeal to each post in the state of New York, hoping that immediate action will be taken, and the results forwarded to the committee of arrangements in time to carry out the wishes of the majority.

Respectfully submitted,
S. A. MCCLERS, Nat. Supt. Soldiers and Sailors.
E. H. GRIFFITH, Cor. Sec.
Yonkers, December 10, 1883.

N. B. Each post is requested to report its action on the subject to the superintendent.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator, of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

BASIS OF NATIONAL LIFE.

To secure this, and maintain all existing Christian features of the American government, is the object of the National Reform Association, an organization undenominational in character, with a membership of many thousands, including leading ministers, educators, authors and jurists all over our nation. The Christian Statesman, a large, elegantly printed, sixteen page journal, advocates the principles of this Association, and discusses all public questions in the light of the Christian religion. The Maintenance of our Sabbath Laws, and of the Christian Law of Marriage and Divorce, the use of the Bible in the Public Schools, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, the Mormon Question, the Rights of the Indian and the Chinaman receive constant attention in its columns. It gives thorough expositions of the International Bible Lessons, and their bearing on national questions is not overlooked. Price, $2.00 per year.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOLUME X. CHICAGO, JANUARY 10, 1884. NUMBER 2.

OUR Canadian sisters have the spirit of the World's W. C. T. U. News items from over the border report that in Prescott (Ontario) our crusade anniversary was pleasantly celebrated, and that the Montreal W. C. T. U. has its superintendent of UNION SIGNAL work just as if "stars and stripes" wave over all of us.

THE Ohio W. C. T. U. is again at the fore, asking the re-submission of the prohibitory amendment by this year's legislature, also the passage of a bill providing for compulsory temperance teaching. The politicians are giving these good generals the credit of precipitating the temperance question into politics, as the leading local issue of the next campaign. Ohio is thus made the battlefield of the opposing doctrines, prohibition versus taxation of the liquor traffic.

WE like Dr. Dio Lewis, though we do not entirely agree with him, and we like his magazine. It is a spicy serving up of various health dishes, and its bill of fare is long and broad enough to satisfy everybody's palate. Its large type, wide margins, heavy paper and unique cover make it a marked monthly wherever seen, and the quality of the material inside the covers is excellent. One good feature of it is the work of women—our women too, on its pages. Each number awakens new thoughts enough for an entire year's consideration.

A GOOD friend sends us the following sample suggestion of what might be a blessed feature in Christmas and New Year's cards:

1884. 1884.

A CHRISTMAS OR NEW YEAR'S PRESENT.
To my beloved mother, or wife.

I solemnly promise that I will never again use intoxicants, as a beverage, so long as I live.

——— ——— ———.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Why don't some of the competitors for designs for Christmas cards come down to business, and work in something, not merely ideal, but with some weight to it?

Why not indeed? Who can doubt that the sight of such a card, beautifully designed and colored, might not stir and fix some of the good impulses that float in on the Christmas tide?

THE Advance, and indeed many good religious journals and religious people, justify the internal revenue from intoxicating liquors on the ground adopted by political economists regarding the taxation of luxuries. Right here is the "rift within the lute" which if widened and broadened as it might be legitimately, would silence all the hymns and prayers of Christian people. The liquor traffic, from which this revenue is derived, is in the view of wise statesmen, the source of more ruin and misery than war, pestilence and famine combined. Will Christians and Christian journals advocate taxation of such an evil as of a luxury? Again by requiring revenue from this iniquitous business, the government becomes a partaker in its income. Shall this division of the spoils—literally "spoils"—be recognized as righteous by Christian communities? More light, more light!

IT would be hard to parallel in the world of business a finer sense of right and honor than that exhibited by the mother of a burglar who was sentenced in Philadelphia the other day to a term in prison. This mother came all the way from Baltimore after his conviction to make restitution of nearly three hundred dollars stolen by her son, taking it from her savings stored away in an old leathern bag, and handing it in a roll of bank notes, all of small denomination, to the clerk of the court. The money was handed to the judge, but he declined to receive it. "Take it back," he said, "and tell this poor woman that the payment of this money will not save her son from prison. The law must be vindicated Tell this lady this as kindly as you can, but tell her; for she must know just what she is doing." When the court's words were conveyed to the waiting mother she wept hard, but said, "Oh, I understand, I didn't hope to save my boy from prison. I pay this money because I want to do what is right. Justice is justice."

THE words of the Bishop of Rochester to the Episcopal Temperance Society in convention assembled at Philadelphia, contains this startling truth:

There is a subject which lies at the root of all clerical work and of all episcopal work, and of all conventions, and of all the philanthropic and literary institutions which you have in this country—that is the battle with intemperance. You may build as many churches as you like, you may open as many free libraries as you please, you may enlist new armies of lay soldiers of Christ, but so long as you permit intemperance to continue its ravages among the people without a supreme effort and struggle upon your part the church will be useless and your sermons will be useless.

O, if the entire church of God would enlist in the battle against the legalized liquor traffic with the earnestness, the consecration of brain, purse and heart that is now given to other forms of church work, the evangelization of the world would be accomplished immeasurably sooner than by all the agencies now at work in indifference to the cause of three-fourths of the world's sin and crime.

OUR Sunday schools are not doing their whole duty in the matter of temperance. Every school ought to have its temperance organization or Band of Hope. It should not be forgotten that the saloon and the gambling house bid high for the child of the Sunday school. Chaplain Caine, of England, made diligent inquiry as to the criminals in the county jail at Manchester, and found that out of 649 Protestant prisoners, 593 had been Sunday school scholars on an average of six or seven years each. Says a Scotch philanthropist:

I visited 78 of the 88 prisoners who were tried at the Glasgow assizes. Seven of these could neither read nor write; of the remaining 71 not less than 38 males and 24 females—total 62—had been connected with Sunday schools. A number of both sexes had been in attendance in Sunday schools for three, four, five, six, seven, nine, and even ten years. Fifty-nine of the sixty-two criminals admitted that drinking and public-house company had not only been the chief cause of their leaving the Sunday school, but of violating the laws of their country.

The confession of a scholar in a letter written to a Sabbath school teacher of Birmingham, says:

"I know that in the Sunday school of which I was a pupil that a great number turned out drunkards, myself amongst them. The class I was in consisted of about seventeen or eighteen scholars, and I am sure that twelve of them became sots. Some of them remain so to this day, a pest to the neighborhood, a disgrace to the borough, and a trouble to their families. It has been unfortunately my lot to sit, at one time or another, in the taproom, with eight or nine of my former fellow scholars." He adds: "My own intemperate habits were formed during the time I was a teacher in the school." And still farther, "Oh, sir, if Sunday school superintendents and teachers could only see a small portion of the immense amount of their labors which are utterly and I fear forever, frustrated by this foe to human improvement (strong drink)!"

On the other hand we have testimony also from the mother country which goes far to show that Bands of Hope and juvenile temperance societies increase the power and efficiency of the Sunday school:

In the Rev. J. P. Chown's school, at Bradford, Yorkshire, there are 1,000 scholars—500 being members of the Band of Hope. The conductor of the society, a deacon of the church, has recently had access to the church-book, with a view of ascertaining the relative number of scholars who had joined the church, from those who were connected with the Band of Hope, and from those who were not thus connected. After a careful investigation, it was proved that during seven years 137 had joined the church from the scholars in the schools, of which number no less than 106 had been Band of Hope members, and only 31 who were not protected by the safeguard and influence of the Band of Hope.

That we have to depend for these figures so largely upon English statistics is due to the fact that England has tried the experiment fairly. We have not. England has one million pledged children in the Bands of Hope. America has not more than one-tenth of that number. What work so fitting, so natural to the Sunday school as this? What so materially contributing to the ends for which it labors, and to the prevention of the evils against which its instruction is directed.

"AS I HAVE LOVED YOU."

"Th's is my commandment that ye love one another as I have loved you."—Words of Jesus.

BY FANNIE BOLTON.

For the purest hope that's human,
For the good of man and woman,
For the upright soulhood holy,
For the great heart strong, yet lowly,
For the best good of thy brother,
As I've loved you, love each other.

For the tender pity, bending
Over one who needs befriending,
For the love that draws with winning
Gentle tenderness the sinning
From the evil wings that cover,
As I've loved you, love each other.

For the possible great beauty
That will blossom out when duty
Grows to love of what is holy (Though the heart seems baseness solely
There is good that hate would smother),
As I've loved you, love each other.

For the thoughts by sinning fettered,
For the brain that may be bettered,
For the heart that needs refining,
For the soul that may grow shining,
Do not spurn thy fallen brother,
As I've loved you love each other.

Love them as I've loved you, dear ones,
Hunger, weep and suffer, near ones,
Leave them not, although they spurn you,
For your prayers but hate return you
(Slowly love all hate shall smother),
As I've loved you, love each other.

For the grandeur of the human,
For the godlike men and women,
For the race with holy faces,
For the soul's still latent graces,
For the peace that's like no other,
Love, as I have loved my brother.

For the glad concordant nations,
Brought to love's divine relations,
For the joy in God's creation,
For his plan's great consumation,
For thy best good and thy brother's,
Love, as I have loved all others.

"TAKE THE SAFEST PATH, FOR I AM FOLLOWING YOU."

BY THE REV. CHARLES GARRETT,
Of Liverpool, Ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference.

During one of my holidays in North Wales I was staying with my family near a range of hills to which I was strongly attracted. Some of them were slanting and easy to climb, and my children rejoiced to accompany me to their summit. One, however, was higher than the others, and its sides were steep and rugged. I often looked at it with a longing desire to reach the top. The constant companionship of my children, however, was a difficulty. Several of them were very young, and I knew it would be full of peril for them to attempt the ascent. One bright morning, when I thought they were all busy with their games, I started on my expedition. I quietly made my way up the face of the hill till I came to a point where the path forked, one path striking directly upwards, and the other ascending in a slanting direction. I hesitated for a moment as to which of the two paths I would take, and was about to take the precipitous one when I was startled by hearing a little voice shouting, "Father, take the safest path, for I am following you." On looking down I saw that my little boy had discovered my absence and followed me. He was already a considerable distance up the hill, and had found the ascent difficult, and when he saw me hesitating as to which of the paths I should take, he revealed himself by the warning cry. I saw at a glance that he was in peril at the point he had reached, and trembled lest his little feet should slip before I could get to him. I therefore cheered him by calling to him that I would come and help him directly. I was soon down to him, and grasped his little warm hand with a joy that every father will understand. I saw that in attempting to follow my example he had incurred fearful danger, and I descended, thanking God that I had stopped in time to save my child from injury or death.

Years have passed since that, to me, memorable morning; but though the danger has passed, the little fellow's cry has never left me. It taught me a lesson the full force of which I had never known before. It showed me the power of our unconscious influence, and I saw the terrible possibility of our leading those around us to ruin, without intending, or knowing it, and the lesson I learned that morning I am anxious to impress upon those to whom my words may come.

Charles Lamb has said that the man must be a very bad man, or a very ignorant one, who does not make a good resolution on New Year's day; and believing that the readers of this paper are neither the one, nor the other, I want to show them the importance of their resolving to be abstainers not only for their own sakes, but especially for the sake of those around them. I want them to listen to the voice of the children who are crying to them in tones that it would be criminal to disregard: "Take the safest path, for we are following you."

The Apostle Paul tells us that "no man liveth to himself," and this solemn truth we should ever bear in mind. Those around us are, without an effort on their part or ours, constantly being moulded and shaped by our example. Hence, in spite of ourselves, we are our brother's keeper; we can lift him up into purity and light, or we can drag him down into darkness and despair. This is especially true of the children around us. With these our influence is a moral atmosphere, affecting them far more than we imagine. Children are like the sensitive plates of the photographer, and our every look and action produce their effect. They are also natural imitators, and our lives are reproduced in theirs. The child of the minister will form his little pulpit, summon his congregation, and deliver his discourse. The child of the smoker will be seen with its mimic pipe going through the same performance as the father, while the child of the drinker will eagerly watch for an opportunity to drain the glass from which his father has been drinking. Their bright sharp eyes watch our every motion, in the family, at the hearth, and around the table; and though we are conscious of exerting no influence upon them, our every act and tone sinks into their plastic nature, and moulds their character forever. If the influence is for evil, no heavenly discipline can entirely remove it, and if it is for good, no bad associations can entirely effect its destruction.

I want my readers to look at these solemn facts in their bearing on total abstinence. Our children come into the world unable to distinguish between good and evil, especially as to their daily life. We have to teach them what "to eat, drink, and avoid." In some cases there is perplexity, there are physical peculiarities that make "one man's food another man's poison." It is not so, however, in the use of intoxicating drink. Here all is plain.

There are but two paths before us. We must either drink or abstain. The children have no means, apart from us, of knowing which path to take; they both appear equally safe and proper; the more so as they see wise and good men walking in both paths. They must make a choice, and having faith in our wisdom, and our love, they practically turn to us and ask, Which path shall I take? We must answer, and answer in a way that our children cannot misunderstand. With our lips we may recommend the path of abstinence, but our true answer will be our own conduct. Actions speak louder than words. Drinking a single glass of wine in the presence of the children will influence them far more than your teaching, however forcible or eloquent it may be. And the wiser and holier you are, the more important it is that the voice of your lives should point in the right direction. Everybody now knows that abstinence is the path of safety, and that drinking is the path of danger. That the one is the broad, winding, slippery path by which every drunkard has reached the region of despair. That multitudes have cursed the day they ever entered it, and with earnest entreaty have besought their children to avoid it. That the other is plain and safe, leading to health, intelligence, virtue, and religion. That multitudes of those that are treading it, thank God they have entered it, and earnestly urge those they love to tread it also.

These paths are open before us on this blessed New Year's day. We have the terrible power of choice. We cannot move without affecting others. The children in their innocence, and weakness, are following us "tho' with unequal step," and are crying to us, "Take the safest path, for we are following you." Parents, teachers, citizens, Christians, ministers of the gospel, hear their cry. It is possible that, as in my case when climbing the mountain, your head may be so steady, and your foot so firm, that you, like many others, may tread the dangerous path without falling.

But what of the children that are following you? Can you guarantee that their heads will be as steady, and their feet as firm as yours? And if not, then it may come to pass that though loving the children tenderly and striving most earnestly in other ways to promote their welfare, your example may be the stumbling-block over which they shall fall into present and eternal ruin. We are responsible to God for our example, and in the great day we must meet the results of even our unconscious influence. I am personally prepared to meet the results of my total abstinence, but I dare not meet the results of my drinking, however moderately. Dare you? In the decision to which you come today take in the whole case. If you drink you may gratify habit, appetite, and custom; you may produce a momentary flow of animal spirits, and even fancy that you derive a little physical advantage. Having said this, I think I have said all that can possibly be said in favor of drinking; and I think you will see that you have only selfish reasons for continuing to practice it: your own comfort, your own pleasure, and health. If, on the contrary, you resolve to abstain, you will see that your reasons will be noble, generous, and Christian. You avoid the "appearance of evil;" you will pursue a course of self-denial; your example will be one that all can safely imitate. When you leave a home, or company, you will have no misgivings as to the influence you have exerted. No man to whom drink is a temptation will be able to make your one glass an excuse for his two glasses. No victim who is endeavoring to escape from his besetment will be thrown back by your example; and whatever may be the future of the young people around you, they will never be able to charge you with having led them astray.

Dr. Lyman Beecher has well said, "It is not enough to erect the flag ahead to mark the spot where the drunkard lies. It must be planted at the entrance of the course proclaiming in waving capitals 'This is the way to death!' If we cannot stop men at the beginning we cannot separate between that and the end. He that lets strong drink alone is safe and only he."

I beseech the readers to realize the tremendous power which they possess, and to resolve by God's help to tread the path of abstinence, if for no other reason because the children are following them.

A WIFE'S SORROWFUL APPEAL.

[The subject of the following sketch came to Maryville, Mo., on the day that he came to death; registered his name at the hotel, was conducted from a saloon to his room in the third story. Here he jumped from the window and was picked up only to meet a drunkard's doom, crying most piteously for pardon. His wife has made the following tuching appeal "to whom it may concern."]

From my lonely sorrowful home, I feel impelled to send forth a note of warning to those who uphold the whisky traffic by their influence or patronage.

A picture hangs upon the wall looking down at me with clear steady eyes. A tall erect form that speaks of a proud independent manhood, a high, well developed forehead, firm, but gentle mouth, clear cut features, beaming with health, hope, and ambition. How brightly life opened up for him at twenty-one. What visions of honor, wealth, and happiness, spread out before the dark clear eyes. How eager, how confident of success he looks. But another picture, a dark, sorrowful contrast comes before me, and I remember that the buds of promise never unfolded, they were blighted and destroyed by that enemy of mankind, strong drink.

Last August before the frosts had nipped the robes of summer, or fitted the year for such a sense of sadness, he lay at the Arlington, bruised and mangled, dying. The face was scarred with lines age never would have left. The spirit tortured with anguish, that only a proud, sensitive nature, enslaved by a demon could feel.

Robbed of his manhood, robbed of his hopes, his happiness, and now of his life, which he feels ebbing away at every breath. No wonder he cries in agony of remorse "I'm in sackcloth and ashes, sackcloth and ashes. I've not done what I intended to do, but must die. Die and leave my boy fatherless and die this way. I could have met death any other way, but to have brought it upon myself in this manner, it is too bad, too bad."

A nobler or more sensitive man never lived, but appetite caused him to degrade himself again and again, though he suffered shame and remorse untold after each debauch. He fully realized the degradation and danger of his course, but also realized his hopeless enslavement, and said when some one remarked to him, "This will be a lesson, you'll never drink again." "I shall make no promise." He knew too well how weak he was in this, though firm and manly in all else.

A kinder, more thoughtful and affectionate husband never blessed a woman's life, and he would have suffered anything rather than cause me an hours pain or uneasiness, but through drink he tortured me constantly, because he was its slave. His idolatrous love for his baby was the remark of all who knew him, and he bewailed its early orphanage more than all else, yet drink caused him to run all risks and finally brought about the unhappy event that left it fatherless. Can any one in the face of this think that the appetite for strong drink is not stronger than all else? Seven years experience has proved to me that it is a terrible thing, stronger than all but the death toward which it hastens its victims. Where are these appetites fostered? Nine-tenths of them at the saloon? It is the hotbed, the nursery, where the drunkards are made. Everyone knows this—knows that the saloon keeper makes his place inviting with games and amusements to entice the youth, the young men or any others that wish to pass away the time. They mix their drinks to suit the taste that revolts from the fiery fluid, and by and by there is no need of games, the appetite is formed and the work done that the saloon keeper intended. He is sure now of his victim, sure of the money he earns, though wife and children starve and he go down to ruin headlong.

When this is an admitted fact why in heaven's name are there not some effective measures put forth to wipe them out of existence? If there is no law to put them down, or a law that can be twisted until it is of no effect, then the sooner there is one that will do the work, the better. The temperance people can do nothing while a saloon flirts its sign in their faces. All the churches or the temperance bands cannot destroy their work when well done. Is it not the course of wisdom to destroy the source of the evil, that in the years to come the effect may be destroyed? As long as they remain their terrible effects will be seen and felt all over the land.

The women of our land have worked, plead, and prayed. Are they to be unheeded? No wonder, when pressed to desperation by the bold defiers of those law-protected curses, that they demand the ballot as a means of self-protection. No wonder their hearts grow bitter toward law-makers, when one of them (who is now engaged in fighting saloon-keeper's battles) said to the broken-hearted wife that ordered that no saloon keeper insult her with his presence as he watched beside the wreck they had caused: "Don't talk that way, you may need help before you get away from here, and they would be the first men to give you fifty dollars." Fifty dollars! How paltry and insignificant all their ill-gotten gains, beside what they had taken from me. I have no fight to make against men, but if they are the generous souls he pictures them, it seems to me they would realize the horrible work they were doing, and not for money destroy both body and soul. There are surely enough wrecked lives, lives where the light has just gone out forever, to add to the list.

If there be a just retribution, surely beneath the load of tears and moans, blasted hopes, wrecked lives, and lost souls, the man that gives his neighbor drink will be sunk to the darkest, deepest depths of a never-ending despair. And every man who signs a petition to license these soul and body destroying, misery-manufacturing machines, will, with them, be held accountable. Honorable judges, we have looked to you for an alteration of this curse. Stand firm is the cry of every honest heart.

Ladies of the W. C. T. U., who, through your president, sent me words of comfort and sympathy, I say, go on in your glorious work. God will be with you, and the prayers of hundreds of sorrowful hearts are that you may yet turn the scale, and get the monster where he may receive his death blow. SARAH WORTH.

ONE OF THE "SOBER SECOND THOUGHTS" OF THE CRUSADE.

BY JULIA COLMAN.

Our three objective points in all this temperance work are to get people to understand temperance, to love it, (and therefore practice it) and to work for it. The first of these is indispensable, for if our work is to endure it must be intelligent work. It is well to win the name and the vote, but it is better to secure the individual, and enlist him (or her) to work wisely in all sorts of ways for temperance. And this to be an effective work must have the aid of temperance literature, tracts judiciously distributed, books and pamphlets read and loaned, and papers subscribed and canvassed for. This is the principal line of work in the literature departments of the national, state, district, county and local unions, to make the people intelligent. Then come the special helps for all the lines of work, for all the departments can be helped by the use of literature suited to their needs.

It is the place of the national literature department to prepare, publish or recommend publications specially adapted to the work to bring them to the attention of the workers by means of letters, circulars, articles in the public press, sales at conventions, etc., to show how they can be used to advantage; and to plan and promote courses of reading and study. To these ends they solicit correspondence with superintendents of departments, with all new unions (to which they send circulars, instructions and specimen leaflets) and with all workers everywhere, also the careful perusal of their reports, circulars and articles. They also fill orders promptly and carefully for tracts, leaflets, handbills, cards, pamphlets, text-books, Sunday school library books, charts, catechisms, song books and other requisites for juvenile work, from the largest and best assorted of the kind in the country.

It is also their privilege to provide for raising the funds required to defray the expenses of all this great and laborious work by means of a dime collection to be taken up annually in every local union and forwarded directly to the department where it is disposed of under the advice of a large committee of ladies appointed by the National union. All this work requires a vast amount of correspondence, clerk work, etc. (beside the services of the superintendent given freely for seven successive years), for which the dime collections have hitherto proved quite insufficient. Will not the reader contribute to make the department worthy of the union which it serves and represents?

WOMAN'S STRENGTH.

BY MRS. ELLA DARE.

Neither physical force or muscular endeavor can measure the strength of woman. The kingdom of material efforts holds no key to her nature's endurance.

Back of all externals, in the regions of the invisible, rests her mystic power. Who shall define its growth, or compass its possibilities?

Spirit-born, and soul-sustained, it reaches through to the outer world of action. It breathes into the idea, and behold, the deed springs into being. It touches hidden forces, and energy vitalizes movement. It holds high court in the realm of unseen motives. From the great fountain-head of divinity flow waters of infinite love, touched by this baptism, womanhood and motherhood send out their messages to a sorrow-laden world, refreshing barren wastes with draughts of vital power.

Abundant fruitage follows, and the earth smiles back its blessings. An object to be gained and woman fixes her gaze only upon the end. Clouds may encompass her. Hardships may rise on every side. Rugged walls may bar her pathway. But she presses on, and around, and over them all, to meet the next that may confront.

On fields of physical battle, she claims no sovereignty, but moves the contest into regions of heart and soul, and she challenges combat. Secure in the strength that throbs in every fibre of her being, conscious of that unseen power that arms desire with unyielding endurance, she stands the victor.

Nature tells us that unity is strength. Society clasps in her embrace the world's possibilities. Mental and moral progress wait upon her bidding. Legislative acts are the slowest of human agencies. First comes the advance guard of agitation, persistence follows, and then conviction molds the public sentiment into crystals of higher law.

To make complete and perfect, society must call into action, both her men and women factors. It is the fusing of the two, the outer and the inner force, the rugged reason, and the subtle intuition, that shall make a compact invincible and all-conquering.

When both shall stand together, each free in thought and act, by virtue of a God-given individuality, then will all these movements, touching the issues of time pass on to victory.

The light is breaking in the east. The star of promise shines down upon the soul of woman, bidding her work and wait, for the blessing of unseen strength shall crown all righteous effort.

A SLUMBERING CITY.

BY EMERSON BENTLY.

It was not many days ago that a reporter of the New Orleans Times-Democrat graphically expressed a powerful plea for continued assault upon the liquor traffic, by the steadily growing and mighty host in the land. Here it is:

A MISERABLE MOTHER.—Louisa Wade, a young white woman, was picked up on Villere, near Canal street, on Saturday night during the heavy rain, in such an intoxicated condition that she was unable to take care of herself. The miserable woman had her babe, a bright boy, aged about two years, with her, and when she was locked up in the Fourth precinct station the officers kindly cared for the child. Yesterday the little fellow was playing in the captain's office, just as happy as could be, and the debased mother slept in a cell, little caring what had become of her child. The woman will be examined before Judge Ford today, and he will proably send her to the parish prison and have the baby placed in an asylum.

Every day the police courts are thronged by the victims of poisonous drink, dealt out by the licensed soul-killers in thousands of dens. The above incident is only one of many others equally pitiful. Young men are going prematurely to their graves, and widows and orphans are left to mourn, to struggle, and often to fall in direst poverty. Tax payers complain that they are sadly misgoverned; it is impossible for respectable candidates to obtain an honest count of votes cast for them in ballot boxes, the public schools are almost "economized" out of existence, and the patrons of the saloons and brothels are in power. Yet there are fine ladies and gentlemen in New Orleans, with all the comforts of wealth and modern society. They are generous, mean to do right, lead Christian lives, and contribute freely to charities. They seem to be unaware of the dangers all about them, and are singularly apathetic in any attempt to give their voice or presence to temperance movements. The city slumbers, and the dramshops prosper. There is need for an alliance of all Christian and reformatory agencies to make war on a common enemy.

WOMEN IN POLITICS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Senator Henry W. Blair in a very able paper, in the January number of the North American Review, says some plain truths to the national republican party, he tells them that, "alcohol is already in politics," and that they will find themselves defeated in an election not so very remote if they do not live up to the courage of their convictions upon the great questions, which are now coming up for discussion before the people. Amen! say I, and a thousand thanks to the noble senator for his fearless declaration of truth. However, he fails to make mention of another factor, in American politics, which like Banquo's ghost will not down, but goes on steadily, persistently asserting itself, I mean, the prayerful, irresistible influence of the Christian women of this country.

For years these women agonized before God that the saloons might go. The doors were not closed, the saloons went not, and all because "alcohol was in politics, dictating to parties and shaping legislation." By and by a homely truth forced itself home to the hearts of these women, "that what so ever was legislated upon the people, could be legislated off. Full of this new gospel, they went forth preaching the worth of the ballot, and man's obligation as a citizen, only to be confronted with another great truth, that while they were beseeching a miracle, man was striking hands with the powers of darkness, and alcohol was fortifying itself behind unholy statutes, and constitutional defects.

Webster defines politics to be "That part of ethies which treats of the science of government." Under our republican form of government we own no allegiance, save to the will of the people, as expressed on election days. And, when a party comes into power, we know what principles are to be acted upon, because, the platform of the party, has not left us in doubt as to their policy.

Some years ago, when certain noble women, presented their claims for recognition, at the hands of the republican party they were told, that their claim for recognition ought to be treated with respectful consideration. For ought we know their claim was treated with respectful consideration, and that was the end of it.

We are now on the eve of another great political contest, great questions are up for settlement—questions, which involve the happiness of women and the morals of a nation. Conscious of the fact, that the platform of a party indicates its principles, we, as women are most anxious to know, what the great republican party will say about this rum traffic—which rolls, on the wheels of iniquitous legislation, over the hearts of helpless women, crushing them beneath a weight, they are powerless to resist.

I foresee, that the next party platform will declare in favor of protecting the American laborer, against the cheap labor of foreign lands, which of course will be all right. But I do not foresee that they will boldly declare in favor of protecting women against that colossal evil which more than any other helps to drive them to lives of misery and shame. If the national republican party will go before the people in 1884, with the issue fairly made, if they will declare in no unmistakable language their determination to array themselves against the saloon power, then we as Christian women will bid them "on to victory," but if they will not, then the duty of the W. C. T. Unions all over this land becomes positively clear. Let no politician console himself with the thought that we are only women and have no ballots, for I say that in the light of a recent past, women have demonstrated that they were a political power. Aye, even to the making and unmaking of parties.

The grand victory which perched on republican banners in Iowa was largely due to woman's endeavor. No one denies it. Ohio, too, the state of open saloons and desecrated Sabbaths gave three hundred and twenty thousand ballots for prohibition, and every ballot was trumpet-toned in favor of woman's power in politics.

Again, Michigan, my Michigan, which year after year for nearly a quarter of a century had gone solidly republican, wakened to find her laurels taken from her, and a fusion governor in the chair, and all because the W. C. T. U. did not approve of what had been done. This is no overstating of the facts, nor is it at all to be wondered at, that women, for whom brave men will often dare to die, have the power to change ballots and decide majorities.

We as women have no creed, save that of "God and home, and native land," and before this, all party preferences dwindle into insignificance. Moreover, we believe that government is instituted among men for their protection, and that when government cannot control its own vices it is weak; and when it will not protect the innocent, it is wicked. Further, the traffic in rum is wrong, eternally wrong, and there is only one right way, that is through the gate of constitutional prohibition of the whole business. On this platform we stand, nor will we move. An old French proverb runs in this wise: "What woman wills, God wills, and in this glorious century the proverb stands a luminous prophecy." Mock at me if you will, but it is the luminous prophecy still, and to its fulfillment the very stars of heaven run, and to its consummation we give our earnest hearts.

MARION B. BAXTER.

A W. C. T. U. STUDY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In its inceptive stages the executive genius of the W. C. T. U. was clearly indicated in its basic plan of organization, and needs to be carefully studied to maintain symmetry in its successive periods of growth.

Projected to earth from divine sources, with an electrical power that announced its birth to millions inside of thirty days, crystallizing into organized form in a National union in less than a year, the process of growth began disseminating its vitality through all the nations and people of the earth.

In America it is to follow the political subdivisions of the country, known as state, congressional, district, county, and township; supplemented by the significant educational one of the school district. Its central thought being Christ, the religious forms of churches are used as the familiarized manner of presenting its gospel truths. This garmenture the W. C. T. U. found ready made, as the infant its swaddling clothes.

The nurses of this incomparable child should carefully study the demands of its organism, that it may not be dwarfed in the second stage of its growth. The next ten years will mark the period of its growth, as the present decade has that of its infancy, and the same motherly wisdom is required to guide it through the immediate future that a strongly individual character calls for at this time of life.

These geopraphical and political boundaries are the osseous structure of the W. C. T. U. body: The National, being the head; states the spinal column; congressional districts, the trunk; counties, the legs; townships, the arms and school districts, or local unions, the hands and feet, the interdependence of each for successful and harmonious movement, being as absolute as the similar parts of the human body. To continue the comparison, the lines of work are the brain and nerves, the plan of report the venous and arterial systems. That muscles may cover the bones and make operative the indwelling spirit, there must be blood. The circulating medium of life, in the veins of this personality, is money. Its nutritive procesess are mathematical, and the treasury of the local unions is the stomach through which the food of dollars and cents must be taken for assimilation.

Work is the foundation from which money flows. The membership fee is the legitimate harvest of W. C. T .U. labor.

This garner can be augmented through increase of membership and multiplied local unions. Resident unpaid workmen from this time forward must accomplish this through the fostering arms of the township organization. The practical steps to this end are for district presidents, backed by their executive committees, to organize each county in their district. That for county presidents is to organize the township union in each township in the county of which they are responsible; and the township will involve the active duty of entire communities of women.

The perfected plans of the W. C. T. U. thus ultimates in the most gigantic self-sustaining organization the world ever saw, and with its volunteer and inspired servitors cannot its movements be so successfully guided that at the moment of its majority it will not only be a recognized citizen politically, self-supporting and independent pecuniarily, but rich in public libraries and institutions of learning for the ignorant, in homes for the homeless and remunerative industries for the poor, and places of free worship and religious instruction to the Christless. To accomplish this its arms must be developed through use during its season of youth. Remember that township unions are the arms of the W. C. T. U. body. Develop the arms and the cry for alms will cease.

The fact that God is the Father of this child of the nineteenth century, and the women of the world is its mother, should be borne reverently in mind. Having been touched by the Divine Presence, will the maternal wisdom of the age successfully rear into symmetrical proportions this wonderful offspring of the Infinite Mind and womanly power, that it may as Christ's agent ultimately effect the salvation of the race? Let all unitedly pray to this end. ROWENA B. THROOP.

AN AFTER THOUGHT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A postal card did not reach me asking for testimony in relation to what the "sober second thought," the W. C. T. U. had done for me, but I cannot forbear, though late, writing a line to you dear editor. The news of the "crusade in Ohio," came to me through the London Times while sojourning in that city the winter of '73 and spring of '74. I had given myself to the Lord many years before, and realized from day to day my acceptance with him, and held myself ready to work for his blessed cause as he should direct. But when asked by my husband if I were at home, "would I join the band of women who were visiting saloons and praying on the side-walks?" I said "Nay, not I." But on my return to the United States I found grand women, holy women, women whom I had known for years as devoted Christians, engaged in this work. My prejudice gave way. Being asked to join the Newark band, I went to God in prayer, asking to know his will. After waiting hours in secret and desiring a sign from God, he indulged me and granted my request, I went in to the battle to "stay until this cruel war is over." "What has it done for me?" It has brought me in closer communion with him. Led me more fully out of myself, taught me how to trust my Heavenly Father in a fuller and more receptive spirit, has given me to feel for another's woe and sorrows as I never could have done, not counting my own life dear unto me, if I might save another's. It has brought heaven nearer to me, and Jesus is dearer, as one who can save to the "very uttermost," from the deepest dregs of sin. It has begotten in my soul a love for God's dear children, such as I never knew before. It has brought me into sympathy and love with an army of the grandest women that ever lived on this continent or any other. It has made me a better wife and mother, giving me courage to do and dare for God. It has done everything for me and I am glad I am in this army. Glory Hallelujah! I have no criticism for our blessed paper, THE UNION SIGNAL. It brightens my home like a star of hope, a harbinger of victory. MARY C. NOBLES.

HOW SHE DID IT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Would you like to know just "How she did it?" Well, for two long years she had worked, and watched, and prayed, trying to get the temperance question worked into the Sunday school, having a large class of girls, who she realized would in all probability be the young wives and mothers of a coming generation, and the great importance of their being pledged to total abstinence now in their young girlhood, some already were verging on the threshold of womanhood—I say for two long years she had been seeking the opportunity of driving this wedge of temperance in the Sunday school. One sleepless night it came to her, just as the Star of Bethlehem appeared to the shepherds on the plain, and it said, "Begin in your own class." Then the thought of "How to do it" became the question. To think was to act, so hastily dressing she wrote to Miss Colman "Please send to me one dozen of your handsomest pledge cards for a Sunday school class, also a large card on which twelve or more names can be inscribed." They came, and the Sunday before Christmas she quietly took them into her class, and after the opening exercises were ended, and the teachers invited to take up the lesson for the afternoon, made a few preliminary remarks. —it being next to the last Sunday in the year, and how soon the years would roll by and they as a class would be eparated, already two had gone out from them, one to a distant state and city, and in less then a decade of years, if every life was spared in all probability there would not one of the present number be found in the class. They would be out in the world casting a broader and more certain influence on all with whom they associated, hence the great importance of their becoming active Christian girls; some were already that.

Another important step for them to take was to become staunch uncompromising temperance girls; take a firm stand, and let their influence be felt as such, and eternity alone would reveal all they might do, while all along in their lives they would see traces of their Christian temperance influence. And today wondered how many of her class would like to make her a Christmas gift of their names to a total abstinence pledge, and eight pairs of hands went up, and the names of eight as bright, promising girls as was ever written on page, was inscribed on that "pledge tablet" and sent as a Christmas gift to our W. C. T. U., while the small pledge cards were given, each with their name, to the members of the class, and this is "The way she did it."

THERE ARE DIVERSITIES OF GIFTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In all organizations there must be a variety of operations—the operations of the head, the hand, the foot, and the systems of nutrition, drainage, exercise, and aggressive action must at the same time drill every part of vital organization. Our national and state W. C. T. Unions are vital organizations; while some members are all in motion for aggressive work, for the "forward march," others must keep the nutritive forces in good condition, or soon the "whole head will be sick, the whole heart faint."

We shall succeed as members only as we are in our own place, doing the part that our natural capacities fit us for. While some of our sisters are "waiting on teaching constitutional amendment," others enter the abodes of poverty, the jails and alms houses, to lead forth to the sunlight of righteousness the fallen. Others yet seek the school-house, and call to their aid the educators of our land, together "digging deep" for a "rock foundation," whereon to build coming structures of thought and practice, looking far beneath the surface for the roots of every "tree of knowledge."

The remark was made at the last meeting of the National convention held in Detroit, that "every superintendent thought her own department the most important." But every one had still a care for the others, as the head for the hand, or the obedient foot for the whole body. I looked quickly for the suggestions of Mrs. Dr. Burnett and Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, because my office was theirs also; and, dear sisters, who labor in other departments, remember that superintendents of Heredity and Hygiene are ever looking out to see that the food, drainage, ventilation, rest and nerve supplies are what they should be wherewith to primarily sustain all this great army, and these mighty forces of conception, elaboration and successful execution — with our food, drink, drainage and ventilation manuals made as simple, as comprehensive, as practicable as possible — we of this indispensable corps must enter the church to let out its vitiated air—we must meet the educators of the land and negotiate with them for an enduring system of popular physical education; we must speak through the associated press—religious, educational and political; we must bring up supplies continually; we must be nurses, cooks, teachers and preachers of the Word. How shall we "Glorify God in these spirits and these bodies which are His"? (A text for the day). D. M. MARSTON.

A YOUNG WOMAN'S WAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Will you please allow me space for an idea, which has come to me recently?

I found at our state convention that our unions claim as members, many whose talents as artists are not to be despised, and now as we are looking about for ways and means of raising funds for our flower mission, the thought has occurred to me, why cannot our artists paint each a half-dozen or more Easter cards, sell them, and send the money to their state superintendent for this work? We use for cards the chocolate or dark green ones, used by photographers for mounting their pictures. They can be obtained in three sizes; common photographs, cabinet, and panel, and if the ladies would form clubs and purchase by the hundred they could be obtained for a trifle, and when painted they sell in cities for from $1.00 to $2.00 each. In the country the price must be lower of course. We get our designs, always floral, from the many beautiful printed cards, and letter them with our brush in script. I have also been wondering if it would not be a good plan on flower mission day to remember the opponents in our vicinity with a bouquet and a text?

DUST TO DUST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—When I have witnessed the burial services of the Free Masons and the Odd Fellows, I have always thought why cannot we have a burial service for our Woman's Christian Temperance Union. When I attended our convention at Alton I listened, hoping some of our workers would bring up this subject, but they were so engaged with the great matter they have in hand, viz: teaching all the people to live right, that they never seemed to think of death and burial.

But, dear sisters, we all have to die when life's work is done and would it not be a comfort to us to know that our sisters of the W. C. T. U. will gather round our beds in our last moments and around our last resting places with appropriate ceremonies, wearing our beautiful badges of hope, love and purity and sing some of our sweet inspiring songs as the dust is returned to the dust. Some months ago our dear Miss Willard made some allusion to this matter, but as I have heard no more about it I have concluded to write something about it myself, hoping that some wiser head will plan an appropriate burial service for our beloved Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Yours fraternally, MRS. D. BLODGET.

A CHEERY NEW YEAR GREETING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Home again, and wish you a "Happy New Year." They got up a Sunday school mass meeting in Pittsfield, last Sunday, and a mass meeting it was, old and young, big and little, convened in the pretty new Congregational church, the boys and girls of the Band of Hope with their badges on. We had a grand meeting. In the evening they had a Christmas praise service, and I was invited to give a little talk to adults, but two or three rows of boys and girls in the front seats came to hear me talk with chalk, and I expected it would be very dry to them without it, but when I was fairly launched into telling the incidents of the work, the "truly stories" as the children say, I remarked to the president that she'd have to time me or I would talk all night, when, to my surprise the children said eagerly, "Oh, do talk all night!" which proves that it is not to babies we are talking, but little men and women. Had a grand meeting in Barry.

After the entertainment a man came and asked me for the "Beulah land" picture, saying "I started at fifty-five when George Woodford was with us." "Ah, yes, brother" said a gentleman standing by, "but you lack one thing yet." I seeing what he meant, remarked, "Oh, yes, and I will make your cross for you to begin to carry, between fifty-five and sixty years," and I made a cross with flowers about it and a path from it to "Beulah" growing brighter all the way and I wrote under it, "May this be the path where you shall walk, that shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day." He thanked me over and over, looking very thoughtful, and those who knew him best, said "something's on his mind for sure." Had splendid meetings both in Brighton and Carlinville; visited six and seven grades of the schools in both places inviting them all to the "Chalk Talk" entertainment. They came too, notwithstanding the severe weather.

The earnestness of the boys and girls in the work reminded me of some of the boys in Cairo. After the entertainment some lady asked, seeing a boy's cheek sticking out, "What's the matter, toothache?" "No, that's my pickle, we boys brought pickles to eat to keep us awake, and we didn't one of us think of them till she was through, and so we're eating them now."

In Brighton I found a rare jewel whose name is Rosa Reininger. She's a kindergartener, "to the manor born." I could have sat all night and listened to her. I do not know what they would do without her, but "greatest good to the greatest number"—we must press her into the service of the W. C. T. U. She is ready to come and try. I must get her up here into my workshop, when her vacation comes.

I tell you confidentially DEAR UNION SIGNAL, we have some grand women, and they love you, too. You are a welcome guest in almost every house, and how they like to talk of you, and your editor, and how the good temperance ministers pray for her.

I hear gentlemen sometimes remark that they would like you better if you would, from your "Watch-Tower," spy out and note down a few political events, and some think a continued story makes the boys and girls watch the more eagerly for your coming each week.

I, myself, am delighted with everything you tell us, and don't see what you could leave out, especially Captain Deborah's stories around the camp fire. These cold winter evenings I am on the wing so much I don't get time to write you very often, but I am.

Ever yours NELLIE BAYLEY.

IS IT RAINING, little flower?
Be glad of rain,
Too much sun would wither thee,
'Twill shine again.
The clouds are very black 'tis true,
But just behind them
Smiles the blue.

Art thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain.
In sorrow sweetest things will grow
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and thou shalt have sun,
When clouds their perfect work have done.

WOMAN'S BALLOT, OR "WHOSOEVER WILL."

BY MRS. M. E. BALCH.

Whosoever heareth, shout, shout the sound!
Send the blessed tidings all the world around;
Spread the joyful news wherever man is found:
Woman's vote will save the home.

Chorus.—Who-so-ever will,
Send the proclamation over vale and hill;
'Tis the band of women that will conquer rum;
And the time will surely come.

None there are to hinder or cause delay,
For the door is open—enter while you may,
And the "Liquor-League" must yield to woman's sway;
Woman's vote will save the home.

Chorus.

Who-so-ever will the blessing secure;
Do not fear the Cross; be willing to endure
For the right of Freedom, gained forevermore,
Woman's vote will save the home.

Chorus.

A GOOD TIME.

BY LEWE M. FOSS.

It was as Glory McWhirk said, "A wholly beautiful time and we were in it."

A genial, whole-souled time; a time when people were easily moved to jests and laughter, when they greeted each other with a cordial hand-clasp and not the cold, fishy, two-finger society touch.

It was an evening when the electrical current of common brotherhood and cheery good-fellowship made the air heartsome and sent the blood coursing along like the tingle of the frosty air of a Maine winter evening. I think "we temperance people," have a way of drawing into the magic circle some choice spirits: people who have something to talk about, save platitudes on the weather and the last German or theatre-going. Have I aroused the conceded feminine curiosity?

When I read the suggestion of our dear Miss Willard—in her spicy little pamphlet, "How Plumpton Expects to Celebrate"—that we should report our "temperance doings" for the "great stay-a-way audience that hears with its eyes," not with statistic conciseness and dryness, but trying to give as it was given unto us, a slight taste of that which had afforded us pleasure—I thought how like the sweet, giving spirit of our loved president, this suggestion was!

Perhaps I more fully appreciated it because I often form a molecule of that great body that are fated to take their share of the coveted lecture or social gathering from the damp pages of the morning paper. And "how often, oh, how often," has my not-too-righteous soul been vexed by the starvation fare offered, instead of a few natural heart-given bits that would have let us into the soul of the evening's enjoyment.

Well, now when so good a time to act upon this seed-thought as when we were blessed with the presence not only of the graceful giver of the thought but of our gifted lawyer champion, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, as well?

How did we happen to be thus favored of the gods? It happened upon this time and manner. We, W. C. T. U's, who are so fortunate in having all gifts represented in our ranks, had offered us the willing heart and gifted tongue of our eloquent temperance advocate, Mrs. J. E. Foster, of Iowa, to aid us in securing prohibition for the District of Columbia as well as the territories. So by appointment she lectured at the Foundry M. E. Church, D. C., Dec. 18th, on the politico-social aspects of the great question of the hour. After the lecture, by the delicate, kindly courtesy of our W. C. T. U. treasurer, Mrs. S. D. LaFetra, whose hospitality, like herself, is on no niggardly scale, we were invited to meet Mrs. Foster at the Temple hotel parlors.

I have not accounted for the advent of our president. Well, she is a law unto herself, the beginning and ending of which is lost in a woof of so many sweet and gracious deeds that it is hard touching the leading strand. But it happened something on this wise: Miss Willard being somewhere "on the line" heard that "Judith" was to be in Washington that evening, Dec. 18th, whereupon "Frances E." declared her intention to be there likewise, and—

"When a woman will, she will,
And that's the end on't."

Especially if she is hampered by no masculine intentions to the contrary.

It was good to see the flash of surprise and genuine affection that went over Mrs. Foster's face as Miss Willard put her slender hand into her sisterly clasp!

As they stood there a greater contrast could not well have been imagined; both equally gifted, yet so diverse.

Miss Willard so slender and fair, her spirituelle face, informed with the noble soul shining out, Mrs. Foster glowing with health and rich coloring; it was "as moonlight unto sunlight."

As one M. C. told me, "I never know which of those two ladies I prefer to hear speak; they are both grand women and gifted speakers. When I listen to Mrs. Foster I think I prefer her elcquence, and when Miss Willard is on the platform I concede the palm to her."

Her lecture, Mrs. Foster's, was conceded by all to be one of her most successful efforts.

One line of departure in her lecture from the usual routine of temperance addresses was, that the cause of temperance has been aided through the mere accretions of time, by the mistakes and blunders of citizens, by the brutality of the rabble, and through the exigencies of parties.

With a few passing illustrations of the accretions of time in the physical world, Mrs. Foster delineated changes not less wonderful in the world of human life, and in society and governmental development.

The civilization of today is the result of forces, willing and unwilling, knowing and unknowing; among the chiefest the common school and the gospel of Christ. These forces have aided the temperance cause. Pure science that cared not for the driving wheels of reform, but in cold, intellectual dignity turned its labors to the laboratory and the workshop, gives us testimony as to the real nature of alcohol and its effect on the human system. Mrs. Foster referred to Castle Garden, N. Y., as presenting a problem to the political economist which finds solution only in the fanaticism of the extremist. So insurance companies, railroads and other corporations are becoming, upon purely business grounds, practically total abstinence societies. These are the mere accretions of time.

Mrs. Foster then spoke of the mistakes, blunders and brutalities as being the unknowing or unwilling servants of reform. Of the exigencies of the political parties she claimed that there is now, no great living political issue before the country other than this temperance question.

Now my dear "stay-at-homes," havn't I given you quite a resume of our gifted champion's effort?

With a few more items of this "good time" I will close this article, "thrown off," as the spring poet said of his effusion, "on the spur of the moment," and only hope our editor is more lenient than the one who replied: "That on the spur of the moment he would likewise act," and threw the poor poet's doggrels into the waste basket!

With that awful fate before me, I dare not stop to tell you how pleasant "Sallie's parlors" looked with their tasteful decoration of American flags, evergreens and smilax intertwined. The portraits of the "queens of the White House," Miss Willard and Mrs. Foster, looked graciously down from wreaths of green. On the south side of the room was inscribed the watch-cry of Iowa republicanism during the late campaign: "A school-house on every hill and no saloon in the valley."

After refreshments were served, our own loved president, Mrs. Clara L. Roach, on behalf of the friends, presented Miss Willard with a basket of delicate ferns and rosebuds.

The tender words of speech and response, the close hand-clasp, showed that it came from the heart and reached the heart.

Mr. B. H. Warner, one of our most earnest workers, presented a basket of lovely flowers to Mrs. Foster, interweaving, delicately as the gift, the appreciation of her lecture with a prophecy of the reward that would eventually be accorded to woman when this great issue was settled.

These were no acts of mere social courtesy, but tokens of the close bond uniting all, from these earnest workers, halting for a moment in their labors, to gain fresh courage from the touch of friendly hands and the cheer of friendly voices.

Mrs. Foster said, when she looked around on the sisters having charge of the different departments of work—one receiving and counseling in the drawing-room; another leading religious services; another kneeling with the penitent in the prison-cell, and then looked over our own department of work, she felt that she was out among the Philistines.

All the bright and tender things that were said cannot be reported, but it was an evening full of good cheer, and one of "Sallie's" happiest inspirations among the many that her kindly heart prompts her to extend to the W. C. T. U's of Washington, D. C.

THE TEMPERANCE COOK BOOK.

[The publishers of this paper have in mind the publication of a cook book that shall be not only free from all recipes demanding wines or liquors, but shall be as nearly hygienic in its character as possible. Our friends are invited to send, with their names and personal testimony, any recipes of this character, which have passed the test of long household use and wholesome experience.]

DESSERT.

Pies are not necessarily unwholesome. It is the soggy under crust, and the leathery, or too rich upper crust which hurts. A tart pie, or one without an upper crust, may be always worthy a place on a hygienic dinner table, provided the pastry be baked before filling.

Pine-Apple Pie.—This may be made of either fresh or canned pine-apple. If the pine-apple is in slices, it should be chopped fine; to one large cup of pine-apple allow one cup of sugar, half a cup of butter, one cup of sweet cream, four eggs; reserve the whites for the top of the pie, as it should have an under crust only. Do not throw away the juice left in the can; it makes a nice flavoring for pudding sauce, or with the addition of a little gelatine and sugar you may make a small bowl of delicious jelly.

Substitute for Wine, Brandy and Cider in Pies and other Cooking.—If when canning fruit in the summer, a portion of the fruit juices, which almost always go farther than the fruit and more than fill the cans, is saved, and either canned or bottled by itself, this makes an excellent wetting for mince meat. Currant or grape jelly heated and thinned by water, is another delicious substitute for strong liquors. For mince pies the juice of the meat that is left after careful boiling is a valuable addition to the mixture. For sauces, lemon, orange or cherry juice or syrup is the finest flavoring nature produces.

MEATS.

Roast Goose.—Stuff the goose with a potato dressing made in the following manner: Six potatoes, boiled, pared, and mashed fine and light; one tablespoonful of salt; one teaspoonful of pepper; one spoonful of sage; two tablespoonfuls of onion juice, two of butter. Truss and dredge well with salt, pepper and flour. Roast before the fire (if weighing eight pounds) one hour and a half; in the oven one hour and a quarter. Make gravy the same as for turkey. No butter is required for goose, it is so fat. Serve with apple sauce.

Rissoles of Chicken.—Mince very finely some remnants of chicken freed from skin, etc.; add an equal quantity of ham or tongue and a little chopped parsley. Heat in a saucepan with a good sized piece of butter mixed with a large pinch of flour; add white pepper, salt and nutmeg to taste; moisten with a little stock or hot water; then stir in, off the fire, one or two yolks of eggs beaten up, with a squeeze of lemon, and lay the mixture on a plate to get cool. Make a paste with some flour, a little water, two eggs, a pinch of salt, and two or three of sugar; roll it out to the thickness of a penny piece, stamp it out in round pieces three inches in diameter; put a piece of the above mince on each, then fold it up, fasten the edges by moistening them with water, and trim them neatly with a fluted cutter. Dip each rissole in a beaten-up egg, and fry a nice color in hot lard; serve with fried parsley.

WHEAT PUDDING.—To one quart of sweet milk allow nearly half a cupful of cracked wheat; put it in a pudding dish and bake slowly for two hours, stirring it several times. If you choose to do so you can add raisins and a little cinnamon for flavoring, but most people prefer it well salted, and to eat it with a little cream and sugar. This is nice both warm and cold.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Jan. 20. LESSON III. 1884.

LESSON TEXT.—James 3: 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—By thy words thou shalt be justified' and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. Matt. 12: 37.

TIME.—A. D. 50.

PLACE.—James wrote from Jerusalem "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad."

TEACHINGS FOR TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

1. Doubtless in the early church, there were many injudicious persons consumed with zeal, but not exercising it according to knowledge. Doubtless these vexed the souls of the apostles very much as the "itching teachers" of temperance in these latter days vex the wise and true temperance reformer. To such as these James addresses nis exhortation. "Be not many masters," or paraphrased it might easily read, "Be not self-appointed and presumptuous teachers, for on the teacher rests a solemn responsibility, and those who realize this will not be swift to take upon themselves the office. We are all liable to err, and the wisest of us make mistakes, but he who is able to keep his tongue from all evil is one who can talk and act to edification." The ever practical James does not mince matters. He confronts the would-be apostles with what was doubtless the chief manifestation of their unfitness for the office, viz., loud professions, and conceit of themselves. The temperance reform often needs winnowing, even as does the church of today and yesterday.

2. Is the tongue still an unruly evil? And is our cause suffering from it in any way? It behooves us to ask this question often and to answer it solemnly before God. If in this work which was delivered to us from God, there is backbiting, cruel slander, or still more cruel insinuation, we need the apostolic injunction, "These things ought not so to be." If there is partisanship or party rivalry manifested in unlovely expression or unkind criticism among us, then shall we do well to take to ourselves the conclusion of the whole matter reached by the eminently wise old apostle, "This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, DEVILISH." And perhaps we need the word of caution as to "words of blessing." Socrates, when asked what was the beast most dangerous to man, answered, "of tame beasts, the flatterer; of wild beasts, the slanderer." There is as deadly a poison in the lips of the flatterer as in the sting of the calumniator. Let us beware of it, for our own sakes, and for the sakes of those whom we might injure by exaggerated and undue expressions of admiration.

3. If ever any reform demanded for its success "the wisdom from above," it is the great reform of today, the abolition of the liquor traffic. First of all it needs pure h arts, those which are moved by no selfish purpose. "Then peaceable," if purity be the inward state, peace is sure to follow, not the peace of inaction but of perfect, frictionless action. "Gentle" is this wisdom from above, also. How much we need gentleness of spirit and of manner in dealing with an evil that so curses and blasts our brightest and best beloveds. "Easy to be entreated" cannot mean an easy going over to the enemy, no matter in what angelic guise he may appear; it is the reverse of obstinacy and proud stiffness in holding to a position because we have once taken it. The world, the flesh and the devil would not long withstand the reformers who could justly lay claim to such blessed characteristics, for "the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for them that make peace."

Our Children.

TOUCH IT NEVER.

Children, do you see the wine
In the crystal goblet shine?
Be not tempted by its charm;
It will surely lead to harm.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Do you know what causeth woe
Bitter as the heart can know?
'Tis that self-same ruby wine
Which would tempt that soul of thine.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Never let it pass your lips:
Never even let the tips
Of your fingers touch the bowl;
Hate it from your inmost soul.
Truly hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Fight it! With God's help stand fast
Long as life or breath shall last,
Heart meet heart, and hand join hand—
Hurl the demon from our land.
O, then, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever! —Selected.

PARTNERS.

I was sitting one day last week by Mrs. Grave's worktable, engaged in the delightful task of teaching her the shell-stitch in crochet, when the door was burst open as if a cyclone were coming, and her ten-year-old boy bounced in. He made a polite bow, it is true, but I felt that he was a very unpleasant occurrence, for he stumbled over my feet and upset our basket of worsteds, and seized his mother around the neck for a whispering in a thoroughly tumultuous and uncomfortable way. He received a gentle rebuke for his undue haste and carelessness, and permission, evidently, to go to the bureau drawer, where I watched him upsetting a pile of clean handkerchiefs and bringing forth in triumph—a fishing-hook!

"Does your mother always let you treat her places that way, Frank?" I asked.

The bright, eager face turned upon me with a surprised look, and then, with a sunny glance across the table, said: "Oh! mother and I are partners."

Partners! I felt a sudden pang in thinking of my own well-regulated nursery, whose clock-like rules permitted no such invasion of my places by my young folks.

"I won't go above the dam, mother," were the boy's parting words, as the door closed with a bang that alarmed the plaster.

"Frank is not always so noisy," apologized his mother. "He is very much excited now, and I must save my little lecture about his want of consideration until it will be more likely to avail something."

"But do you give your children such right of way through all your places?" I asked, my interest in the shell-stitch all gone.

"Not quite all," she answered, laughing. "I have a few little nooks that are sacredly my own; but only a few. Frank uses the right word when he says we are 'partners', and I don't know when he has enjoyed anything as much as being allowed to keep that new fishing-hook in my pile of handkerchiefs;" and the mother laughed afresh at the odd hiding-place the boy had invented.

But I was burdened with a consciousness that I should have snubbed my young man upon any such unreasonable proposal, and I pressed the discussion.

"How can you keep any order, or teach any order?" I asked, rather petulantly, "if you do not insist upon things being kept in their right places?"

"I do try to check the troublesome propensity to leave things lying around," answered my companion; "but Elise, don't you remember from your own childhood how much nicer and more secure our mothers' places seemed for our treasures? That new fishing-hook is of the same value to Frank that your diamond ring is to you; more, indeed, for it gives him more lively pleasure, I am sure, and no place of his own seemed good enough for it. It was a very small sacrifice on my part to allow him to tumble my clean handkerchiefs; but the gratitude it awakened in that precious little heart has bubbled up and over in many a kiss and caress that was infinitely sweet to me."

"He got the word 'partners' from a story they are fond of hearing me tell, of a bit of my childhood's experience. I had some bad tricks, as a child, that were hard to correct, and one was playing in the fire. Living in the country, big wood-fires blazed on our hearths all winter, and seemed an irresistible temptation to me. Of course I was punished, time and again, but nothing ever seemed to cure me, until one day my mother found me with long pieces of twisted paper, trying to see how near the flame I could hold them without their lighting. Instead of the punishment I expected, my mother sat down by me on the floor, and played in the fire with me for half an hour. By that time my craving was satisfied, and the morbid fascination that the forbidden pleasure had exercised over me was gone. 'Now, Nellie,' said my mother, as she brushed up the litter, 'we are partners in this game, and it will be very unfair if you ever try to play it without me.' I never did, and the idea of being 'partners' with mother held me with a strong grasp all my life; it brought me to mother's side with many a question of this or that, which I am persuaded most young people settle for themselves and often settle the wrong way."

I began to feel sorry for my poor little well-managed children, who had never known the sweetness of playing "partners" with mamma; but they were young enough, thank God, to begin yet, and I trusted I was not too old to learn.

"Aren't you afraid to trust Frank to go to the mill-stream?" I asked, kissing my friend good-by; it's horridly deep above the dam."

"He never goes above the dam," she replied, with proud content; "that's a part of the partnership."—Illustrated Christian Advocate.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES.

No. 49.—Nearly ten years since, Mrs. E. Thompson became impressed with the idea that it was woman's duty to help put down the traffic in strong drink. Calling together a few Christian women and committing their cause to God, went forth to prove the truth contained in the 3rd verse of the crusade psalm.

ARE THE TITHES ALL IN?

Some one has said, "The evangelization of the world is only a question of money." Although a strong assertion, does not the history of mission work go far to prove that it is well founded? If the conversion of souls has not been directly proportionate to the money expended, has not all that has been accomplished been largely dependent upon this same means?

Like Israel of old, we have been slow to learn the connection between the command, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse," and the promise "and prove me now herewith if I will not open the window of heaven and pour you out a blessing," or in claiming this promise we have thought to render spiritual rather than material tithes.

If as we study this question we conclude that money as well as time and talent must be expended freely, lavishly even, though judiciously, if we would see the world brought to Christ must we not as workers together with God in the department of Christ's work specially dear to us, that of the W. C. T. U., have borne in upon our hearts and consciences the vital relation which money, as a means to the end so earnestly desired, sustains to our work?

As is too often the case, the children of this world have been wiser than the children of light, in this matter. Whenever they have had a point to carry, the instructions have been to spare not. Accomplish the work at whatever cost.

If the interests they have at stake are so precious, are ours less so?

Is not the freeing of souls from the bondage of drink a work of quite as great moment as the fastening of the chains that constitute the bondage?

It is well worth our while, our enemies themselves being judges, to use every available means to so mould the minds of our children that total abstinence may become to them as truly a living principle as the air they breathe. To accomplish this we need scientific temperance instruction made compulsory in every school sustained by public money. We need the educating power of wholesome temperance literature felt in every home in our land; we need temperance evangelists to present our cause "in the regions beyond," where, as many of our best workers will testify, that the fields are white already for the harvest, souls are positively hungering for the truth, hearts are wide open to receive it, and we have but to enter and possess the land Our work does not lag for want of ways by which to extend it; our leaders are not embarrassed by a dearth of opportunities for work, but "How can they hear without a preacher, and how can they preach except they be sent?" and yet again how can they be sent without money? Then to do effectual work, our workers must be sent out fully equipped, ammunition in the shape of helps in organization, instructions for successfully prosecuting the various lines of work, literature with which to educate public sentiment, various attractions for winning and holding "the children all both great and small," must not be wanting All this cannot be obtained without money, for lo! the printer must be paid! As the work opens before them must our leaders hesitate and falter before an empty treasury? While much has been accomplished during the ten years just past, and we have every reason to be grateful for our success, and to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" what might have been accomplished had our funds been to any degree adequate to our need, cannot be estimated.

Shall the record of the next ten years tell a similar story? God forbid! We have but to turn to Ohio's grand campaign to learn what a wise expenditure of a little money will do for us. "It was a famous victory," but it cost money, and who will say it was not a paying investment. Part of the dividends have been declared here. The better part will be declared when the Master's "Well done" is heard. Mrs. Buell, the national corresponding secretary, asked the ladies of the Detroit convention to mercifully blindfold her if with her hands tied for lack of money she must another year be pained by the sight of the great work to be done. Shall we not rather free the hands and unburden the hearts of all our leaders from highest officer down to humblest private, by keeping our treasuries, national, state district and local, full, that from them may flow that life giving, life saving influence which shall surely bring our prohibition bark "into the desired haven," at no distant day? Besides these considerations there is the awful fact that in the great stress and burden of this brick making without straw we are wearing out the lives of our workers at a rate God never intended, with cruel thoughtlessness of them and with a prodigality of expenditure that bodes no good to our cause. We shall need them for many years yet, and can poorly afford to squeeze them like oranges and throw away what yields us no more healing juices. "If the W. C. T. U. had a million dollars this year we should have prohibition in three years," said one recently who has every reason to know how the land lies—and who can say hers is not "righteous judgment?"

The prize is before us. It is worthy every effort, every sacrifice. Paul says, "Therefore so run, not as uncertainly: so fight I, not as one that beateth the air." We have obliged our leaders to run "uncertainly," to fight "as one that beateth the air" long enough. Let us now, with one accord, enable them to lay aside every weight that they, with us, may apprehend that for which we have surely been "apprehended of Christ Jesus." "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain."

A very late reply from Miss Margaret Winslow to the question, "What did the crusade do for you?" is so good that though out of date we give it a place.

"The crusade movement and its developments led me out of conventionalism and closely drawn denominational lines and taught me the right use of a woman's special weapon, her tongue. Before that sudden impulse I thought it almost sacrilege for man a to speak or pray in public unless he was an ordained minister, and for a woman to do so, words fail to express the enormity of the thought. I learned too, for the first time practically, to depend upon the power of an indwelling Holy Spirit for present work, and what it is to be an instrument in the Lord's hands. In the course of these ten years I have come into such close contact with sin, crime and suffering as to feel that the so called higher stratum of intellectual culture is of comparatively slight importance, and that to "rescue the perishing" is the chief aim of life.

The position which I once held in the N. W. C. T. U. greatly broadened my range of vision and thought. I learned there that men and women may differ widely in their views cencerning the details of a subject, and even as to the methods of attaining an end, and yet be one in honest devotion to that end itself. And I have learned also a little of the patient toleration and Christian love so essential to the workers in a great reform, and that underneath all the agitations caused by conflicting currents of thought lies the immovable rock foundation that those who honestly work for God and for humanity are one in Christ Jesus."

Miss Winslow, in her new editorship, that of the organ of the New York W. C. T. U., entitled "Our Work," is as happy and at home as she always is in the editorial chair, and the paper is already bright, newsy and uplifting.

THE HON. D. C. HASKELL, member of congress from Kansas, has just died at the age of forty-one, from "over work and over smoke," so say the dispatches, and the Kansas press. He was an athlete physically, six feet three inches tall, and weighed 225 pounds. To his familiars in politics he was known as, "the tall young oak of the Kaw." When in college, at Yale, at the bat and ball, in boating, in the gymnasium, he had no superior. In early life he dies a victim of the two evils named above. He threw all his energies into the study of economic questions, and expended his best powers and his life in their defense. During the long hours of the night that he devoted to the study of industrial questions he was an inveterate and constant smoker. Even during the sessions of the house he persisted in his "day smoke" and the inevitable chewing of the stump of the cigar. Perfectly temperate in all other things it was his only bad habit, but even an exceptional physique surrendered to it. Congressman Haskell was a Christian, a deacon in the Congregational church of Lawrence, an earnest Sunday school worker, and a man fitted by endowment and culture for life's best work.

ON Friday, December 28, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore spoke for an hour before the Massachusetts state teacher's association, in the hall of the girl's high and normal school in Boston. There were present, the superintendent of the city schools, the school supervisors, the board of education, most of the Boston school committee, the principals of almost all the high schools, and normal schools in the state, besides an array of grand educational men and women. They expressed to Mrs. Livermore their unanimous sympathy with the movement, to obtain scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, and their entire willingness to help it forward in any way possible.

I don't mind THE UNION SIGNAL'S saying that Dio Lewis' magazine is a good one, but I do wish he wouldn't advertise Hop Bitters, with their fourteen and one-half per cent. of alcohol. I don't see any "moral suasion" in that—do you?

* * * * *

Nebraska, I learn, has six prohibition counties. They are York, Polk, Custer, Nuckolls, Merrick and Pawnee, Yes, and in New York township there is a justice of the peace who keeps the peace—I know. His name is William E. Morgan.

* * * * *

"Robin dinners," they call them over in "Merrie England"—these dinners for the poor at Christmas time. Five thousand people are feasted by Robin every year on George Herbert's principle that

All worldly joys go lesse
To the one joy of doing kindnesse.

* * * * *

There is between the two oceans the treasurer of a local W. C. T. U. who does not, or did not until recently know who is president of the National W. C. T. U. She will not be vexed at this announcement as she never sees THE UNION SIGNAL—indeed there is but one copy taken in her town.

* * * * *

German mothers, how is this? A German in the Keokuk Post, says that the German home is too strong in its moral foundation to be endangered by saloons. Answer the scores of German women who came to the polls on the famous election day in Rockford, Ill., and voted against the saloon for home protection.

* * * * *

I notice that the editor is using a copy of Drs. Vincent's and Hurlburt's International Sunday School Lessons, and on inquiry I find that she thinks it about the best of all the Sunday school lesson commentaries, and that it was laid on her table about Christmas time by the publishers, Walden and Stowe of Cincinnati.

* * * * *

The Fall River (Ct.) W. C. T. U. gets out at holiday time a brave sheet of daily newspaper size, called Holiday Advertiser. Its name does not belie its contents for it is "chock full" of advertising and sandwiched in is good temperance reading matter. Just a word with you though, in private dear women. Don't you think it would have been juster to have given credit to THE UNION SIGNAL for Mrs. Mary Dye's beautiful story "Echoes from the Kindergarten"?

* * * * *

Some people that I know are working to advertise gold cures and cinchona cures and all sorts of things for drunkenness. I cannot join them, having seen the failure of all these specifics too often, and being convinced to the roots of my being that there is no absolute cure for a drunken will but the grace of God, the clean heart created (out of nothing), in the poor abused body. "Lord give us such a faith as this."

* * * * *

The Rev. W. S. Wood, whose careful and statistical pen has enriched the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL in times past (and why those only, I wonder), is out in a timely tract entitled, "A Temperance Argument from Insurance Figures." It is just the thing to put in the hands of business men, and can be had from the author at Oil City Pennsylvania, for forty cents a hundred.

* * * * *

A sad bereavement has come to the W. C. T. U. of Mansfield, Pa., in the death of its president, Mrs. A. M. Brownell, who has officiated, as such from its first organization. She was the wife of the Rev. J. T. Brownell, and a devoted worker in church and all benevolent circles.

* * * * *

This is a woman's logic—(Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine.) Fault it who can.

I am more and more inclined to fight the temperance question out on this line so far as argument is concerned. Is liquor selling wrong? Then no compromise;—even though it does cost more, even though people do get drunk more (?) in ten places of one quart stock in trade, than in a hundred of a hundred barrels; even though it does cost more to enforce a law than to care for its victims in almshouses, houses of correction, etc. (?) If it is right, it will come out like a dose of bitter medicine,—the better for the taking.

* * * * *

The Rev. Dr. Magoun, president of Grinnell College, Iowa, has written a manly "open letter" to John Bright on the fallacies of his argument for placing the licensing power in the municipal authorities, and answering his points of objection to prohibition. As a native of Maine he speaks with authority and not as the scribes of some political newspapers.

* * * * *

Among other pertinent things President Magoun informs the great English statesman that of the eight hundred towns and villages of Maine, actual search has only discovered fifteen where liquors are sold for drinking purposes. This is stated on the authority of Governor Robie.

* * * * *

Another astonishing fact which has followed prohibition in Maine is that the death rate has been reduced from one in fifty-four to one in three hundred. As Dr. Magoun says:

If a similar statement were made respecting England by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, we should receive it with implicit belief. May I not ask that the word and testimony of the American statesman shall have like credit?

* * * * *

It never seemed to me that the Chicago Journal needed so much purification, but it has thrice passed through the fires; and comes out like the pure gold that it is, brighter than ever. While the Journal is strictly a party paper, it never descends to abuse of "fanatics" or does aught but countenance and aid all good movements save when they disrupt or threaten to disrupt the republican party. Then it remonstrates with dignity, but really I expect to see it waving the prohibition banner yet.

* * * * *

That good man, Edward S. Morris, whose manufactures of Liberian products go to endow a missionary school in Liberia, must have felt the bitterness of sorrow when an African chief who visited his son at this free school asked, "What make Morris man he do this thing?" Annd on receiving answer, "Morris man is a Christ man," said bluntly, "If Morris man be a Christ man then he must drink liquor and get drunk." The Lord Jesus is still most wounded in the house (country) of his friends.

* * * * *

Here is a wise woman who answers her own questions. It is Mrs. W, D. Gould, of Los Angeles, first president of the W. C. T. U., of Southern California, who writes to THE UNION SIGNAL:

My husband and I have been thinking very much of late, if it could influence us so much who are veterans in the temperance cause, how grand must be the results if some way could be devised to have it weekly reach every member of the W. C. T. U. How can it be done? Will some of our wise sisters answer? Enclosed I send the names of fifty-five of the members of the Los Angeles Union, who do not take THE UNION SIGNAL, with the money for a three months' subscription or each, beginning with the Memorial number.

* * * * *

The New Year's card of the Michigan Central Railway, just sent out, is both "straw" showing the direction of the new drink sentiment, and a prophecy of the future. A veteran huntsman sits on the edge of an old stone well curb, the bucket bearing the legend "1884," and the uplifted glass, in the hand that does not tremble, is clear and bright with cold water. This is the "straw." The inscription is, "Here vas to your goot health, und your families goot health, und the Michigan Central's goot health,and may you live long and prosper," a prophecy of the day when the solid German becomes a truly American citizen. Cantilever bridges don't begin to test as well for progress.

* * * * *

Besides other good things that President Magoun has done, in a recent lecture before the Iowa teachers' association he made a strong plea for scientific temperance instruction in all schools. What a sermon there is in this little extract from it:

How absurd to go on forever correcting men's abuse of a delicate and costly engine, after it has come into their unskilled hands, and never think of instructing them at the beginning in normal methods of handling it, in the doctrine of use and abuse! How absurd to be forever reforming backward the immensest vice of our day, from the point in maturer life of outbreak and outrage and ruin of fortune, health, character, household and social order, and never think of informing childhood how to escape it all! How wasteful and blind to bring upon ourselves this vast and exhaustive struggle with the saloon—almost omnipresent and everywhere complete in its deadly, shameless and diabolical enginery of corruption—when so easily we might forestall it all in the schools, make it a part of every lad's education to be temperate, and ensure his standing with his fellows, when he comes to man's estate, for "a school-house on every hill top and no saloon in the valley."

* * * * *

I recommend to the Rev. R. B. Pope, of Ann Arbor, who says that the drink habit does not produce damaging hereditary influence the experience of Dr. Henry Maudsley, who once traced back for four generations the history of an idiotic child. In the first generation he found the habit of drinking—the ancestor in this degree being killed in a tavern brawl. In the next he found hereditary drunkenness, ending in paralysis. In the third, the father of the child was sober by habit, but the victim of delusions and diseased tendencies, and in the fourth stupidity and idiocy developing at sixteen years. Dr. S. G. Howe, of Massachusetts, also found that fifty per cent of the idiots he examined were the children of intemperate parents.

ON DUTY.

CRUSADE ANNIVERSARIES.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—The anniversary meeting was held in the Baptist tabernacle in the evening. The main feature of the occasion was a very graphic and interesting address by Miss Burnett, a teacher from Tullahoma, Tenn., formerly of Ohio, giving an account of the temperance movement in Ohio and other states inaugurated and carried on by the women during the last ten years. Other speakers followed.

Judge Archibald concluded his remarks by reading a statement procured at the United States Internal Revenue Office for the district of Florida, showing the number of United States licenses applied for by retail dealers during the last half of the year 1882 (before the local option law was passed) and the last half of the year 1883 (after the law was passed), which is here appended:

Statement of the number of special tax stamps issued to retail liquor dealers in the district of Florida during the six months ended December 31, 1882:

S. C. THOMPSON, Deputy Collector.

FAIRPORT, N. Y.—The exercises were inspiring and held the large audience full of interest to the last. A praise service was conducted by Mrs. E. Marring. Mrs. G. Brooks gave a sketch of the crusade as begun in Hillsboro, Ohio. Another paper on crusade work in Washington, was given by Mrs. M. Olney. "Judge Thompson's Views of the Crusade" were ably presented by Mrs. J. Butler. These were all thrilling and again awakened wonder at the divine courage that animated the authors of this movement. Mr. E. H. Griffith and Rev. R. R. Davies contributed most interesting personal reminiscences concerning scenes they had witnessed. Mrs. E. H. Griffith described the organization of the National W. C. T. U. and a summary of what it has done. Mrs. N. R. Edgett gave a telling address on "Departments of our Work." The anniversary was held in the Free Baptist church, which was tastefully decorated, and the choir gave beautiful music.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The service was held in a Presbyterian church and was conducted by home workers. It was the first public appearance of two who took part, and thus some of the marvel of the crusade was wrought over again. The church was decorated with our motto across the platform, and the designs for illustration were a white cross surrounded by Christmas greens; the engraving of Mrs. Hayes and the pulpit draped in a large flag. The addresses were good and two of our best papers gave reports of the service next day. We give the program below:

BIG RAPIDS, MICH.—The anniversary meeting was held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The deeply interesting history of the local labors and achievements of the temperance cause in Big Rapids, was read by Mrs. A. R. Morehouse. At the inception of the great reform in Hillsboro, a decade since, a young girl read the 146th Psalm, so Miss Maria Upton, of the Ovid Seminary, repeated the reading on this occasion, and it was very lofty and impressive. After this, Mrs. J. B. Upton gave a most instructive historic review of the great national work now being systematically carried on. Services closed with the temperance doxology.

KIRKWOOD, MO.—A grand meeting was held in the town hall, at 3 p. m., which was beautifully decorated with banners, mottoes, Christmas green and flowers, with a white dove over all, emblematic of the spirit by which we conquer, when neither power nor might are ours. The National program was carried out fully, holding a union prayer meeting the Wednesday previous, and a memorial sermon being preached by Rev. Mr. Martin, of the Baptist church, in the morning. Beside the usual exercises several beautiful solos were given, adding greatly to the pleasure of the occasion. Mrs. Dr. Fisher read the "History of the Crusade," and Mrs. S. F. Grubb, "Whittier's letter," and a fine address was given by Prof. John S. Collins, of Clarksville, Tenn. Although the day was unpropitious, the "thank-offering" amounted to fifty dollars, so that after paying all expenses, the offering to the National society will still amount to thirty-five dollars.

MT. VERNON, ILL.—The Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist congregations held a union service in the church of the latter, presided over by Mrs. R. E. Taylor, president of the W. C. T. U. Thanksgiving leaflets were distributed by two young ladies while the second hymn was being sung. Mrs. Joel Watson read extracts from the "Minutes of the Hillsboro Crusade," and then the "History of Ten Years," as reported in the crusade memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL. The Rev. E. Muse, pastor of the Presbyterian church, and Dr. J. R. Locke, pastor of the Methodist church, addressed the audience. The services were beautifully varied with song and prayer. An announcement was made that the W. C. T. U. would spread lunches Christmas eve and Christmas day free of charge. The services closed with the benediction by Rev. Midkiff, pastor of the Baptist church.

LEWISTON, ILL.—Notwithstanding the storm and almost impassable walks of Sunday evening, the opera house was well filled with people who assembled in honor of the tenth anniversary of the woman's crusade. There was a praise service occupying fifteen minutes in which seventeen ladies and gentlemen took part. Mrs. Rev. George distinctly and beautifully read a sketch of the crusade. Rev. Mr. Woolley offered an appropriate prayer, and brief addresses were made by himself and Rev. Mr. Harrison. The main address was by Rev. Mr. George, and it was one of the finest ever heard in the city. A choir under the direction of Jos. Foote, sang several appropriate hymns, and sang them well. A collection in aid of woman's work for temperance was taken up. It amounted to $7.26. The meeting closed with the doxology and the benediction by Rev. Mr. George.

BROOKFIELD, MO.—The W. C. T. U. held its anniversary at Strawbridge Hall in the evening, conforming as nearly as possible to the National program. The audience gave earnest attention throughout. A good word was spoken for THE UNION SIGNAL, and the expectation is that a list of subscribers will soon be sent from Brookfield. The collection amounted to over four dollars.

MRS. MCLAUGHLIN'S WORK.

Knowing that you like to know the whereabouts of your "representative women," and to know the work they are doing, I want to tell you that the temperance cause has received a grand push in our county from Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin, of Boston, who has just held seven meetings here under the auspices of the Dominion Temperance Alliance and the W. C. T. U.

It was my privilege to be present at five of these meetings, and each one was better than the preceding one. She is equal to every occasion, she is like an old war-horse, of which I once read, who only needed to hear the sound of the bugle or trumpet to start up and be ready and eager for the fray, and God be praised that she has sounded the gospel temperance trumpet loud and clear in our midst, and it gave no "uncertain sound."

Owing to a severe snow storm in Boston, on the 17th, Mrs. McLaughlin delayed starting for one train which brought her to a junction seven miles away, where, if she waited for the train, she would be kept too late for the meeting here at Knowlton, which had been largely advertised for that evening. So I sent a carriage and wraps for her, and a note to tell her of the situation, and though by that time the wind was blowing fiercely, nothing daunted, she came on. She was introduced by our member of parliament, and found an audience which filled the hall and had been waiting patiently for an hour, and who sat and listened for another hour and a half, and then wished she would continue her lecture. A ladies' drawing-room meeting the next day, at which, after Mrs. McLaughlin had addressed us, questions were freely asked and answered, was most helpful.

As our trains ran at unreasonable hours for us to keep appointments, and the roads were good, we drove ten miles to Waterloo, where she again addressed a large and appreciative audience. Five ministers of various denominations were upon the platform, and took part in the meeting, the venerable archdeacon Lindsay acting as chairman. The most hearty sympathy with the work was expressed by each.

The next day she went to East Farnham, the home of the secretary of the Dominion Alliance, who had been so indefatigable in securing her services for the county, and where, supported by the various ministers of the gospel, two more enthusiastic meetings were held. Then on to Sutton, where she held a drawing-room meeting, and also a public meeting in a church, crowded with eager listeners, at which meeting the president of the Dominion Temperance Alliance presided. The reception accorded to her at all these meetings was most warm and enthusiastic, and she won to the temperance side many who stood halting between "two opinions."

As soon as her lecture was over we bade a hasty adieu, and she took her place behind the iron horse, en route to Great Falls, N. H., where she was to hold meetings on the 23d, and I entered my carriage and sped in an opposite direction. During the first two and a half miles, our road which was new to me, crossed the railway track six times. We could hear the various trains signaling to each other, and our horses felt the danger as well as we. So in a quiet place, with the trees shrouding us from either side, we waited until the trains had passed us.

"We heard the gentle steps of the snow
Coming down from its home, at God's right hand;
As the angels came softly, long ago,
To the fragrant hills of the holy land."

I thought how like my position then was to others who hear the truths of temperance, and go away, the good seed in their hearts,—with difficult paths to tread—dangers behind and before, but with watchfulness and care, safe.

These lectures are what we need all over Canada. Those to speak on this great question, both men and women, whose lips, like this dear sister's "the Lord hath touched," who have heard His voice speaking to them, and who, having answered Him, have been made both willing and fit for God's work, and then sent by Him. Isaiah. vi: 7–8–9.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF TEMPERANCE CRUSADE AT HILLSBORO.

The marvellous growth of the temperance crusade since its inception, the evening and morning of the 23d and 24th of December, 1883, which rendered our hitherto quiet and conservative village a very "Bethlehem in the land of Judah," is aptly illustrated by the ancient legend of the tent in a walnut, brought by an oriental prince to the king, his father, which being unfolded, covered the king, the counselors, the kingdom and the world.

Responsive to the invitation of the local union, Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the N. W. C. T. U., accompanied by her secretary and companion, Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Esther Pugh, National treasurer, and others, were present at the anniversary exercises.

The reception and collation given at music hall Saturday evening, December 22, was, in view of the almost unprecedented storm, socially and financially remunerative.

The pastors of the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches gave appropriate discourses. The former, the Rev. W. J. McSurely, D. D., from the text, 93d Psalm, first verse, "The Lord reigneth," proved the universal dominion of the Messiah's kingdom a verity, and the latter, the Rev. C. W. Ketcham, D. D., from Mark, 14th chapter and 18th verse, gave forceful expression to the truth that woman's responsibility is commensurate with her ability.

A children's meeting in the Presbyterian church, Sunday 2, p. m., was conducted by Miss Anna Gordon, who by her exceptionally simple manner of imparting important truths, is singularly adapted for juvenile work.

The careful training of the little ones was manifested in the quick and intelligent responses given, as also to the subsequent pertinent remarks by Miss Esther Pugh. Appropriate music varied the exercises.

A Murphy meeting was to have been conducted in the city hall at 3. p. m., by Dr. McSurely, but in consequence of his indisposition the Rev. Mr. Shade presided.

The feature of the hour was Miss Willard's address, which opened by the touching relation of the surrender of her cherished pursuits in literature and art, that she might accept the call of the Master, to become an evangel to "the great unwashed, untaught, ungospelled multitude." An illustration of the truth that the power which raises man God-ward and heaven-ward is the acceptance of Christ in the heart, and not in the vaunted mental culture of the school of liberal thought.

Thrilling instances were given of reformations effected through the instrumentality of the W. C. T. U. The music by the Murphy choir, always good, was especially so on this occasion.

In the evening a mass meeting was held at the M. E. church, Mrs. E. J. Thompson presiding.

There was first a choice voluntary by the choir, and then the large audience united in singing the crusade hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," after which prayer was offered by the Rev. J. W. Weatherby, pastor of the Baptist church, Seville, Ohio.

The crusade psalm, 146th, was read by Miss Esther Pugh, who is evidently the embodiment of the stern unflinching principles of the William Penn faith, with the unwearying never-give-up spirit of the W. C. T.U.

In Miss Willard's address the results of the decade closing were accurately formulated. With finely cultured powers, views as enlarged as her opportunities for observation, Miss Willard possesses the rare gift of "converging conviction into spiritual force."

The battle hymn of the crusade was effectively rendered as quartet and chorus.

A liberal contribution was made to the National treasury. The exercises closed with the benediction pronounced by Rev. John Pierson, P.E., of the Hillsboro district.

ARIZONA.

MRS. SHIELDS' ORGANIZING TRIP.

The organization of Arizona is an accomplished fact. My reception was the heartiest, and everything was judiciously arranged by the ladies, so earnest in the work. I arrived at Ash Park, the station nearest to Prescott—fifty-seven miles distant—at four in the morning, found Lieutenant Maus, of Whipple Barracks, ready to receive me. Col. Clendenin had sent an ambulance, with a trusted soldier to escort me, with blankets, rugs and everything they could do to add to my comfort in the ride, but with all that it is a terrible ride through the canon. We left the station before daylight, with a team of six mules, and bumped, bumped until after dark, before we met the warm welcome of Col. Clendenin and his wife on the steps of their quarters at Whipple Barracks. As we were jolting along the thought came to me continually, "Will it pay? Will it pay?" but I was so warmly received (for my works' sake), and the women were so grateful that the work was sent to them, that the ride back did not seem one half as long as in going over, and the song of my heart was, "It paid! It paid!"

We held our convention, Dec. 12 and 13, in the Congregational church, Mrs. Clendenin opening with a beautiful address of welcome. Held a large mass meeting in the court-house Wednesday evening, and a reception at the M. E. church Thursday night.

Chief Justice French made a most eloquent address of welcome, at the court-house, and I replied as well as I could on behalf of the hundred thousand women of our organization whose prayers and sympathies were with Arizona in those days. The third cavalry band gave excellent music. The room was crowded to its utmost capacity. Col. Clendenin issued an order in camp excusing all soldiers from tattoo call who would go up to the meeting.

I stopped over at Holbrook, A. T., and organized a W. C. T. U., after speaking in the dining-room of the hotel: President, Mrs. McDonald; corresponding secretary, Miss Mattie B. McCullough, superintendent of literature and agent for THE UNION SIGNAL, Mrs. Frank.

MARY F. SHIELDS.

FURTHER FROM ARIZONA TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.

Reports were received Wednesday from the W. C. T. Unions of Prescott, Tucson, Tombstone, Williamson's Valley and Ash Creek. On Thursday the committee on organization presented a draft for a constitution for a permanent organization which was adopted. The committee on nominations also made a report, and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. S. D. Clendenin, Prescott; corresponding secretary, A. D. Adams, Prescott; recording secretary, Mrs. Judge Allen, Globe; vice president at large, Mrs. Edward Fish. Tucson; treasurer, Mrs. E. I. Roberts, Prescott.

County Vice Presidents:—Mrs. Edward Fish, Tucson; Mrs. J. O. Smith, Tombstone; Mrs. Zuck, Holbrook; Mrs. Judge Allen, Globe; Eliza A. Ingalls, M. D., Phoenix; Miss Fletcher, Peach Springs.

Superintendents of Departments:— Literature and UNION SIGNAL, Mrs. T. W. Otis, Prescott; scientific instruction, Miss Mary Snyder, Prescott; juvenile and Sunday school work, Mrs. Wilson, Prescott; heredity and hygiene, E. A. Ingalls, M. D., Phoenix; unfermented wine, Mrs. N. L. Guthrie, Prescott; work among soldiers and sailors, Mrs. S. D. Clendenin, Prescott; prison, police, and reformatory work, Miss Lizzie Royce, Tucson; press department, Mrs. Jessie Medbury, Tucson; legislative and petition work, Mrs. C. P. Dake, Prescott; evangelistic work, Mrs. T. C. Hunt, Prescott.

The report of the committee on declaration of principles and resolutions was received and adopted.

This comprises acknowledgment of profound dependence upon God in the battle against intemperance, a resolution to use the utmost endeavor to create a high public sentiment against the manufacture, sale and use of alcoholic beverages; thankfulness for the influence of the churches and pastors on this question and a plea for still greater diligence and more practical preaching on this subject; urging the study of temperance hygiene, and the petitioning of school-boards to add such studies as show the effects of stimulants and narcotics upon the human system, and that all schools supported by public money be required by the legislature to introduce these studies exhorting to scrupulous perseverance in trying to influence such men to attend the preliminary caucus, which decides the selection of political aspirants, as will secure the election of tried and true temperance men; strongly protesting against the use of fermented wine at the Lord's table; a resolution to work to the utmost, to sow the territory "knee deep" with the best temperance literature, and a hearty recognition of THE UNION SIGNAL, with a pledge to aid as far as possible in obtaining subscribers and giving it a wider circulation; a re-statement of the principles of the declaration of independence as to the sacred right of every human being to liberty, with a resolution that "it is the sentiment of this body that the exclusion of woman from the possession and exercise of her natural rights, has been calamitous to the whole human race, inflicting great injury, upon both sons and daughters, cultivating in man a love of dominion, and in woman an unwomanly dependence, and farther, that the votes of woman are imperatively needed to promote temperance, purity and peace, to give woman greater self-reliance, self-respect, and personal independence, and to secure to her "a fair day's wages for a fair day's work,"—also that "in the progress and development of civilization new duties and responsibilities have been thrust upon us, therefore it is the duty of all intelligent women to accept a full recognition of equal civil and political rights." Thanks were returned to all who had aided in any way in making the convention a success, especially to Mrs. Shields for her genial and timely help. The evening after final adjournment a reception was tendered Mrs. Shields by the ladies of Prescott. Recitations and music varied the pleasures of the evening, followed by an elegant collation.

The whole was pronounced by all a brilliant success.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.—Mrs. J. Ellen Foster was invited to speak by the American Temperance Union, at Chickering hall, recently, and was introduced to fully fifteen hundred people on the occasion, as the speaker of the day. Her reception was most generous, from an audience of thinking men and women, a company of enthusiastic workers for temperance. President Bogardus occupied the chair. A few extracts are given from Mrs. Foster's eloquent address: "At the head of our nation is this great evil going on. But I do not despair. Already I feel strong again in my weakness. I stand on eternal principles which I know must and will go on, though we go down. But I do not believe we shall go down until we see the day that, like the anti-slavery movement, our end shall have been attained. Men in temporary authority in small towns tell us that we can't suppress the nefarious traffic in rum, and that we might as well regulate it. The outcome of this sentiment of practical politics is a little rum shop, and legislation is coerced thereby. Why, the boast of those opposed to temperance today is that the bonded whisky bill will make more trouble in the next congress than all other bills put together. It is declared that unless the government helps on the whisky interests by the desired legislation, the failures in business will be of a magnitude and number never before known Relieve the whisky interests of the country or we sweep the land with a pestilential financial panic. Where is there any other industry that dares to go to congress with such arrogance and seek to frighten it into compliance with its demands? What must we do then? Let us remember what Carlyle says: 'If we fight for justice the evil will be abolished and the truth shall endure.' Have we any causes for encouragement? Yes. What? Scientific testimony on the real effect of alcohol upon the human system. On this truth alone rests the whole superstructure. If alcohol be a benefit, then we have no right to seek to get men to abstain from its use. There is no justice in our war upon it. If it be an evil, then our battles are just and we should fight and attempt legislation against it. Gentlemen, remember this testimony. Benjamin Ward Richardson went into his laboratory a moderate drinker. He determined to find out the true nature of alcohol, so as to combat the truths promulgated by the temperance fanatic. He intended, aye, he desired, to prove alcohol a harmless beverage if not a positive specific for the majority of human ills. But after most careful analysis and study Benjamin Ward Richardson comes out of his laboratory a total abstainer. In the arrogance of his scientific knowledge he throws his testimony into the lap of reform, and today, in all parts of our land, the little children are studying Richardson's text book on alcohol. He did not intend to write it when he went into his laboratory, but God intended he should. So you see science brings its testimony to aid in this great work of reform."

MISSOURI.

JOPLIN.—Southwest Missouri is being aroused on the subject of temperance as other parts of the state have been heretofore. Mrs. Clara Hoffman has been speaking and organizing unions in this vicinity, and on Wednesday, December 12, at the close of a most effective address, she organized a union with eight members. The next evening, Mr. C. J. Holt commenced a series of meetings, which closed on Christmas day with crowded houses, both afternoon and evening. One hundred and fifty children are enrolled as cadets (two boys to one girl). A large number of adults from both the temperate and intemperate have joined our working forces, and our union has increased to thirty in membership. The work still goes on with signers to the pledge each night.

We have a most excellent corps of workers, notably Mrs. L. P. Cunningham, our president, and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McLane, formerly of Peoria, Ill. Mrs. M. M. Clardy, was with us a day, and is now working in adjoining counties, and so the work goes on. December 23 we had a union service in the Presbyterian church, where several addresses were made and good done, which we shall hear from in the future. We are also getting a list of subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. J. C. PLUMB, Secretary.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

ASBURY PARK AND OCEAN GROVE—W. C. T. Union is increasing in numbers under the leadership of Mrs. Crane, president. There is strong pressure made upon these places (owing to their prohibitory law and regulations) the rumseller does not reap here, and eternal vigilance is the price of our safety from his inroads. It is said that the supreme court has decided a case against us in favor of one who has done more to demoralize this community than any other through his den of iniquity just outside the limit of prohibition.

Three unions have been organized since our state annual meeting, in Sparta, Little Oxford and Mullica Hill. Our state work is grandly going on to completion. We can take no backward track.

LITTLE OXFORD.—Held a public meeting which was addressed by Mrs. Ellis, and a W. C. T. U. formed at the close of the meeting. While in Hoboken, our state publishing committee addressed two public meetings, one in the Scotch Presbyterian church and the other in the M. E. church. Mrs. Dr. McLean is president of that union, which is creating a healthful temperance sentiment. Revival services are being successfully held at Estellville and May's Landing.

BELVIDERE.—Also gave her a hearing, and at the earnest request of its citizens she returned the following Monday and spoke to an immense throng in the court house. The next morning being election day the ladies of the W. C. T. U. (which is all aglow with enthusiasm) held a temperance prayer meeting in the hall of the reform club.

HADDONFIELD.—The public good of this place has been assured for another year at least, as the Batesville Hotel, alias Blazing Rag, has been licensed for that purpose. Ten votes cast at the late election for prohibition. "Little by little" Haddonfield will be lifted to a higher and purer plane notwithstanding the Blazing Rag. How significant the name.

NEPTUNE TOWNSHIP.—Monmouth county gives our prohibition standard bearer a small majority, and he returns to the legislature where he so honored himself and his constituency last winter. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. were at the polls all day, with a good lunch and hot coffee for voters.

FLORENCE.—We regard the vote in the last canvass as the best test for prohibition strength that we have ever had, and we are encouraged to go on to that final victory whose day is not far off. The W. C. T. Union is prosperous and the juvenile work well organized.

TENAFLY.—Is strong on prohibition, and voted as they pray at the recent election. They are working hard for the redemption of that Apple Jack cursed county.

EAST WINDSOR.—Has a good working force in the temperance alliance. The quarterly meeting recently held at Hightstown was addressed by Rev. J. B. Graw.

PHILLIPSBURG.—The W. C. T. U. of this place and the reform club held recently a right royal meeting, which was addressed by Mrs. J. T. Ellis and others.

LUMBERTON.—Lodge has sixty-five members all working for the destruction of King Alcohol.

NEW MEXICO.

TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.

Our convention in New Mexico was held in the Presbyterian church. An address of welcome to the city was given by Mrs. Rhool and to the territory by Rev. Mr. Murphy of the Congregational church. Mrs. Samuel Hull, president of Santa Fe union replied to the former, and I to the latter. Rev. Mr. Kistlor, M. E. church, gave an address that was replete with interest. The next day we completed the organization, bringing in the last load of our sheaves for the harvest home with New Mexico as the cap-sheaf.

Mrs. Evalyn Snyder of Albuquerque was made president and Mrs. Knapp, of the same place, corresponding secretary.

You will notice in the list sent of Supts. of Depts. the name of Mrs. Prof. Bryan as Supt. of "work among native population," the foreigners being Americans in those territories. Mrs. Bryan's husband is president and she a teacher in the Indian school in Albuquerque which we visited. There are 122 pupils, of whom 20 are girls, who with the degradation of their sex in the race to which they belong, kept their faces scrupulously covered while we were present. MARY F. SHIELDS.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.—A reception was given New Year's Day by the Y. L. C. T. U. and the Boys' Loyal Legion in the free reading room for boys at No. 16 East Fourteenth street. The work sought to be accomplished by the leaders of this enterprise is to educate and improve cash boys and other youths not employed in the evening, and to prevent rather than to cure bad habits. They have drawn strong support to their blessed undertaking.

One of the most valuable adjuncts of the reading room is a savings bank, in which boys are encouraged to put their money, and benevolent ladies take turns in paying an interest of eight per cent. up to a limit of $5 principal. When a boy reaches the limit, he puts his money in a regular savings bank, and starts in to save another similar sum.

The Boys' Loyal Legion established an ice water fountain in Grand street last summer, and is preparing for useful work. The managers of the free reading room say that 10,000 visits have been made to it since last June. They need a new building. What a grand work for some large-hearted friend of humanity who looks down the coming years, remembering that "boys make men!"

VERMONT.

REMINISCENCES OF THE W. C. T. U. OF ST. ALBANS.

"Some say that ever 'gainst the season comes
Wherein our Savior's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long."

Surely the crusade leaders heard that song in the night. Little they dreamed that they were making history, when with the old glad anthem of the redemption mingled the majestic numbers of the crusade psalm.

From the little Ohio town went out the cry, "Make a chain, for the land is full of wickedness and the city is full of violence," and lo! today the chain encircles the whole continent, and links are forging to unite with foreign shores.

"That song from afar
Has swept over the world."

A decade has passed and we are asked to gather up the sheaves for our first "Harvest Home." It is pleasant to go back and remember how, in our eastern town of St. Albans, Vt., we heard the great news from Ohio. We wondered, we sympathized, we criticised, we were indifferent. We had no thought of following the "new departure" from feminine traditions, until one day in March, 1874, Dio Lewis—chancing—as we say, but all chances of God's forethoughts—to be passing through the town, was induced to stop long enough to address a meeting hastily called for that purpose. It stirs our hearts today to recall the enthusiasm which followed. The crowded daily meetings, the plans and discussions which resulted in organized action. For a time we were a victorious army marching to victory. We had no foes in the camp. Men bade us God-speed, and stood ready then, as today, to uphold our efforts. An organization was formed with Mrs. Laura Fay Smith and Mrs. C. F. Safford as our first presidents. Both are representative women of rare gifts and sound judgment, and three hundred names were pledged in sympathy with us.

We turn over the records with tender hands. Some of the names are known on earth no more. For them the harvest is ended, and they keep the feast with us today at the King's table. Pledges were circulated, saloons visited, mass meetings held, a Band of Hope was formed, and when the state union was organized we were ready to fall into line.

As the years have passed we have felt the ebb and flow of public sentiment, but our union has ever been quick to grasp opportunities and to profit by experience. We are glad in our records. In the early days of our work it was proposed that we should provide a place of rest and amusement, an attractive hall with books and games for men and boys who had no pleasant home influences. The plan seemed like a poet's dream, but when in May, 1876, through the efforts of J. R. McKelvey, a reform club was organized, lo! as by magic, a commodious hall furnished and ornamented by willing hands was placed by the union at their disposal. In a year or two a larger and more beautiful hall was secured, and the reform club is told by an item in the daily paper which states that on account of the great numbers in attendance at the Sunday services, it will be necessary to hold the next meeting in the church vestry.

As fast as departments of work have been laid out by the National and state unions, they have been duplicated in our society, and we believe have been faithfully worked out, and from the beginning there has been no cessation of work. One link in the chain has been wrought by appointed days and weeks of prayer, by weekly meetings for counsel, by days set apart for benevolent work, by monthly tea meetings, the proceeds being devoted to the literature fund, by an occasional special effort to secure funds for rent of hall and running expenses, and by careful following of every line marked out.

We should be glad to chronicle some of the golden memories that light these by-gone years, but we can only render our tribute of thanksgiving to the name of the Lord, and trust that we, too, are written in the book of His remembrance. L. A. W.

ILLINOIS.

DIXON.—On the evening of November 30, our citizens were shocked by the report that a lady and two little girls while driving along the river road had accidentally in the darkness fallen down the steep bank into the river. Hundreds of men rushed to the spot hoping to render some assistance, but alas, it was too late. It was soon ascertained that Miss Electa J. Lewis, the secretary of our union, and her two little cousins were drowned.

Miss Lewis was twenty-one years of age, the only child of her mother, "and she a widow."

One of our city papers in speaking of Miss L., says: "She was a young lady whose perfect reliability in every position in which she was placed made her society sought, and her activities eugaged in a wide field of usefulness. She was organist and one of the teachers in the primary department of the M. E. Sunday school, was a member of the church and choir, secretary of the Youth's Temperance Alliance, and for the last three months secretary of the W. C. T. U. here. She had recently graduated from the Normal school of Dixon with full honors."

Our union at its regular meeting, the 21st inst., held a memorial service, at which the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, Our beloved young sister and secretary, Electa J. Lewis, has been so unexpectedly removed from our midst to her reward, we hereby attest our appreciation of those high qualifications of mind and heart which seemed so eminently to qualify her for efficient work for the Master.

We deeply deplore the sad accident by which our society has been deprived of a zealous and earnest worker, the church and Sabbath school of an efficient and honored member, and a widowed mother of the light and joy of her home.

We extend to the heart-broken mother of our departed sister our tenderest sympathy, and earnestly pray that our sympathizing Heavenly Father will comfort and sustain her in her great sorrow and bereavement.

—Those desiring information in regard to Band of Hope work or supplies, or any wishing to organize such societies, should apply to Ruth Riley Cooper, Superintendent of Bands of Hope. Office at Headquarters of Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union 161 Laselle St. Services free.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE W. C. T. U. of Louisville, Ky., sent out exquisitely pretty invitations for New Year's Day, the golden flowers on the creamy paper, looking as lovely to our temperance-loving eyes, as did ever the royal lilies of France to a patriot; for the best of all is, that this brave young union decided at its last meeting to earnestly request the ladies of the city to refrain from offering any alcoholic drink on that day, "for the sake of those who should be led only into paths of purity, by woman's hand."

AT the last meeting of the state Horticultural Society of Missouri, held at Carthage, the committee on wines, reported as follows: "That as wines and fermented liquors of all kinds have a tendency to educate a taste for strong drink, and lead to drunkenness, they have no part in a horticultural exhibition of this kind, and we recommend that this society refuse to receive wines for exhibition at all future meet ings." This report was adopted.

MRS. EMILY PITT-STEVENS, who has labored for five years as a lecturer, for the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, is now in the field, and ready to form engagements for single lectures, or by series, with any and all temperance organizations, or to assist at conventions and associations. Her address is 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.

MR. GEORGE WOODFORD addressed the people of Kankakee, Ill., with great earnestness and acceptance, Sunday evening, December 23, under the auspices of the Temperance League, which is organized on the same basis as the Church of England Society, and has accomplished much good. The liquor law has been thoroughly enforced in Kankakee for nine months past.

AN earnest call is out from Hon. W. H. Barnes, president of the Alabama Temperance Alliance, for a state convention to be held at Tuskaloosa, January 22, 23, and 24. The invitation is indeed catholic in its scope, embracing "all the workers in the cause of temperance, including all who are willing to work for prohibition in its broadest and most comprehensive sense."

THE W. C. T. U. of Danville Ill., gave their anniversary New Year's dinner to the poor children of the city, and fed two hundred children, besides fourteen women, and six men. Two of these men signed the pledge.

ON Sunday, December 9, Mrs. Leavitt formed a W. C. T. U. at Chico, Cal., with forty-five members, which number was increased to sixty before the day was over.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

TO STATE PRESIDENTS:—The circular published in last week's UNION SIGNAL, has been sent to the 350 posts of the G. A. R. in the state of New York. May it not suggest a similar line of effort for your state? and, in view of the necessity that exists, for temperance work amongst our citizen soldiers, will you not duplicate the department created by the National W. C. T. U., and appoint a state superintendent of department of soldiers and sailors? Hoping soon to be put in direct communication with such an office in your state, believe me, yours truly, MRS. S. A. MCCLEES, Nat. Supt.

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

THE FAMOUS EASY-RUNNING

Monarch Lightning Sawing Machine

IT BEATS THE WORLD FOR SAWING LOGS OR FAMILY STOVE WOOD.

SENT ON 30 DAYS' TEST TRIAL.

The boy in the picture on the left is sawing up logs into 20-inch lengths, to be split into stovewood for family use. This is much the BEST and CHEAPEST way to get out your firewood, because the 20-inch blocks are VERY EASILY split up, a good deal easier and quicker than the old-fashioned way of cutting the logs into 4-feet lengths, splitting it into cordwood, and from that sawing it up with a buck saw into stovewood. We sell a large number of machines to farmers and others for just this purpose. A great many persons who had formerly burned coal have stopped that useless expense since getting our Machine. Most families have one or two boys, 16 years of age and up, who can employ their spare time in sawing up wood just as well as not. The will save your paying money and board to ONE hired man and perhaps TWO men.

The boy at the right in the picture is sawing up cordwood in a buck frame. You can very easily use our machine in this way if you have cordwood on hand that you wish to saw up into suitable lengths for firewood.

A boy sixteen years old can work the machine all day and not get any more tired than he would raking hay. The machine runs very easily, so easily, in fact, that after giving the crank half a dozen turns, the operator may let go and the machine will run itself for three or four revolutions. Farmers owning standing timber cannot fail to see the many advantages of this great labor-saving and money-saving machine. If you prefer, you can easily go directly into the woods and easily saw the logs into 20-inch lengths for your family use, or you can saw them into 4-foot lengths, to be split into cordwood, when it can be readily hauled off to the village market. Many farmers are making a good deal of money with this Machine in employing the dull months of the year in selling cordwood.

It makes a great difference in labor and money both in using our machine, because you get away with a second man. It takes two men to run the old-fashioned cross-cut saw, and it makes two backs ache every day they use it. Not so with our saw.

We offer $1,000 for a sawing machine that is EASIER OPERATED and FASTER RUNNING than ours. Every farmer should own our machine. It will pay for itself in one season. Easily operated by a sixteen-year-old boy.

Lumbermen and farmers should GET THE BEST —GET THE CHEAPEST—GET THE MONARCH LIGHTNING SAWING MACHINE.

E. DUTTER, Hicksville, O., writes:—It runs so easy that it is JUST FUN to saw wood.

C. A. COLE, Mexico, N. Y., writes:—With this machine I sawed off an elm log, twenty-one inches in diameter, in one minute, forty-three seconds.

Z. G. HEGE, Winston, N. C., writes:—I have shown your machine to several farmers, and all pronounce it a PERFECT SUCCESS.

WM. DILLENBACK, Dayton, Tex., writes:—I am WELL PLEASED with the MONARCH LIGHTNING SAWING MACHINE. My boys can saw WITH ALL EASE.

L. W. YOST, Seneca, Kan., writes:—I will bet $50 that I can saw as much with this machine as any two men can with the old-fashioned cross-cut saw.

T. K. BUCK, Mt. Vernon, Ill., writes:—I have given the Monarch a fair trial, and can truly say it is ALL YOU CLAIM FOR IT, a complete success, enabling a boy to do the work of two strong men, and indeed, more. I would not take $75 for the MONARCH and be deprived of the privilege of having another like it. I sawed off a twenty-inch solid water oak log twelve times yesterday in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES.

J. M. CRAWFORD, Columbia, S. C., writes:—I tried the Monarch on an oak log to-day before twenty farmers. All said it WORKED PERFECTLY.

N. B.—We are selling SIX TIMES as many Machines as any other firm, simply because our Machine gives perfect satisfaction. Our factory is running day and night to fill orders. Send in your order at once. The BEST is the CHEAPEST. Our agent sold four machines in one day. Another sold twenty-eight in his township. Another agent cleared $100 in one week. BE SURE AND MENTION THIS PAPER.

AUGUST 18, 1883, W. W. Allen, one of the principal merchants of Watervleit, Mich., publicly burned in front of his store, his whole stock of tobacco, valued at about $200.

A PARALYZING paragraph to the Christian liquor drinker is this sentence from from one of the sermons of Queen Victoria's late chaplain, the celebrated Dr. Thomas Guthrie: "Whisky is the devil's way to man and man's way to the devil."

MRS. MARY E. BUCKLEY sued James Sweet, a Brooklyn saloon keeper, under the civil damage act, for selling her husband liquor. The trial was held before Justice Clements, in the Brooklyn City Court, and a verdict for $1,180 damages was awarded the plaintiff.

MR. J. C. CONNOLLY, in a letter to the Liverpool Courier, advocating the abolition of capital punishment, says. "Why not strangle the cause of nearly all the murders? Throttle the liquor traffic! dethrone king alcohol! This would be better than either the long drop or the short drop. It would be a mighty drop for the fiend himself."

BY the U. S. Internal Revenue Report for 1882, the number of retail liquor dealers, mostly secret, in the four prohibitory states (Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Kansas), averaged one to every 620 inhabitants; in the four states of Massachusetts, Indiana, Iowa and Nebraska, where local prohibition exists to some extent, one in 335; in the fourteen northern license states, one in 310.

Now and then a criminal gets into Clerkenwell prison, London, who is not a drunkard. The occurrence would seem to be somewhat rare, however; for the prison chaplain, who is presumably acquainted with the facts, declares that three-quarters of the twenty thousand persons who have been incarcerated in the prison during the year, were confined for crimes directly or indirectly attributable te drink.

WHILE the wine crop of France is said to surpass this year any one of the vintages in that country since 1858, a disease has attacked the vines in California and reduced the wine crop of that state 40 per cent. It is a curious fact that although the French nave found in transplanted American vines protection against the ravages of the phylloxera it is a vine disease well-known in France that has now for the first time fallen upon the vines of the Pacific slope.

THE New Zealand papers have reported a story, otherwise confirmed, of the astonishing escape of Captain Hainault, of Auckland. He was thrown from his own ship into the water, and though very heavily dressed swam for half an hour in hopes of being picked up. Failing this, he tried to reach a part of the coast, but could not land. Then he relieved himself of all needless clothing, and swam three miles to the opposite point of the bay. In the meantime his ship had been driven high up on the coast, and the sailors were proceeding along the shore, when they heard a cry for help, and found their captain struggling with the surge. It is added that when brought to land, though in a state of the utmost exhaustion, he was so strong an abstainer that he would not take a drop of brandy. This great feat of sea-swimming is considered—taking all circumstances into account—almost, if not entirely, unrivalled.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THREE out of the four newly-elected magistrates for Glasgow are abstainers, Bailie Torrens, Bailie Selkirk, and Bailie Dickson. That is a pretty clear indication of the strength of temperance sentiment in that city.

ADULTERATION of intoxicating liquors is commented on in an old poem, entitled "A Dialogue Between Claret and Darby Ale," written in the year 1591:—

"None know in private what the vintners do,
But there's some roguery hatched between you two,
These sons of Bacchus else could never hold,
Why! There's more wine by name of Claret sold,
One month in London, than a man can guess
To be the product of three vintages."

ONE of the most interesting characters in India, just now, is Ramabia, a gifted and highly educated young Brahmin widow, who has undertaken the difficult task of creating a public sentiment against the social customs which bind down Indian women. She has already achieved a great deal. Her lectures in Bombay have created a wide interest, not only from the novelty of a woman assuming such a position, but from her scholarly and forcible manner of placing her views before the public. She is spoken of as on the "border line of Christianity," and her influence in certain directions can scarcely be overrated.—The Presbyterian.

WE are glad to see that thoughtful teachers are beginning to make it known that instruction and less examination would be better for the schools. There is a place, without doubt, for examinations in our school work, but they should never be allowed to trespass upon the domain of instruction. Neither the child nor the teacher is benefitted by such trespass. It often comes to pass that the teacher is obliged to spend evening after evening in examining papers which superintendent or principal, or even herself, has been getting, with considerable parade, from the pupils. So far as the obligation to examine these papers after they have been written may seem a punishment, but to the extent that superintendent and principal have imposed this burden upon her, it is, as the Indiana Educational Weekly says, "simply barbarous." It accounts for the signs of overwork which so many teachers carry in their faces. It is safe to say that once in two months is often enough to make an elaborate test of a child's progress, and we are not certain but that a still longer interval of time would be preferable.—Evangelist.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOLUME X. CHICAGO, JANUARY 17, 1884. NUMBER 3.

A MAGNIFICENT campaign document is the annual address of Miss Mary Allen West, now on hand at Illinois headquarters, price two dollars per hundred. It is just the thing to put into the hands of thinking men and women.

THE Iowa W. C. T. U. gives a reception to the incoming and newly assembling legislature this week, at Des Moines. Bishop Hurst, Hon. John Mahin, Hon. J. T. Stoneman, Mrs. Aldrich, Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Anna Lee Mahin are on the program. It will be a brilliant affair.

THE Iowa State Temperance Alliance holds its annual meeting in Des Moines, Jan. 23. A call has been issued by the president, Hon. Aaron Kimball, asking for a convention of the friends of constitutional and statutory prohibition in connection with this annual gathering.

"TIT FOR TAT" is a poor rule for nations as well as individuals. But, if Germany and France prohibit our pork, we may prohibit their fearfully adulterated wines and liquors, without doing anybody any harm, save the iniquitous manufacturers. The only regret that we could have at such a proceeding, would be that our prohibitory act did not antedate theirs.

THE cold wave that passed over the South, week before last, brought suffering and despair to hundreds of the poor in Southern cities. Southern generosity however soon responded to the cry of pain, and relief was forthcoming from all quarters. Well has it been said that the strongest passion in human nature is the love of saving.

IT is always with sincere regret that we see the organ of the National Prohibition Home Protection party lowering its tone of expression or its dignity, but it is with honest indignation that we have read in one of its recent issues, an editorial quoting with warm approbation an article from a whisky paper marked with insult to our National W. C. T. U. president, and to the Hon. Henry W. Blair. The prohibition party must purify its mouthpiece if it hopes to win and deserve the allegiance of the pure minded.

THE Toronto Coffee House Association in its second annual report makes excellent showing. Two coffee houses are in successful operation, the gross receipts of which have been nearly $10,000 and the net profits $3,385. As the business has been carried on with only $8,000 of capital the profit has reached 44 per cent. The work is an immense boon to the working classes, and a powerful temperance agency. While philanthropic in its origin and results, it is carried on by business men upon a commercial basis.

DURING the week of prayer requests have been received from missionaries on heathen soil, whose great burden has been, "Pray that we may be delivered here from the reign of King Alcohol." One is tempted to wonder how much force the prayers for the abolition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in foreign lands, will have when offered by men and women who do almost or absolutely nothing for its removal at home. The fact is emphasized however by these requests, that at home and abroad one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of Christ's kingdom is this traffic in souls for whom Christ died.

THE Pall Mall Gazette, devotes a half column editorial to the departure of Richard T. Booth, for Australia, and recapitulates some items of his beneficent work in England. For instance, that under his labors above, 700,000 new pledges have been taken, and over one million persons have put on the blue ribbon. Mr. Booth's pregnant saying that, "The wineglass in the Christian's hand, and the brandy bottle on the sideboard, are the real stumbling blocks in life's pathway," is quoted with approbation. America has to be more convinced of this truth ere the temperance reform sees its final triumph.

FORTY-SEVEN years ago, a house painter in England resolved to become a total abstainer, and to save up the money he had been in the habit of spending in intoxicating drinks until he acquired a sufficient sum to enable him to buy one or more cottages "as something to fall back upon in his old age." He faithfully held to his resolution, and in 1870 became the proprietor of three good freehold cottages and gardens, purchased with the accumulated savings of thirty-four years. On the wall is a tablet with this inscription:

> Temperance Cottages!
> Who would have thought it;
> Abstinence bought it;
> If you a like freehold would buy,
> The very same plan you can try.

THE Band of Hope is a missionary institution in Chili. At least we judge so from the account of an entertainment given by the Band of Hope at Coquimbo in that little republic. This society was organized by a lady missionary last March, with only fifteen members. It now has one hundred and twenty enrolled, and not a week passes but new members are taken in. The treasurer has over seventy dollars in her keeping and sends regularly to New York and Chicago for Band of Hope supplies. Intemperance is said to be appalling in its prevalence in Chili, and this little society is one of the very few agencies directly intended to "educate and agitate," and a large number of native boys and girls are already influenced by it.

THE old couplet,

> Satan trembles when he sees
> The weakest saint upon his knees, gets a queer verification in these days. On a recent election day, in a city of the far west, the W. C. T. U. held a short morning prayer meeting, for the success of the prohibition ticket. A good republican bethought himself at the breakfast table of this onslaught of the spiritual forces, and jumping up said to his wife, "I must hurry and get down to the polls before those women get at their praying, or I might be forced to put in a prohibition ballot in spite of myself."

Since our prayers are thus formidable, why do we not accept the suggestion of Mrs. J. F. Willing, in a recent article, viz.: Pray, as you pass every dramshop, that God will close it up, and destroy the traffic everywhere.

A BRAVE girl's brave act seems in a fair way to be recognized as it deserves. Kate Shelly, who saved a train in Iowa from wreck and destruction, is to be presented at the opening of the Iowa legislature this week with a handsome gold medal, prepared by Tiffany & Co., of New York, which represents Kate in the act of crossing the railway bridge over the Des Moines river. Above are the words: "Heroism, Youth, Humanity;" on the reverse of the medal is the following inscription: "Presented by the state of Iowa to Kate Shelly, with the thanks of the general assembly. In recognition of the courage and devotion of a child of fifteen years, whom neither the terror of the elements nor the fear of death could appal in her efforts to save human life during the terrible storm and flood in the Des Moines valley on the night of July 6, 1881." But more than this is to be done. The girl's great desire is for a substantial education. Our own W. C. T. U. leaders have done much to satisfy her craving by placing her in Simpson Centenary College under President E. L. Parks, at Indianola, and subscriptions to a fund have been both solicited and acknowledged by THE UNION SIGNAL, but now a movement is on foot to secure an appropriation from Congress for her collegiate training and the fulfillment of her cherished ambition. This is better than medals, no matter how deeply graven with the record of her heroism. Give heroic character a chance to develop.

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

BY REV. F. BOTTOME, D.D.

See the morning light is breaking, sin and darkness flee away;
Sons of earth to gladness waking rise to meet the bursting day;
And before the mighty Savior every fetter shall give way,
For God is marching on.

It is coming, coming, coming! O the good time promised long,
When the right and might united shall triumph over wrong,
And the praise of our Redeemer be the theme of every song.
For God is marching on.

Our eyes shall yet in rapture see what prophets long foretold,
Of the King in all His beauty, and the city paved with gold,
And the streets whose happy children never, never shall grow old,
For God is marching on.

O we heed not now the laughter, nor the scorn of wicked men;
For against our glorious Leader do the heathen rage in vain;
He shall sweep them in His fury as the tempest sweeps the plain;
For God is marching on.

We go not up to battle now in the strength of man arrayed,
But putting on the armor bright we will never be afraid,
For the Lord of Hosts is with us and He cannot be dismayed,
For God is marching on.

It is coming, coming, coming! O the good time promised long,
When the right and might united shall triumph over wrong,
And the praise of our Redeemer be the theme of every song,
For God is marching on.

AN ANNIVERSARY SERMON.

BY THE REV. DAVID WALK,
Of the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind.

As a ministry and as a church it is not only our constant aim, but our proud distinction to occupy a place in the very front rank of those who are moved by a divine impulse to strike for the emancipation of our race from the hideous crime of drunkenness. Accordingly the approach of the first decennial of what will be forever known in history as the Woman's Crusade, found us keenly alive to its proper celebration, namely: By all suitable and righteous means to advance the cause so well begun and so successfully carried forward; by words of instruction to those who need to be informed; of encouragement to those who stand in the thickest of the fight, and whose lives are consecrated to the work; and by earnest supplication and prayer to Almighty God that He will crown the efforts of His people with undreamed of triumph. In pursuance of these laudable objects we are here this evening.

The subject of this decennial occasion having been presented to the Indianapolis Christian Preachers' Society, which holds its meetings every Saturday morning in the lecture room of this church, they appointed a committee to bring in resolutions expressive of the sense and the sentiments of the society. That committee, composed of the veteran Dr. Brown and your speaker, presented the following report:

The near approach of the anniversary that closes the first decade of that remarkable movement which resulted in the organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and thus brought to bear a mighty moral power in the conflict with the demon intemperance, recalls our duty to express our sense of gratitude to the Christian women who have so nobly and so bravely come to the aid of the men who for years had been waging an unequal war with this deadly foe of God and humanity; therefore

Resolved, That with this reinforcement to our ranks we will, with renewed courage, press the battle to the gate, till drunkenness shall no longer be the odium of Christendom.

Resolved, That the organized traffic in intoxicating liquors presents the most formidable barrier that antagonizes Christianity and neutralizes our efforts to evangelize society in this age; and therefore it is our duty, as ministers of the gospel, to wage an uncompromising war against this emissary of evil, in whatever form it may present itself.

I then laid the matter before the official board of this church at a very full meeting, whose unanimous decision was that, as a church, our sympathy with this great movement should be expressed by setting apart this evening for the express purpose of such exercises as would be best calculated to promote the end in view, and also to take a collection to aid in strengthening the financial department of temperance labor. So that as a preachers' society and as a church our record is once more clear and unmistakable. This, of course, is no more than was to have been expected of a people wholly committed to the gospel of Jesus Christ as the great remedial agency for the extirpation of sin in all its hydra-headed phases; for to the salutary influence of the gospel we constantly look for success, and in the name of our God have we set up our banners.

The present great temperance movement, conducted by women, had its origin in Hillsboro, Ohio, December 23, 1873. There was significance in the birthplace of the crusade, whether the thought was present to any mind there and then engaged or not.

Hillsboro was also the birthplace of one of the most brillant and promising young men Ohio ever knew. He was the son of a distinguished lawyer, and the grandson of one of Ohio's most honored governors. At a very early age he united with a church, and being bright and scholarly, eloquent, and graceful, he was induced to enter the Christian ministry. He soon rose to great eminence in the pulpit, having pastoral charge of one of the largest and most noted churches in Cincinnati. But alas! who is safe from the demon of drink?

This gifted young man had contracted the habit, perhaps through the advice of his physician; but such was his peculiar temperament that he seemed to have no power to resist the seductive influence of the wine cup. Of course, his moral sensibilities were blunted, as must be the moral sensibilities of every man who uses liquor in any form, and as a consequence he lost his hold upon Christ, and rapidly descended to the gutter. It was the same old story. He struggled with his habit like a giant in despair. Every influence of wealth, and society, and friends, was exerted in his behalf; but all in vain. He was in the toils of a serpent that knows no mercy. He died a drunkard's death, and today sleeps in a drunkard's grave. He was, as another fallen, whisky-cursed minister expressed it, "a citizen without a country, a child without parents, a husband without a wife, a father without children, a minister without a pulpit, a householder without a home, a sinner without a Savior, a creature without a God."

It was meet then that Hillsboro should have been the birthplace of this movement. Over the ashes of a blasted and ruined life is reared this monument of hope to all the world.

It was significant also that it should have been born during the precious Christmas hours, for it was a far-streaming ray from the manger of Bethlehem. The babe who lay upon the bosom of the virgin mother was to be for salvation to the ends of the earth, and for the uplifting of women and children everywhere. He understood the heart of woman, and the deathless love of a mother. It was His to lift up the cry, "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me! because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn, to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning; the garment of praise. for the spirit of heaviness." This was His mission, and it was His spirit that was abroad in the hearts of those Hillsboro wives and mothers and sisters that day when, on their knees in the snow and ice, with uplifted faces, and streaming eyes, in the streets and at the very doors of the saloons, they poured forth such prayers as moved the pitying heart of the great God, and caused Him to shake the nation as with an earthquake.

Heaven never gazed on such a spectacle. Here were the Miriams and Hannahs and Huldahs and Deborahs of a new dispensation, animated with a single desire, striking a blow on bended knees for the emancipation of an enslaved world from the bondage of strong drink. Never was more startlingly illustrated the prophetic word: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Their appeal was to Almighty God, nor was it made in vain. Of the tree that has grown from that planting, I need not speak particularly. It has grown until it has become the greatest of trees, and beneath its out-spread branches, and in its cooling shade, the weary hearted of the nation are finding rest and hope. It is today the largest organization of women in the world, or that the world ever saw. There is an organization in every state and territory of the union: there are over 3,000 local auxiliaries, with a paying membership of 125,000 women, and five times that number actively engaged in the local unions. Behold what God hath wrought through His anointed hand-maidens!

As Miss Willard, the high priestess of the National W. C. T. U., has well and beautifully said: "Your purpose would confederate all sections, unite all parties, and unify all creeds for the destruction of humanity's most ancient and most accursed foe. Your relationships are to Christ's church that of defender; to the home, that of protector; to the nation, that of purifier. You represent a mysterious movement known as the 'crusade,' divinest manifestation of God's Spirit since tongues of fire sat on the saints at Pentecost."

But I would not close this brief address without paying a humble tribute to the memory of one of our beloved and honored sisters, who has recently closed her earthly labors.

Auretta Hoyt has exchanged the rough and rugged cross for the victor's bright and dazzling crown. If ever woman wrought well, then is she richly entitled to this proud distinction. Fired with a divine enthusiasm, she gave herself no rest; oppressed and burdened with a sense of the responsibility and divinity of her call, she ceased not day or night, with tongue and pen, to quicken and arouse the slumbering conscience of the state and the nation. So ardent and so zealous was she in the fulfillment of her appointed task that she became obnoxious to the charge of fanaticism; but it was a fanaticism akin to that which brought St. Paul to the block and Joan of Arc to the stake. No one who knew Auretta Hoyt can doubt for a moment that, had it been God's will, she would cheerfully have surrendered her life for the sake of that to which it had been consecrated. Amiable, gentle and modest—as became a woman—she passed the ordeal of apostleship in an unpopular cause, and has at last descended to the grave with an unsullied name. With a character transparent as light, and pure as the December snow, she has won the diadem of her of whom only can it be truthfully said: "She hath done what she could." Peace to her ashes, she rests from her labors, and her works do follow her.

"SO AS BY FIRE."

BY MRS. DR. CYRUS HAMLIN.

"You must be my 'mentor' tonight, Theron!"

She was a bride who said this, turning from the mirror where she had been putting the finishing touches to an evening costume of floating elegance. She was a village girl, whose acquaintance the popular young lawyer, Theron Adair, had made during his summer vacation in the country. Attracted by a rare combination of graceful dignity and sweet simplicity, the young man had chosen her to be his mate; much to the chagrin of various damsels in the city where he abode. Both Theron and Helen well knew that jealous eyes would be wide opened to spy out any lack, even in regard to etiquette, in the envied new comer. And, tonight, they were going to the first grand soiree given in honor of the pair. So there was a flutter in Helen's voice, as she said:

"You must be my mentor tonight!" and she raised an inquiring glance to his eyes.

"Never fear, Nellie," was his fond proud response, after a brief, critical glance that swept her gauzy draperies. "Only," he turned as with an after thought, "only don't make any fuss about taking wine, when you are asked."

She made a wry face. "I don't like wine."

"Well, 'fashion before fancy,' you know. It isn't considered quite 'the thing' to decline it—that's all."

Such was the mentor-ship of the gifted young husband. Himself, fortunately, having no latent fondness for the intoxicating cup, he did not dream, how could he, that it could be kindled in a delicate woman's breast.

But Helen learned too soon to "like" the ruby wine. At the birth of a daughter, a year later, a severe illness kept her low. The wines prescribed for her convalescence were eagerly sought after, and alas! prolonged after the prescription was out of date. Unknown to her husband, her dearest friends, and herself, Helen Adair was drifting towards a drunkard's doom.

When the little Ethel was five years old, a son was given, but soon re-taken from the home. What with illness and grief, poor Helen sought more freely than ever her beloved stimulants. She began to be capricious, unreliable. Deceit crept into a character that had been candid to an extreme. She struggled to keep from her husband and child that of which she could not help being conscious. But Judge Adair,— for so he was now distinguished,— at last opened his eyes to her danger. A long and tearful talk was held, in which he reproached himself not her, and at once settled to banish all wine from their daily table.

Then began a time of torture for Helen. Her little daughter remembers her going about the halls with her head pressed in both hands, and pleading as if for life with her husband, when he came in. But he was firm, though very tender.

One evening, he came home from an unusually busy day, to his late dinner. Ethel ran up to him, with a troubled smile.

"Patsey rang the dinner-bell three times; and I've tried, ever and ever so hard, to wake mamma, but she won't answer me, papa!"

A few steps brought Judge Adair to his wife's bedside. She lay there—the delicate woman of his choice—dead drunk.

The stricken man drew his arm close about the child, whose wistful eyes were fixed on the sleeper.

"Come away, darling! we will not disturb mamma, poor mamma! Her head ached, and she took—medicine." A great sigh convulsed his voice.

"Poor mamma!" echoed Ethel softly, with a pitying glance behind her as she went out. Alas, poor child!

"Helen!" said Judge Adair, the next morning, when, with anguish of spirit and bitterest tears, she had owned her fault and besought his forgivness, "If not for my sake—for this innocent creature's sake control yourself! Beware!"

She struggled on, with sad relapses. As Ethel grew older, and learned to prolong those wistful glances at her "sick" mother's face; Judge Adair placed her in a faithful teacher's home, and took his unhappy wife abroad. His constant supervision, with change of scene, kept her from yielding to temptation, and, for a time after their return, so steadfast did she seem, that the fond father recalled home the dear child for whom his heart yearned. Ethel was now seventeen, and in every way lovely and lovable.

Judge Adair came home one evening and met Ethel at the door, dressed for a concert, for which the three had tickets.

"O father, do come up stairs directly. Mamma seems out of her head and talks so strangely."

Too well he knew the cause. But how had she obtained the intoxicant? No wine bottle could be found; but a strong odor of cologne pervaded the room.

"Mamma must have spilled the cologne bottle I gave her," whispered Ethel, after they had at last calmed Helen, and left her. "Drunk—upon cologne water!" said the Judge to himself: then aloud to Ethel: "I fear your mother spilled a little into her medicine cup. Promise me not to leave another bottle in her room. It must be slightly poisonous to her in some way."

"But," said the Judge, next day, "I can bear this no longer. I cannot live a lie to our child. I cannot have her know what you have done, and be shamed in soul and before society just as she is entering it. One more relapse, Helen, and we must separate."

Helen well knew that her husband meant what he said. And she resolved, again in her own weakness.

One evening, about eight months later, she found herself in a brilliant assembly. She had felt languid and disinclined to go out, but had put force upon herself for the sake of Ethel, who was taking her first season of such delights, and finding them very delightful. Especially so, as a certain son of an old classmate of her father had sought her company on all these occasions. People were beginning to couple the names of Clement Harding and Ethel Adair, with that saucy smile which "the old, old story" is apt to provoke.

As Mrs. Adair removed the wrap from her glossy silks and laces, she saw upon the toilet stand a large ornamented bottle, marked "Spirits of Lavender." The tempter whispered, "A little of that would brighten up your whole evening. It is mild, no one need ever know!" She made an excuse for going back to the dressing-room, after descending with her daughter, and—drained the bottle.

Some time later young Harding came up with Ethel at his side to pay the compliments of the evening to her mother. She sat leaning her flushed face upon one hand. Her eyes were glittering, yet empty of expression.

"Good evening, Mrs. Adair. But surely, you are not well? What is the matter?"

"Yes, I am well," she articulated pettishly, with some difficulty. "Well's ever. You'n Ethel just go 'long'n do your courting, never mind me."

"Mother, interrupted Ethel, with a mingling of fierceness and fear in the tone.

"Please help me take her home," she pleaded without looking into the face of the young man.

"All's over!" said Judge Adair. "The house in L——" (her grandmother's property) "shall be fitted up for you, and you shall have a constant attendant, but I must and will save our daughter from this! Thank God that our boy died!"

* * * * * *

Mrs. Adair sat by the window of the farm house in L—— a week later. With hands clenched over her heart, she had watched her husband drive away.

"He's gone—he" she moaned. "Gone to home and Ethel! I am shut out from Paradise, for I have sinned terribly. Am I sold to the devil, soul and body? Oh! how to endure this!"

The door opened for the attendant to come in. Helen covered her face with one hand, and with the other motioned away the intruder, whose presence she could not just yet bear.

"Mother," spoke a choked voice, "dear mother!"

"Ethel!" she almost shrieked, as she clasped her child's dress. "But how — why? Your father"—

"Yes, mother, my father wanted me with him. But I convinced him that my place is here."

"Here!" Helen looked about her, then dropped her head in a bewilderment of emotions "Child, you ought not to stay here!"

"I shall stay, dear mother, and you will grow— well, and happy again."

"Happy!" with a mocking laugh. "No, no, that is past praying for! But you should be happy, you shall! Clement?"

"Please don't speak of him!" pleaded the girl, with distress in her look.

Weeks later, the mother who had guessed how her daughter had not only borne down all the father's objections, but had resolutely removed herself from the society of one who loved her, and whom she loved, so coldly as to quench all his beaming hopes, again pleaded with her to go back. It is not too late yet! He loves you! Leave me to my own deserts!"

"Mother!" poor Ethel crimsoned over face and neck; "Hush! Could I become the wife of any honest man, while—she broke off abruptly, and left the room."

"Oh, God! Is it come to this?" groaned Helen. "Must my sin kill my child, too!" "I will redeem thee!" This word flashed into her soul. She fell upon her knees, crying out: Oh, Lord Jesus! help me! for I cannot help myself!" All that night her door was locked even against the daughter who begged for entrance. At daybreak she opened it, with a light on her pale face that told she had indeed "seen the Lord!"

Two years passed. Clement Harding, grown older than those two years would justify, had just returned from a long foreign trip, to Washington. Friends were talking of a brilliant reception to be held that evening.

"Whose?" asked one. "Adair, the new senator from X—— you know."

"Yes. "'Tis to be something exquisite, of course! Harding! You knew Adair? Come with us!"

"One thing I can tell you," said the first speaker, "You'll get no choice wine there."

"Ah! teetotal is the word?"

"Yes, and they do say there's a reason for it."

"Well, leave that to old gossips," said the host. "Madam is at her post of honor again, at any rate, more graced and gracious than ever. Her silvered curls make a halo 'round a face that might pass for a saint's. Then the daughter that has been her guarding angel."

Some one interrupted here. But Harding had heard enough. He would see once more the Ethel whom he had believed so deliberately capricious. He went to the reception. Helen never fell again. And so in time Ethel was won from her mother's side, feeling that she left her in the constant care of one "Mighty to save," though even "so as by fire."

MORNING CHATS.

BY SEPPERLE.

Yes, indeed, a very placid atmosphere we are blessed with today, quite innocent apparently of any fellowship whatever with recent clod snaps.

The ponds remain frozen despite Sol's ardent threats of a thaw, happy consolation for the boys this, at least those of them who can stride forth like the knights of old booted and equipped for the feat.

Ah me, between the fortunate, like these, a pitiful woof of humanity interweaves, the poor, shivering, shrugged and emaciated little flocks; the mere lookers-on, with no share in reigning pleasures. If we turn to their homes we possibly find the thread of life there, a horror strung with woe succeeding woe, fright succeeding fright, shame heading the board and Bacchus ordering its kingdom.

Apropos of this, picture to yourself a bridge, whose structure in every particular is composed of rotten planks upon which no pressure can in safety rest.

It spans a chasm.

Picture the controller of the bridge standing guard at its entrance enforcing this law:

"Neither man, woman nor child shall pass here."

Now comes the headlong pedestrian jingling his gold in the controller's ear, clamoring, arguing, bribing for license to cross.

Lo! gold proves an "open sesame" to the bridge, even too though the controller knows human life in legion must rush to destruction as the inevitable consequence.

Wide open swing the gates; hence results my first query, viz.: Is it not life betraying life?

Second, Should such putty-like principles rule the passage of the bridge?

Third, Can the controller, in throwing open the danger of the way to humanity, stand guiltless?

"Bless me!" I hear you exclaim, "to what a stubborn root you have laid your philosophical ax. I can see your face lengthen and grow somewhat wry over this tedious question of license, as if an army of prohibitionists had not been fighting it, by the by, with all their might and main for ages.

But listen: Does not one little bird's eye view of the business portion of our cities, interlarded with the perilous sign, "Wholesale and retail liquors," make it seem as though the prohibitionists after all have been comparatively beating the air. Mark the badge our nation wears today! pinned fast to its banner, flaunted in the face of the rising generation, upon which so much of its own future depends. Read it: "Liquor License."

Once in turning the great sand walls of a pass, which for convenience I was taking as a "short cut" I came upon a crowd so dense as to completely block further progress. Women were shading their eyes to peer, children clung to the fence and looked over shouting at something and stoning it, a carriage had drawn up now, its occupant, with a gesture of the hand, parting away the crowd to look, when musing "ever and anon," as the novels say, upon the cause of all this commotion, I urged my way onward.

Here now was a trio of alarmingly stout ladies hedging me in on every side and each with a sort of "charge bayonet" effect insisting on pointing her umbrella at the scene.

Very demure indeed I stood within my surrounding guard, peering over shoulders I sighed to convert by some magic spell into Lilliputs.

I once saw a painting that filled me with a succession of cold shudders. It was that of a huntsman stretched under the woodland shade asleep, where, curling on every side, around every limb of his body to his neck, with their fangs pointing to his vitals crept a swarm of serpents from the nest upon which he had unconsciously lain.

The scene of which I now caught a glimpse reminded me of the painting: A man with arms outflung, face upturned, and mouth agape, his countenance swollen and purple, his breath coming in hard stagnated pulls. There he lay, stretched in the mire, a trodden thing, hooted, despised, the viper's nest into which he too had self-poised, and blindly blundered, being the o'er true tale enacted anew—the "social cup." He was middle-aged; he doubtless had a family. The face of the wronged, disappointed wife rose before me, written deep with the wrinkles of the broken heart, with the wearing horror that comes of sharing, sensing, enduring the dismay and curse of the drunkard's home, with the effect of constant wrestling with this serpent that coils at her hearth, where love and protection should be instead, lighting like a scorpion on her ambitions, on her household reputation, severing the mutual tie, leaving each to hang apart, with the great terror and blight and devastation between.

Is it not a mystery, I reasoned, the criminal passiveness with which this free, redeeming nation suffers so disastrous an evil to nest in our midst, shoo-shooing at it, and yet allowing it for paltry gold to fold its dismal wing over the security of a license, allowing it (alcohol) the FIRST place, man, and the prospects of man to be subservient to its rule, else why permit its power over the weak?

How can we flaunt our banner of liberty? How can we in candor cry Freedom! Independence! when darkening over our progress, swoops this black oppression with its legion of slaves?

Gradually I became startled at the pictures this problem continued to shape before me. The crowd had thinned. We were moving on. I with the rest had drawn nigher the poor groveller, stricken to misery and disgrace by the very draught he had sought as a convivial pleasure.

How stifled the breath, how mottled the face. What if death—death so kindly to the just, should even now stoop shuddering over the possibility of a such a soul being ushered into the presence of God.

But look! Two stalwart officers are approaching. They tug and labor at the senseless hulk and lift it from the mire. Watch! They bear him away, swaying, toppling and powerless between them.

"How did it all end?"

Lodged, like the irresponsible beasts of the forest, for awhile, behind the iron bars of a cell, a fine, possibly then, or a reformatory institution.

And this is the curious moral of the matter, this peculiar and rather bewildering principle of the law, in punishing and endeavoring to reform the hapless victims of its own licensed crime.

NEW YEAR'S LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The glad New Year has come. Yesterday was a busy day here. Receptions were the order from the White House to the cottage. Our workers were wide awake. At Washington Barracks Mother Rowan, with her assistants, received the soldiers in the post library, which was beautifully decorated with flags, evergreens, and singing birds, while in an adjoining room a table was spread loaded with fruits, confections and hot coffee. All day long the boys in blue and the veterans from the Soldiers' Home passed in an out, many of them rejoicing in the great change wrought in their lives during the past year. Some, after being fifteen and twenty years in bondage to strong drink, have been reclaimed, and are passing their first sober holidays since early youth. One of the soldiers, as he sat in my home with his little boy of four years, remarked that the child said, as they were walking along, "Papa, we are making temperance calls today, and last New Year you were drunk." This brother is president of the Band of Hope at the barracks, which was organized at his suggestion among the soldiers' children. He also holds a weekly prayer meeting in his humble home.

At East Washington Mrs. Moffatt, with the ladies of her union, assisted by the young ladies auxiliary, received at their headquarters, in a building which was a saloon for thirty years. Now gospel meetings are held there daily. Many signed the pledge and were decked with the white ribbon.

A shadow fell on the home of our good treasurer in the early hours of the new year—a telegram announcing the sudden death of Father LaFetra in California. A saint gone home.

An editorial in one of our leading papers states that yesterday "the rarity of spirituous or vinous side-boards was noticeable, and the good results equally noticeable; further a reporter tells us that in the many official receptions he attended yesterday, including five foreign legations, and the leading members of society, he only saw wine at one place, and that was the home of Robert Ingersoll. He also visited seven saloons, and was told it was the dullest day they had known for years."

"There has been very little drinking this New Year," said a prominent importer. "Usually we sell a great deal of champagne, sherry, catawba, and other wines for the New Year receptions, but this year the sales have been very light, at least twenty per cent lighter than last year."

"How do you account for this?" said the reporter.

"Oh, it's brought about by this big cry of temperance, which is being raised all over the country, I suppose. It is getting so now that people are ashamed to offer wine to a caller, and if it is offered a man feels that he is staking his reputation by accepting it. * * * No, there was not near as much liquor sold this year as usual—that is, not for the New Year receptions. Chocolate, tea and coffee were served nearly everywhere."

So you see we are gaining ground at our national capital.

We watch with great interest the slow but steady growth of temperance sentiment in Congress. We have welcomed with joy to this session Gov. Colquitt of Georgia, who, in an address before the Sunday school recently held in the Congregational church, completely won the hearts of the people. Then we have Senator Wilson, of Iowa, whom we have not had the pleasure of hearing, and Representatives Johnson of New York and Price of Wisconsin, who are staunch temperance men, with others that I have not time to mention at this writing.

In the formation of select committees in the House, Hon. Mr. Reed, of Maine, proposed the appointment of a "committee on alcoholic liquor traffic." A spirited discussion followed which was participated in by Messrs. Reed, Blackburn, Mills, Randall, Young; also Mr. Vance of North Carolina, who spoke in eloquent words as follows:

"The gentleman from Texas talks about legislating in favor of sumptuary laws, and saying what a man shall eat and drink. In my judgment, sir, the object is to get information on a subject that reaches and touches every human being on this continent. It affects every man, woman, and child, and every interest in this great country. [Applause on the republican side.] I think that the temperance people of the United States of America ought to be respected in this House, which creates committees on almost every other subject. We have committees on legislation in regard to the yellow fever, and we have committees in regard to the cotton worm. [Laughter.] We have committees on sending expeditions to the north pole in search of vessels that have been lost, and then why, sir, should not the representatives of the American people inquire in reference to that vessel of intemperance which has wrecked so many households in this land of ours? [Applause.] I hope, sir, the representatives of the American people will allow the friends of humanity, the friends of truth, justice and mercy to be heard; that they will extend to the people the opportunity to gather every information on a subject of such tremendous importance as the one now before the House. Will the American representatives here, sir, deny to millions of people the right to be heard on this important question? [Cries of No!] I hope not.

I hope we will not be denied the simple right of having a committee on the subject. It does not necesarily follow we are to have a prohibitory law because of the raising of such committee. Not at all, sir; we want information. We want to know what it costs this government because of this evil of intemperance. We state that it costs more than the taxes which would be required to educate every man, woman and child, black and white, in this land. I believe it will be better for us to stand up in the interest of humanity, in the interest of schools, in the interest of peace and of right, as well as in the interest of mercy. It is better for us to do so than to stand up here in the interest of the liquor traffic which is carried on at the price of the blood of our people. [Applause.] I hope we shall have this committee, and I do so with all due deference to my friend on my left from Texas." The committee was appointed. We rejoice.

There is a bill prepared by the commissioner of the District of Columbia for congressional action, which, while it has some features that meet the approval of business men, yet one section takes away what rights we have to protect our community from the saloon. Now liquor dealers are required to obtain the signatures of a majority of the residents and property holders on both sides of the street in the square where the saloon is located every year. The new law provides "That when during the year no complaint has been made against a license issued under this act by a majority of the property holders and residents, such proprietor shall not be required to file every year with his application of liecnse such written permission of persons owning real estate and residents." Evidently a perpetual license. We propose to lift up our voices against this movement. Remember us, dear sisters, for this capital is yours as well as ours. We thank you for the grand work done in circulating petitions for prohibition for the District of Columbia. A great many have been returned to us and will be presented at an early day. CLARA L. ROACH.

THE RURAL DISTRICTS AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The importance of arousing the rural districts can easily be seen in the result of the elections in Ohio—the amendment defeated by the majorities of six cities, as I see estimated by one writer, and even if this be incorrect the truth is apparent that the hope of prohibition is in the voters of the country or small towns. This thought has rested heavily upon me ever since I was appointed county president and began to think of the needs of the county. O for an organization of some kind in every township, in every school district!

We appointed at our convention an organizer for every township, some one to "work up" the matter, secure a house, and have a meeting appointed.

We have really done nothing of note yet, but the time has been short and the season not good for country work, or rather for work in the country of this kind. I am sure if we neglect this field we are committing a great mistake Look at the time of a great political campaign. The most insignificant schoolhouse—and if there is no schoolhouse a grove is used—is not neglected; every voter is seen and his duty urged upon him. One great advantage politicians have, or the political managers, they can always secure speakers, and it appears with less money; the money may come from somewhere but it is not drawn directly from the people as in the temperance work.

It seems no matter how many men and women, young and old, engage in the lecturing business, the demand is all the time greater than the supply, or else there is a great lack of the means necessary to secure them, and in this country work I know this is one trouble. I would like to employ a lecturer in this county for one month or more. There are fifteen townships in the county and I feel that I could, like Simeon, "depart in peace" from the position of president at least, if I could see some kind of a temperance organization in every township first—but where is my speaker, and where is the money to secure one? How is it to be obtained? After there is a society especially of the W. C. T. U. something can be done, they can cast about for means; but where the work is most needed there is not only no society but very little sentiment in favor of it.

It is missionary work we want, real missionary work out in the byways and hedges, Not for a moment would I discourage the work in cities and towns or anywhere—but the country, dear sisters, the country voters only can save Illinois or any other state from the curse of liquor selling; but they must be aroused. They may not be really ignorant, but they are careless, unconcerned. The good, honest, conscientious farmer who likes his cider, perhaps even a glass of beer occasionally, only needs thorough enligtenment to be a "stalwart" for prohibition. If we could have a few lecturers or organizers paid by the state funds, and that brings me to the finance question. I think our membership fees are small, so small that we can not be otherwise than poor in our local societies, in our state and national treasuries, but I know by our own experience, and as our good Methodist brethren say, humanity is the same under the same conditions everywhere, that it would be difficult, perhaps dangerous, to increase them. I know we cannot collect them now, and that we pay state fees out of our treasury for members who have not paid their dues for years. It may be said this is bad management, perhaps it is, but we can still hold as members and have to work upon committees, and in local affairs, persons who would not have anything at all to do with us if it cost them anything, and where a society is numerically weak such members are often worth a great deal. In some cases I have no doubt the "spirit" is willing but the "means" are "weak," but O, how many, many hundreds and hundreds of cases where the "means" are plenty and the "spirit" weak.

I don't know what to advise. Some societies I'm sure are able to pay more; some I know would be ruined by the means, and I fear it would be against this new "forward march" into the country retreats that some of us are so anxiously contemplating. M. I. W.

FROM SUMMER LAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Would you care to hear from a California brother-in-law and honorary member? If so here goes. I am the one that stayed at home and made the nice roll of butter while wife drove into Los Angeles to attend the organization of the W. C. T. U. when Miss Willard was out here. I had a little experience in working for the W. C. T. U. a couple of weeks since. A district convention for the Los Angeles district M. E. church was held in Los Angeles. One evening the agent for our university made a stirring appeal for more room, or funds for a new building, urging as one reason the necessity for a Christian, a religious, a moral school; the fact that Christianity religion and morals are, with the Bible, driven out of our public schools being urged as a reason. The next day in convention the committee on temperance brought in the usual preamble of whereas, etc., showing up the evils of the liquor traffic and resolutions of denunciation against it and in favor of its overthrow. In my ignorance I thought it a good time for something practical, and offered an amendatory resolution in view of what the university agent had told us the night before, requesting the authorities in the university to introduce temperance text books into its curriculum. One man replied that the evil effects of alcohol were taught in the chemistry class. And then in the rush and hurry without chance to reply, my amendment was voted down unanimously, and the report of committee was adopted. What next? Please, ladies of the W. C. T. U., send Mrs. Hunt out here as soon as possible.

Now an item about raisin culture, vs. wine culture. There are in this country persons who think the latter much more remunerative than the former, and even members of churches, who deliver raisin grapes to the winery because they can't afford to let the grapes waste.

Now for figures. Three tons of grapes produce one ton of raisins. In either case producer must gather and deliver.

One ton of raisins delivered at railroad warehouse easier than three tons of grapes at winery.

Grapes at winery valued at $18.00 per ton, three tons, $54.00.

Dried grapes in sacks at three cents a pound, $60.00 per ton—$6.00 per ton for drying and sacking; dried grapes frequently worth five and six cents; dried grapes at five cents, worth $100.00 per ton; dried grapes at six cents a pound worth $120.00, or $40.00 per ton for grapes, and margin of $22.00 per ton simply for drying and sacking.

But come to raisins. They must be dried, then put in sweat boxes and cured, then assorted and packed in boxes as layer, or otherwise, according to quality. But first quality of layers are worth twelve and a half cents per pound, $250.00 per ton, or $83.33 for one ton of grapes, leaving a margin of $6,33 on each ton of grapes for drying curing and packing at least $50.00 net. Even at 10 cents per pound, raisins equal $200.00 per ton, which is $66.66 for grapes, a margin of $48.66, for curing and packing and net gain of $30.00 easy. Even when raisins are sold at $1.50 per box, or seven and a half cents per pound equals $50.00 per ton. Margin in favor of raisins $32.00 for each ton of grapes. Allow one half for curing and packing leaves a net value for each ton of grapes of $34.00 against $18.00 for wine. Now when it is known that four and a half to six tons of grapes are grown to the acre, you readily see that raisin making yields net gain of $70.00 to $225.00 perton above wine grapes. We have had a little experience in raisin making; have a few made three years ago. Wife suggests that we send you a sample. Clusters are not large owing to bees troubling the grapes. We think they are fair samples for three years old.

Now, Mrs. Editor, do not be discouraged at the length of this, because you are not to use any of it only as you need it, and no harm done if you throw it all in the waste basket. I must add that we are more than pleased with the crusade number of THE UNION SIGNAL. It is worth more than the whole year's subscription. If wife was strong enough she would canvass the community for subscribers, but she is frail, and so together, we do what we can.

Now in earnest we need the superintendent of scientific instruction very soon out here, and in the meantime let us besiege the Throne of Grace for the power from on high which alone can convince. JOHN H. STUNTZ.

NATIONAL LICENSE vs. STATE PROHIBITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Mrs. Sallie Chapin, in her Alabama letter, published some time since, says: "Gadsden is situated in Etowah county, which is prohibition, and yet the federal officials have issued one hundred and seven licenses to parties to retail whisky in this county, and it is simply impossible for the state thus interfered with to enforce its prohibitory laws." Now does such license interfere with the prohibitory law of the state? Cannot the state enforce its law just the same? Is it considered by the courts of Alabama that a United States license releases a man from the penalty prescribed by the state for the breaking of her law? Does not such license simply say in effect that this man is free from any claim of the United States upon him, and that he may sell for all that she shall do to prevent? That by such selling he is not, having paid a certain amount to the general government, liable to arrest and prosecution by that government? Is not a liquor seller just as amenable to the laws of the state as though he held no United States license? We have in this state a local option law which allows each town to say whether it will have liquor sold within its territory or not, but I do not suppose that the United States authorities know just how every little township in Minnesota stands on the liquor question. If a man applies to them for a license, and pays for it, I suppose he gets it, and he has then only the authorities of the state or town to look out for. But so far I have heard no complaint that the United States licenses hindered the workings of the local option with us. Has the matter ever been tested? How is it in Maine, our oldest prohibitory state? Can she not enlighten us?

I remember seeing, within the last year, a statement made in the interest of free liquor, which gave the number of saloons in Maine, as compared with the number in some state which had no prohibitory law. The number I do not now remember, but I know I wondered that so many should exist in that state, and spoke to several about it. One person finally said to me: "Why, they run saloons under the United States licenses!" I don't know what authority that person had for saying so, but you see the idea is abroad, to some extent, that United States licenses do protect against a state prohibitory law. Do the courts of Maine hold this to be a fact, or the saloons within the borders of that state owe their existence solely to the lack of prohibitory sentiment in some parts of her domain! Will Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, our vice president for Maine, give us some information on this matter? AURILLA FURBER.

THE ALCHEMY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have just been re-reading Horace Mann's admirable educational reports and have been impressed with the following:

A clergyman interested in educating and developing youth, kept a school diary, in which he recorded the diligence, proficiency and moral deportment of his pupils. On recurring to it in after years, with few exceptions it answered well "as an index for the volume of their subsequent lives." But, says the report: "There is one vice, indeed, or rather prolific parent of all vices, which disturbs this great law of probabilities, and often falsifies indications given by an exemplary youth, of an honorable old age. It is the vice of intemperance. This vice is a horrid alchemy, which transmutes every thing good into evil; and, not merely changing affinities but corrupting the very elements on which it works, renders it impossible ever afterward to restore them to their pristine strength and purity. It is the theological opposite of regeneration, for it depraves depravity itself."

How active we of the W. C. T. U. should be in our efforts to exterminate the practice of this "horrid alchemy," in instilling temperance, Christian principles into the hearts and lives of the youth and little ones of our time. Our only hope for prohibition in future years lies in the power which will then be vested in those who are now the little prattlers around us. Their soft plastic minds and hearts are now being molded for future usefulness and good, or for wickedness and vice. Let their hearts and minds then be filled with love for Christ. Let the impress of temperance Christian charity and purity be stamped in unfading characters on their young lives, and they in their turn will mold their children into firm, earnest workers for Christ and his kingdom. Let us make their hearts such a garden of lovely flowers that there will be no room or sustenance for grass or weeds.

The Sunday school and Band of Hope work I conceive to be the most important of all the great work given us to do. As a test of our love to Him, Christ has said, "Feed my lambs." Shall we not give to them the "Bread of Life"? Let me quote again from the wise Massachusetts educator: "Not only in the beginning, when God created the heavens and the earth, did he say, 'Let there be light.' Whenever a human soul is born into the world, its Creator stands over it, and again pronounces the sublime words, 'Let their be light.'" God help us all to live in the light, and to be active agents in shedding abroad the vivifying rays of His gospel of peace and love. MARY READ GOODALE,

"A HYMN FOR THE HOME."

Air.—'Sweet Bye and Bye.'

Here's a thought for the fathers today,
Here's a theme for the mother's fond prayer:
Will our loved ones be tempted astray
By the demon of drink to his lair?
Chorus.—We will stand for the right,
With its hope for the ages to come;
We will win in the fight,
For we battle for God and the home.

Oh! drive back the dark shadow of night
That now lowers so darkly above;
Help the lost back again to the light;
Bring them home to the sunshine of love.
Chorus.

By one step that you take in the way,
By one note that you sing in the song,
You may lead back a brother astray;
You may pierce the frail arm of wrong.
Chorus.

There is more than a 'man to elect,'
There is more than a 'party to win';
There's a torrent of evil to check,
There's a victory to gain over sin.
Chorus.

A FEARFUL INHERITANCE.

BY HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD.

'Percy Perry, mother?'

'Yes, my dear, Percy, Perry.'

'Marry him?'

The scorn in the young girl's voice was superb in its passionate strength; the intensity of loathing could not have been more perfectly expressed by the most finished actress before the footlights.

'Yes, marry him; I don't see anything so very dreadful about it; there is no occasion for heroics.'

'No, mother, I suppose not. I have no doubt it seems a very easy thing to you, to marry a drunken imbecile.'

'Hush, Marion, I will not hear Mr. Perry spoken of in that manner. We ought to be very grateful for the offer.'

'Grateful to Percy Perry, for offering to marry me, mother; you are beside yourself!'

Mrs. Mortimer colored slightly, but went calmly on. When she had a point to carry she never allowed herself to get excited. She expected this demonstration on the part of her daughter. It was disagreeable but inevitable, and the sooner it was over the better. It had required a good deal of cool courage on her part to open the subject at all. But she possessed coolness and courage, in an eminent degree for a woman, and there was more than a suspicion of will in the firm curve of the upper lip.

'He will make you a good husband. He may have been a little wild, perhaps, but all young men are that—he is no worse than the rest.'

'Mother, if he was not a rich man's son you would not condescend to speak to him. I will not, as it is.'

'It is true Marion, that you have treated him disgracefully; but when a young man is in love, he bears everything.'

'He in love! He has never dreamed of such a thing. It is you who have put the idea of marrying me into his head. He knows how I despise him—'

'May I ask if there is anyone else who will marry you this winter? you know I cannot hold on here another three months to save my life; and your prospects are of even more importance to me. I have got to the end of my resources. Everything must now depend upon you. What will you do, Marion? Don't act like a silly child, but talk like a sensible girl, as you are.'

Marion Mortimer was silent for a moment, revolving many things in her mind. One momentary thought she gave to one who had long been her friend, but who had never said he loved her, but she could not not mention him to her mother, and when she spoke she only said: 'Let us go to work.'

'What will you do, Marion?'

'I don't know. Why have you not had me taught to do something, poor as we are?'

There was fierce indignation in her heart, as she said it, not only against her mother, who had brought her up so indolently and so luxuriously that at eighteen she was absolutely untaught in anything whereby she could earn a dollar, but against the world, whose way was to reduce a young girl to such absolute helplessness that there was but one thing in the world for her to do, and that to marry—whether she desired it or not. Marion Mortimer had not been a very thoughtful girl, and it was not until this thing came home to her with sudden crushing power, that the wrong in it struck her in all its hideous proportions.

'There is nothing that a girl like you can do, nor a woman like me. You know how frightfully I have struggled for an existence since your father died. I am much stronger and more capable than you, but I cannot earn my living by any honest means, nor can you.'

Poor Marion knew far too well all the struggling and scheming there had been to keep her in school, to pay her music bills and clothe her, even in that sweet simplicity which her mother had affected, as a matter of principle, to think it a desirable outlook for the future. She had inherited, too, luxurious tastes and indolent habits, and had but little of the sturdy strength which is born of endeavor, to fall back upon. But she shrank from this last dread ordeal with all the passionate strength of her nature. She recoiled from it as from sudden death. Indeed, I think that death would have shone forth to her in an alluring light only, as a contrast to this sacrifice which was expected of her.

'But, mother, Percy Perry,' the heart break in the tone touched even the worldly woman, whose firm resolve it was to mount to ease and wealth through this very marriage. But she hesitated only for an instant.

'He is kind-hearted and amiable, my darling child; you can make him what you choose after marriage.'

'Mother, I have no right to expect to change him after marriage. I should marry him knowing him to be a drunkard and a roue, and it would serve me right to have him remain as he is, as he would certainly do. Mother, I will never, never, never do it, not if we starve!' And she swept from the room with the air of a queen.

Her mother was deeply touched. 'She took it much harder than I thought she would,' she mused. 'I should have felt just the same at her age. But what else can we do?' Although there was no real thought of relenting in her heart, yet she was sorry in a sentimental sort of way—for the poor girl whose fate she had decided as many other mothers have done, off hand, scarcely consulting the victim in the affair at all.

When Marion had reached her own room, she gave way to tears for the first time, and for a time felt much relieved, and strengthened in her resolve. For a long time she sat musing then she took up a book which lay near and turned over the marked leaves, pausing long at every passage, and studying it intently. On the fly-leaf was written in a strong, firm hand, 'Cyril Carpenter.' He was the friend of whom she thought in her extremity. It was a book he had brought her to read, and she was much interested in it for his sake. Not that they were lovers; perhaps neither of them had ever thought about loving the other. They were young and had time enough for that ahead. They were friends, a little partial to each other perhaps, their young friends thought, but no word had been spoken between them—of aught but friendly interest. Still the book seemed to have a fascination for Marion to-day. Was she seeking to put some new meaning into the many marked passages? Had it suddenly dawned upon her, since this obnoxious marriage had been spoken of, that there was but one man in the world whom she could marry?

The Sunday School Lesson.

Jan. 27. LESSON IV. 1884.

TOPIC.—LIVING AS IN GOD'S SIGHT.

TEXT.—James 4: 7-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. James 3: 10.

TIME.—A. D. 50.

PLACE.—See lesson 3.

TEACHINGS FOR TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

1. Resisting, that is, saying "No" to the devil. What a little simple thing this is, and yet because it is not done, the world lieth in sin and iniquity abounds. Sorrow, sin and crime, all come of not saying "Yes" to God. In teaching young children this text it can be made very effective by instancing some of their own temptations and asking whether they have said "Yes" to God or the devil—"No" to the devil or to God.

2. God's command to us that we humble ourselves to Him savors to some minds, and especially young minds, of an imperiousness which the carnal spirit naturally resists. A young girl who had been carefully trained in a Christian home, once shocked her Sunday school teacher by saying, "I don't love a God who keeps telling me to bow down to Him." Later in life, disciplined by sorrow, she saw that it was only the phrasing of the command that had troubled her. She had become acquainted with God and found Him as she afterward said, "the only reasonable being in the universe,"— a Creator, Savior, Friend, who only seeks our happiness and our most blessed development, and so asks us to put ourselves where only we can secure it, "under the shadow of His wing." Submitting ourselves to Him that He may give us the Paradise for which He created us. To humble ourselves to God is only doing as a child does when it puts its hand in that of its mother on going out for a pleasure excursion, saying, "Take me where we shall have the best time."

3. Humility is not necessarily humiliation. It is the spirit of Christ, and there is nothing humiliating about this. The reason so many persons shrink from the grace of humility is the fear of loss of self-respect, whereas the truth is that if Christ's words be true, the humble soul has every reason to feel exalted.

Said Jesus, setting a little child in the midst, "Whosoever therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

4. The fruits of humility are the graces which James exhorts the Jewish converts to especially seek. When we are truly humble, we shall not speak evil of our brother; we shall not judge him guilty because he follows another law in all good conscience, nor consider ourselves the judge of the law. We shall not boast ourselves in planning, with a false sense of security, for length or prosperity of life, forgetting Him who:—

"Wisely heeds to give or to withhold,
And knoweth more of all our needs
Than all our prayers have told."

A Greek philosopher was once asked: "What is Jupiter doing?" The answer was, "Exalting the lowly and abasing the lofty." Our God is better than Jupiter. He begs us to be lowly so that He can lift us up. Even God's omnipotence cannot raise the proud soul to nearness with Himself.

5. Nearness to God is the only entirely comfortable relation in this world. It is the one we should all seek most diligently if we fully comprehended its blessedness. It is the best point of outlook on the world, showing all things in their true light and absolutely preserving life's perspective. It is gained by a simple act of faith—a belief in the promise, "Draw near to God and He will draw near to you."

THE pebbles in our path weary us and make us footsore, more than the rocks, which only require a bold effort to surmount.

WE speak of educating our children. Do we know that our children also educate us?

WE let our blessings grow mouldy, and then call them curses.

Our Children.

THE TWELVE LITTLE BROTHERS.

The New Year gave a dinner to twelve little brothers,
Not one of whom had the same taste as the others;
The Moons, they are called, from the very large size
And wonderful roundness of all of their eyes.

'Twas a mild winter evening, exactly at five,
When the twelve little brothers began to arrive.
March came in a comforter big as a shawl;
And August without any stockings at all;
And Feb. in an ulster, although he was small;
And April in boots, which he left in the hall;
December in arctics—he feared he would fall,
And therefore was constantly giving a haul
To the straps; and November, if right I recall,
Had brought an umbrella in case of a squall;
And May had a beautiful blue parasol;
And then came July with rosy-cheeked Jan.,
Though Jan. was in furs, and July had a fan;
And Septy and Octy in round caps and frills;
And June in a pinafore old as the hills.

There was plum pie and peacock and turtle and thyme;
And more than I ever can tell in my rhyme.
May remarked, "If you please, I'll take lamb and green peas,"
While September exclaimed, "Apple dumplings and cheese;"
And July was inquiring for lemons to squeeze;
And August for ices his palate to freeze;
And June a great spoon did impatiently seize
And drummed on the table for "fresh strawberrees!"
November said, "Turkey—I can't wait a minute!"
December said, "Pudding, with cinnamon in it!"
Jan. clamored for oysters—March hinted "Half-shell;"
Feb. thought chicken salad would do very well;
Said Octy. "Dessert without nuts can't excel;"
And April was anxious his wishes to tell—
(They were chiefly boiled eggs)—till, the tumult to quell,
The New Year made use of his silver hand-bell.
And was forced to confess, not at all at his ease,
That there never were twelve little brothers like these.
And he rose and declared he would stand it no more,
And the twelve little brothers he savagely bore,
By their twelve little collars, outside of his door;
And the last thing I heard of was June's pina ore,
Which caught on the door-knob and dolefully tore.

So, if these little brothers, in good eighty-four,
Get treated to weather they'll sadly deplore;
And it rains every day in the sweet month of May,
And freezes in August, my readers can say
That the twelve little brothers, so fractious and queer,
Have excited the wrath of the lordly New Year.

MR. WHITTIER'S BOYHOOD.

John Greenleaf Whittier's boyhood was passed in Haverhill, Mass., in a lonely farmhouse half hidden by oak woods, with no other home in sight. Here, he says, on stormy nights:

> We heard the loosened clapboards tost,
> The board-nails snapping in the frost;
> And on us, through the unplastered wall,
> Felt the light-sifted snow-flakes fall.

Besides a brother and two sisters, there were few companions. The father was a good Quaker, one of the selectmen of the town; the mother a refined, dignified woman, fond of reading the best books. She spun and wove the linen and woolen cloth needed in the family, always finding time to teach her children from the Bible. There were only twenty volumes in the home, most of these journals of Quaker ministers; and the only fresh book for the young boy was the yearly almanac! He longed for reading, especially for books of biography and travel; and whenever he heard of a volume he would walk miles in the snow to borrow it.

When he was fourteen, his first schoolmaster, Joshua Coffin, brought a volume of Burns to the house and read it aloud. Little John was delighted, begged him to leave it, and lo! forthwith began to make rhymes, and to imagine stories and adventures.

This is not the first time that a book has changed or swollen the current of a life. Faraday would have remained a book-binder, perhaps, if he had not read an article on electricity in a book he was binding. Robert Dick became the noted Scottish geologist from reading a book of Hugh Miller's. Between one baking and another, he often walked fifty and eighty miles, toiling at his scientific diggings and hammerings and spyings, with but a dry biscuit for food, which he moistened in brooks by the roadside.

Whittier's eldest sister, Mary, encouraged him to write in the spare moments he could save from work on the farm, and errand-going for his mother; and, moreover, she sent one of his poems to the Newburyport Free Press, edited by William Lloyd Garrison. Says Mr. Whittier:

> Some weeks afterward the news-carrier came along on horseback and threw the paper out from his saddle-bags. My uncle and I were mending fences. I took up the sheet, and was surprised and overjoyed to see my lines in the "Poet's Corner." I stood gazing at them in wonder, and my uncle had to recall me several times to my work.

Some time after this Mr. Garrison called at the farmhouse to see the young poet, who was at work in the fields, simply clad—like a true farmer boy—in shirt, pantaloons and straw hat. With beating heart he made himself ready to meet the editor. Mr. Garrison encouraged him, urging his father to send him to school. Young Whittier desired an education, but there was no money to procure it. "Where there is a will there is always a way," and reflecting that the young man who worked for his father in summer made shoes in winter, he followed his example, and thus earned enough to carry him though a six months term at the Haverhill Academy. After making provision for his board, tuition and books, he had twenty-five cents left in his pocket! This he carried all the term, not spending a cent more than he had planned at the beginning—and this instance of self-denial and self-control, really Spartan in a schoolboy, is surely a lesson in the art of success. He was popular at the academy, for he was, even as a lad, wholly free from conceit wholly free from egotism—two traits sure to be at once detected and despised by schoolboys. He had a fine, open face, then as now, was witty, somewhat shy, did not talk over much, and was very courteous. His memory was retentive, but from the very first he formed the habit of storing information in note books.

BOYHOOD OF FATHER MATHEW.

He never joined in any cruel sport, or willingly inflicted pain upon a living thing. Coursing and shooting and ferreting, in which his young companions indulged, he detested with all his heart. Once he witnessed, with horror and compassion, the agony of a poor hunted hare in her breathless struggles with the fierce dogs, and from that moment he held the sport in abhorrence. The sight of a shattered wing or a blood-stained breast of a bird filled the heart of the boy with a sense of pain; for his impulse was to succour and befriend, not to persecute and destroy. . . . At another time, a grand entertainment was given to Father Mathew on the Island of Innisfalleh (Killarney), when a stag hunt was arranged for his gratification; but he was not happy so long as the chase lasted, and only enjoyed real pleasure when the gallant stag plunged into the lake, and was thus saved from the fangs of the hounds.—"Father Mathew: a Biography," *by J. ## CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

DEAR CHILDREN;—I want to tell you about some queer beer-drinkers. The love of liquor does not altogether belong to mankind, but the apes share this liking; and one of our exchanges tells how the natives of Darfour and Senaar take advantage of this weakness in order to capture them. They make a fermented beer, of which they know the monkeys to be passionately fond, and go to parts of the forest frequented by them, and set on the ground calabashes full of the enticing liquor. As soon as one monkey tastes it, he utters peculiar cries that attract his comrades. Then they begin an orgie, and in a short time are in various degrees of intoxication. The negroes now appear on the scene but the monkeys are too far gone to distrust them; they cover their enemies with tears and maudlin kisses, and are easily led off and captured. When brought into the village they are securely caged and gradually sobered down.

What a degrading picture is this! Yet as nothing compared with the downfall of men and women with souls, whose ruin is for all eternity. But when we think of the dark forests of Africa, and the staggering monkeys led captive by liquor, and then remember the bright enchantments thrown around the same temptation here, we want to remember that in its effects it is the very same the world over, and that men come to a level with the brutes when they put the bottle to their lips that "steals away their brains."

A BELSSED MINISTRY,

It is very generally known that our superintendent of flower missions, Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, is an invalid, for seventeen years confined to her bed, but it is not so well known that she performs an amount of good work that many a well person would stagger under. After a severe illness of weeks, she came back in the early winter to her usual state of health, or rather invalidism, and set about a task whose accomplishment, in her hands, seemed almost incredible. It seems that on Prison Day, last fall, she had said to the superintendent of flower missions for Kentucky "If you find at Frankfort any poor fellows, convicted of sin and desiring to be led to Christ, take their names for me and I will write them each a personal appeal." When the superintendent returned from that memorable visit to the state penitentary, she brought Miss Casseday the names of one hundred and thirty-five prisoners, each of whom were looking forward to the fulfillment of her promise. At Christmas time, every letter was sent, a real distinct personal letter to each one, together with Christmas Scripture cards, and a choice selection of leaflets and tracts. A lovely Christian woman of Louisville, whose name is a household word in the homes of that city, undertook to be postman, and journeyed to Frankfort with the blessed package. By a sort of secret telegraph, we are in possession of her graphic description of the visit:

MY DEAR MISS JENNIE:—I went to Frankfort according to program and Dr. Gober and wife met me at the car door, took me home and gave me the best room and the best everything until they bade me good bye Monday evening in the car for home. The doctor is a host. Physician at the prison for soul and body and mind! The year before he took the charge there were seventy-five deaths in prison. In the four years he has been there, only twenty-seven have died. Whipping, hanging by the thumbs, etc., is all done away, and the trough used for pouring is burned up; bless the Lord! Now to my visit. In the Sabbath morning at 9 o'clock we visited the women, about forty. They had had service, but all assembled in their very pleasant room, where a large collection and variety of plants gave the appearance of summer. The pictures on the walls were valuable object lessons. They gave undivided mention to what I had to say, and all knelt in prayer. On rising, as I had spoken of "Now, today," one of the colored women commenced, "Better repent, and another took it up and another, until they all joined in "Better repent today, tomorrow you may die!" it was thrilling, a regular plantation song. I gave each a picture card with a verse from the Bible, and we went to the hospital, where I gave a card to each with a word. There were about forty inmates, perhaps six or eight in bed. Had a precious visit with a few personally. At 3 p. m. we went to the chapel, where 449 prisoners besides teachers and visitors were assembled for Sunday school. Dr. Gober was superintendent, and the singing and service was very interesting. After a short session the doctor introduced me as the bearer of your letters to them, and said I would say a few words. I told them of your love and anxiety for them, how you looked, how sick you had been, and how you could not lift the pen for awhile, and that you had sent a letter to every one who sent up his name. O how interested they looked! I then asked them while you and other friends were praying for them how many would today, now, send up their names to Jesus who loved them more than all others could love them, and today have their names recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life. I wish you could have seen the one hundred of hands that went up! Then the doctor called out the names on the letters, and each one went to the stand with shining face as his name was called.

While the letters were being given, I gave a paper or little book to those who had no letter. I told them you sent them, and many said, "God bless her!" Some said we are praying for her. I think there was gratitude enough in that chapel from the hearts of those all dressed alike to satisfy an angel. The bouquets sent by yourself and flower mission they have in frames, so the cards can be read, about five in a frame. I went again on Monday to see them. They are beautiful. How I thank you for this privilege! Though it rained, the pleasure made it all into rainbows.

Since Christmas Miss Casseday has received a letter from one of the prisoners who is a murderer, imprisoned for life, and only ninteen years old. In this he says:

Your very kind letter, from your sick-bed, has reached me on my sick-bed, and how I love to have it read to me, for alas I cannot read. You can never know, for mere words can never describe how welcome the sweet words are. I intend, as soon as possible, to commit every word to memory.

Further on he says:

My heart is full of gratitude to you; I will be a much better boy in future. I will profit by your cheering words. I feel that your advice to me must be as an angel direct from heaven, a messenger direct from God. I have the flowers you sent me in a nice frame, and shall always keep them in remembrance.

Surely this is a blessed ministry. A counterpart of the old Persian legend is here; the flowers of September have turned to prayers. Who shall doubt that these prayers may be found again as flowers, in Sandalphon's hands at the gates of Paradise.

A SIGNIFICANT assembly was that of the body known as the National Reform Association, in Cleveland, on the 11th and 12th of last month. Among the topics discussed, and the speakers were: "Our Politics," by the Rev. Frederick Merrick, former president of Delaware University, Ohio; "Christ's Authority over the Nations," by the Rev. J. B. Helwig, D. D., (Lutheran) of Akron, Ohio; "Divorce Reform," by Bishop Bedell, of the Diocese of Ohio, and the Rev. H. M. Tenny, of Cleveland; "Intemperance and the Republic," by Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, president of the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The resolutions adopted set forth fundamental principles in political philosophy, that God is the source of all authority and the fountain of all law; that nations are moral persons subject to this law and that civil government is a divine institution; that God the Sovereign has vested the government of the world in his Son, Jesus Christ; that nations are expressly commanded to yield allegiance and obedience to him; and that the will of God revealed in the Bible is of supreme authority in civil affairs. These principles, it was declared, ought to be embodied in every constitution of government, and it is a grave defect in our own constitution that it contains no acknowledgement of them. The report of the financial secretary showed the receipt of more than six thousand dollars, from nearly three thousand contributors, during the year which closed June 1st. During the three months just passed the receipts have been almost three thousand dollars, given by more than fifteen hundred contributors in nineteen states and territories. The Hon. Felix R. Brunot was re-elected president. The list of vice presidents embraces more than one hundred names, representing every state and territory.

THE work of the Cleveland Educational Bureau in which our friends Mr. and Mrs. C. E. and Sarah K. Bolton, are the efficient managers, is weighty with significance. It marks a new period in the world's advancement. It is to the great working world what a gentle mother's book, "Reading Without Tears" was to her children. It makes learning possible without too great strain of faculties and muscle. It is education brought to everybody's door. Lectures, musical entertainments, singing schools, all at minimum price of admission where books of the finest, best material, but printed and bound cheaply are circulated freely, make up the outward presentment of this bureau. One of the late books gotten up for this free circulation is Sarah K. Bolton's "People and Places," a description of persons of eminence in the old country where Mrs. Bolton has recently sojourned. It is exceedingly bright, and each personage and place has just enough light thrown upon it to make all vivid and clear in an evening's reading.

THE annual meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of the arch diocese of Chicago was held on Sunday evening last. The exercises were of far more than ordinary interest, and indicate a marvellous growth of total abstinence sentiment among the Catholic laity. Father Hagans, the president, has himself administered 12,000 pledges since last March, but the clergy of the Catholic church were as a rule conspicuous by their absence, and if their interest in this movement be gauged by attendance, it speaks poorly for any extended co-operation with Father Hagans in his noble work. Rev. Father Cleary, of Wisconsin, president of the National Total Abstinence Union, was present and met an enthusiastic reception. The society has doubled the number of its auxilaries during the year. The resolutions are so good that we shall give them entire in another issue.

WITHIN a few days we have received the annual reports of the W. C. T. U. in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Dakota, Colorado, North Carolina, and the province of Ontario, all exceedingly creditable documents. But a word of special praise is due the young organization of North Carolina, which had its first state convention November 27, 1883, and within one month presents its deliberations to the public. Such promptness indicates a live society, and an energy that the people of North Carolina will soon feel. This report boasts also five solid pages of advertising, and one of its advertisements is a "joy' that ought to be widely diffused. It is that of the Benbow House, a hotel of Greensboro, and in large letters it states to the public, "This hotel has no bar, and the proprietor declines to rent any house for that purpose."

A HUMANE effort has been inaugurated by Mrs. Prof. S. M. D. Fry, of Illinois Wesleyan University, to secure a fund that shall place Emma Bond, the victim of the terrible, unpunished outrage at Taylorville, in this state, beyond the reach of want, and in a way to secure the speediest permanent recovery. Already a goodly sum is acknowledged, and in view of the fact that many W. C. T. U. members may enjoy contributing to this fund, Mrs. T. B. Carse, of 159 S. Wood street, Chicago, has been asked to receive and take charge of such contributions, which will be duly acknowledged in THE UNION SIGNAL.

UNINTENTIONAL injustice was done the Interior when it was said that this journal called in question the importance of our anniversary celebrations. A clipping was handed in as from the Interior, and contained some such reflections on our decennial day, but on investigation, it proves to have been wrongly attributed to our good Presbyterian neighbor, and the original source seems utterly "past finding out." As in the case of the mythical Mrs. Harris, we are prepared to believe that "there ain't no sich a person."

ONE of the most notable instances of rapid and healthful W. C. T. U. growth is the Laramie society, organized by Mrs. Shields since the National convention, with ten members, but which now numbers one hundred, and sends thirty dollars to the National treasury, as the result of its anniversary collection.

The Lancet says that in the Zeitschrift fur Analytische Chemie, Herr Kuyper records the fact that he has ascertained by distillation the presence of alcohol in the brains and liver of two persons who had fallen into the water when drunk and had been drowned. In one brain he found about one-fifth of a cubic inch of alcohol, and in one liver a little over half a cubic inch.

A good pastor in whose church "the brethren were nearly all sistren" was in quite a dilemma the other night at prayer meeting. Not a brother present and there were St. Paul's teachings staring him in the face. He "cut his way out" in truly heroic style. Said he, "I hope the sisters will speak. The apostle does not say,—at least the apostle did not mean,—well, I do not quite know what the apostle did mean, but I hope the sisters will speak!"

The crusade anniversary was a real revival in some quarters. The union at Santa Ana, California, which has had but a feeble existence since its organization, blossomed out in full bloom that anniversary evening, and with the clergy and the choirs of the place, did good service for the cause, besides taking up a good California collection for the national society. "Blest be the tie that binds," even if it be only a five cent "tie," it holds "amazing strong."

Five sons of African chiefs are attendants at the "Morris man's school," in Liberia, which I have so frequently mentioned. Eight native boys have joined the churches who never heard the name of Jesus save in this school. Mr. Morris is planning for the future of these boys and girls by introducing silk culture, having found by experiment that the mulberry grows thriftily to tree height in that climate. This he thinks will specially help African girls, and he believes in training mothers for the home since the home is father of the state.

A Washington friend takes me to task for saying that Speaker Carlisle is a total abstainer. Well, I shall fall back on a Kentucky friend who was my authority, and on the general righteousness of the matter by which, of course, he ought to be, if he isn't. Let us hope that he is, or will be very soon a simon pure totally abstaining, temperance man.

I am so glad to record the general testimony that is coming in from all over the country in regard to the absence of wine serving on New Year's day. Gentlemen who made the rounds of official calls at Washington say they saw almost none of it, and that no cabinet ladies were guilty of it, while in other cities, the custom seems to have nearly fallen into blessed desuetude.

* * * * *

While I am about it let me chronicle several other cheering items of the same sort. From the Rev. Chas. Garrett of Liverpool, comes this good word:

The licensing system here is on its last legs—while the habits of our people are wonderfully changing. All the churches are moving, and the day is coming when our churches will be as temperate as yours.

* * * * *

Speaking of New Year's day in Washington, the conspicuous place for wine offering is said to have been Bob Ingersoll's home.

* * * * *

Here is another good item about Remenyi. One of our good temperance women keeps a temperance hotel in Kansas. In this inn Remenyi found a pleasant home for a few days on a recent western trip. By some oversight one day the cook spiced her pudding sauce with the once inevitable brandy. When the bill of fare was presented to the wizard violinist, he ordered for his dessert, "Pudding, without the brandy sauce." We have heard of him before in the role of total abstainer but this is teetotal—sure—and it comes from the head of the house.

* * * * *

I can just imagine how poor, wearied Mrs. Hoffman, president of Missouri W. C. T. U. was gladdened and helped by this New Year's gift: A gentleman, Mr. M. A. Ritchey, of Ritchey Mo. on reading a copy of the annual minutes of the society was so stirred by Mrs. Hoffman's annual address that he at once enclosed to her in an appreciative letter, a check for one hundred dollars, "one half for general state work, and one half for president's salary." May God reward him according to his work. That is blessing enough,

* * * * *

Alice Guernsey, one of the best teachers in Massachusetts, who was present when Mrs. Livermore made her grand temperance speech before the state teachers' association, mourns that nobody took occasion to crystallize the very clear-strained sentiment manufactured then and there in a significant resolution. Well, sister Guernsey, now why didn't you do it yourself? Don't you suppose the spirit's monition was given you to "profit withal"? I don't like to see our women so backward about coming forward on such occasions.

* * * * *

"Belinda Jones," of Georgia, is a character. Her letters to the Augusta Chronicle and Constitutionalist are racy and quaint. Here are a few of her sentences. Speaking of Senator McDonald's proposition to overcome the evils of the liquor traffic, she says:

He wants us to "try moral suasion" does he? Well, hasn't this world been moral 'suading for ages and ages and ages? Hasn't the church been moral 'suading', bemoanin' and preachin' against it? Haven't fathers and mothers been moral 'suadin' and warnin' against it? Haven't wives and children been pleadin' and weepin' against it? Hasn't society and the newspapers been preachin' too, against it? Haven't our rulers been condemn n' and punishin' against it? And hasn't everybody, even the liquor dealers themselves, been mightily preachin' against it? And, in the name of common sense, what good has the preachin' all done, so long as the liquor's been kept right before 'em—stuck right at 'em, under their nostrils, into their mouths and poured down their throats till more'n one-half the world's "chock full and brimmin' over," and goin' down to destruction and ruin as fast as drunkenness and debauchery can carry 'em. What's the good in tellin' em "not to be tempted," when you're doin' all you can to tempt and ruin 'em! Or in tryin' to make 'em believe that liquor ain't good for them, when you seem to think it's so awful good for you!

* * * * *

Belinda must have been trained up in the way of church fairs and suppers. Listen, in proof thereof: It's a weakness of poor unregenerated human nature—inherited from Adam and Eve—to succumb to temptations easily that lie directly in your path, and Satan aggin you on with his honeyed words and delicious inducements! He found out in the Garden of Eden that the turnpike road to human hearts laid directly through their mouths, and he has never since forgot it.

ON DUTY.

News From the Field.

OHIO.

The women of Ohio have commenced another active campaign. They will ask the present legislature to resubmit the question to the voters for constitutional prohibitory amendment.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins is speaking every evening in Mercer, Anglaize, and Allen counties, and new unions are being organized rapidly.

In Celina, January 6, she preached for the M. E. minister in the morning, and gave a temperance lecture to a large audience in the evening. On Monday the ladies came together and organized a W. C. T. U.

Mt. Washington.—The union I organiged here in April '81, and the temperance school with it have gone to rest, after one brief year of earnest pushing. No one felt sufficiently moved to sustain the effort, and my own physical strength was unequal to the task of filling three offices and walking a mile to do the work. I read in The Union Signal of a union composed of two members. I hope their faith has been rewarded by members ere this. After many vain attempts at securing temperance instruction in our public schools, appealing to the teachers of Hamilton coutry in their Institutes, and in soldier's parlance, doing any amount of skirmishing all along the lines, distributing literature, circulating petitions, securing speakers, one a valuable medical exponent of Sewell's plates. As the board refused to have any regular instruction on scientific temperance in the schools, I am using the charts in my own home, "sharp shooting" every caller, and have explained them to some thirty persons. While our union existed, we held five public meetings, Mrs. S. K. Leavitt gave us our first address, a most excellent one. She is very popular here where she spends her summers, and if she could see the dangers of our people as I am compelled to see them, would I think lead the women here to victory. Mrs. Weakly was our first president, abundantly qualified mentally, but bereavement and ill-health ended her services. If the Cincinnati unions will do a little missionary work here next summer they will surely succeed. During the crusade we organized and sent delegations to those who sold liquors in our groceries, obtaining verbal pledges to sell no more. Those within the corporation have faithfully regarded their word as far as known. Those outside were selling soon after. There is a picnic ground where young girls are said to order their beer, and vice prevails. Two beer wagons run through the summer season. A Sunday base ball club exerts its baleful infiuence, which we have tried to stop by appeals to the mayor and the owner of the ground, and yet though dozens of hard drinkers can be easily counted, we are told by public speakers that we are marvelously free from intemperance.

Mr. Harvey gave us two lectures in October, and Mr. Reynolds, one. Two of our M. E. pastors have done good work, but, as before observed, some good organizer should make one more effort. Whom shall it be?

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Little Oxford.—A meeting was held in this place and ably addressed by our state secretary; she also organized a W. C. T. Union.

Phillipsburg.—The W. C. T. U. of this place, and the reform club, held a right royal meeting, which was addressed by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, and others. She also spoke at Belvidere, and at the earnest request of its citizens, returned the following week and addressed an immense throng in the court house. The next morning being election, the W. C. T. U. held a temperance prayer meeting in the hall of the reform club.

Hoboken.—Was favored on December 2 with the presence of Miss Frances E. Willard, who gave one of her matchless addresses in the M. E. church to a crowded house. All hearts were won by her loving, sisterly appeal and rare eloquence. Mrs. Hammer, of Newark, took charge of the devotional exercises, and Mrs. J. T. Ellis, of Flemington, spoke to the pockets, as well as the hearts of the people, and was nobly responded to by a good collection. Mrs. Denman, our first W. C. T. U. president in the state, was on the platform, also Mrs. Dr. McLean, Hoboken W. C. T. U. president. She is abundant in labors, and her noble husband and true manly son join heartily in her work. Seven hundred invitations had been distributed, calling the people to Miss Willard's lecture. It was a model invitation, and Miss Willard declares it to be "the most level headed she had ever seen." If Hoboken does not advance rapidly under such tuition as ex-Governor St. John, Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Dr. McLean can impart, her "candle stick" may be removed, and the light that was within her borders may become darkness.

Mrs. Levi Janvier, president of W. C. T. U. of Princton, N. J., died on Wednesday, 26th of December, at Ocean Grove, of pneumonia. She was the widow of a missionary, who gave his life for India, some years ago, an earnest Christian woman.

—The sad death of James P. Young, found in the Delaware river, will lead some to avoid the drink of death. "Few are aware of how earnestly he struggled with the demon appetite which held him in its grasp; struggles which were ineffectual, because of the temptations thrown in his way 'for the public good;' and the solicitations of 'friends' who ever stood ready with bow and smile, to place before him that which they knew was constantly carrying him downward, and which finally brought him to his grave, and has almost broken the hearts of his parents. Can those 'friends' look with satisfaction upon their work? 'How long, O Lord, how long?'"

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville.—Leaving Tullahoma, Tenn., to spend the winter vacation in Florida, it was my privilege to spend the Sabbath with the W. C. T. U. in this beautiful southern city.

The story of the struggle and triumph of these faithful ones cannot be told in full, so I will only say no more devoted band can be found. Mrs. Gwinn, the able state president, has already matured plans for extending the work. Mrs. E. L. Goodhue, local president, aided by Mrs. Griffin, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Robinson, chairman literature committee, and others, have organized Bands of Hope numbering at least five hundred, among the colored children, and two large bands of white children. The W. C. T. U. sustain their own meetings with profit and interest, distribute large amounts of literature, and by petition after petition secured the "local option" law that is doing so much for the state. They also are to keep up monthly gospel meetings. The tenth anniversary was held in the Baptist tabernacle, Rev. Mr. Gill of Wisconsin, presiding.

By request of the ladies I gave the address of the evening embodying a sketch of the crusade, and the plan of work of our N. W. C. T. U. Judge Archibald, a very prince among men, followed, showing what the women had done in this state.

Mr. Cole, from Iowa, and others gave five minute talks on the work at home.

In spite of many difficulties the meeting was a decided success. Our work is now more fully understood than ever before, and the coming year will witness a great advance. We of the north cannot conceive of the difficulties in the way here in the south, where the prejudice against woman's work is still so strong. The women are now making an effort to secure or build a temperance hall. This is greatly needed, The organization in the state is still imperfect. There are but five white unions, but the number will soon be increased.

RHODE ISLAND.

A HISTORIC ANNIVERSARY.

In the arrangements for the jubilee semi-centennial observances of the Hope street Methodist Episcopal church, Providence Rhode Island, held January 1, it was a happy thought to invite Mrs. J. Ellen Foster to deliver the semi-centennial oration. It was especially fitting that Mrs. Foster should do this, not only from the fact of her being the daughter of the late Rev. Jotham Horton, the founder and first pastor of the church, but also from the eloquence and distinguished position of the speaker herself.

Her opening words "I come unto you in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ" was the text from which her father preached his dedicatory sermon fifty years before; she referred lovingly to his, and her mother's characteristics and their lifework in the church, and of the opposition and ostracism which followed them on account of their anti-slavery and temperance principles. She then dwelt upon the position of John Wesley on the two reforms noted—the stand taken by the Methodist church upon the question of fermented wine at the communion service, and made an eloquent appeal for total abstinence and testimony in its behalf from the membership of the church, looking to them as the custodians, to a great extent, of the vast responsibility which rests upon Christians in this respect, and the necessity of a calm abiding faith which alone can enable the individual to meet the exigencies of the hour.

Mrs. Foster's delivery was quiet and deliberate, and her manner thoroughly self-contained. At times, moved by the inspiration of her thought, she would arise to a height of eloquence, which met a fervent response in hearty "amens" from all parts of the house.

A pleasant little episode transpired shortly after the collation which followed the morning service. Just as Mrs. Foster was about to take her departure, the official board of the Hope street church, presented to her, through their pastor, Rev. T. J. Everett. the old pulpit Bible formerly used by her father in his Sabbath ministrations, the text being marked from which he preached the dedicatory sermon. Her reply was given with much emotion, expressing great pleasure in receiving what would always be held lovingly and sacredly. Mrs. Foster was accompanied by her son, Emory—a fine manly little fellow, who bids fair to walk in the steps of his mother—and her sister, Mrs. Charles Pierce, of Boston.

The day was one of great interest and enthusiasm, bringing together a large company of distinguished clergymen and laymen of the Methodist and other denominations, and also one of pleasure and pride to our white ribboned women, in having our gifted national legislative superintendent brought in this manner, thus prominently before the people.

MICHIGAN.

Jackson.—For some time we have been considering the adoption of some plan of work among the news-boys and boot-blacks of our city. Our union is particularly happy in numbering among its members, our state president. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, who is continually stirring us up to "love and good works," whenever the pressing demands upon her time will permit her to be with us, and our zeal in regard to this work was greatly quickened by her earnest words, and her practical aid was invaluable.

We decided to begin with a new year's dinner to the boys. Appeals were made through the press and from the pulpits for aid in our work. Free tickets were left for the boys at the news depots and printing offices, and on Tuesday morning early a committee of our ladies was in attendance at our room to receive the provisions which came pouring in, in abundance, attesting the interest felt by our citizens in these brave little fellows thus early forced to fight for themselves the battle of life.

And the boys themselves. Long before the appointed hour the door was besieged by the hungry brigade, and when at last they were admitted and filed down to their places how their eyes glistened at sight of the well filled plates and the tables loaded with all manner of good things. One and all were orderly and well behaved throughout the dinner.

After they were seated, a young lady present sang very sweetly one or two appropriate verses, and then a short, fervent prayer was offered by Mrs. Lathrap and a blessing invoked. After the sharpness of their appetites was somewnat appeased, an effort was made to interest the boys in the plan of an evening meeting. Many of them seemed much pleased with the idea and promised to attend. One of our members took the names of all the boys. Inquiries elicited the information that many of the boys attended Sunday school, and the rest were urged to become members of some school.

An earnest appeal was made to the boys by a gentleman present, to give up the use of tobacco, and many of them promised to do so. In departing each one was supplied with a bag of candy, with a card attached bearing a Scripture text.

Three times were the tables set and similar exercises repeated until one hundred and twelve boys had been fed bountifully and dismissed with happy hearts and cheerful faces, and the weary but pleased ladies of our union who had been so busily engaged in serving them were at liberty to sit down and talk over the affair. All voted it a complete success, and not the least pleasant feature of the occasion was the awakening of a new interest in our work and the bringing of several ladies into active, working sympathy with us, increasing considerably the membership of our union So bountiful had been the supply of provisions, that some twelve baskets were filled, not exactly with the "fragments" that remained but with an abundant supply of various good things, and sent out to as many poor families, bringing a gleam of sunshine on the new year's day into many a heart and home otherwise lacking every comfort.

R. E. F.

Coldwater.—When the wave of crusade fire was passing through our state and so many hearts did burn within, we too caught the spark, but we could not expect a flaming union to rise in Coldwater, however, we did organize, and have endeavored to hold weekly meetings. Have paid our dues to state, district and headquarters, sent delegates to conventions, observed special days distributed literature, circulated petitions and are now sending two copies of The Union Signal to the lumbermen. We also have public lectures, always making them free. We have a good union, church temperance organization. Mrs. J. Ellen Foster gave one of her logical addresses to a large and appreciative audience Nov. 12th. We were unable to celebrate the crusade anniversary, as we desired, for the pastors all had their arrangements made for Christmas previous to the request. The pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. F. L. P. Collin, gave us a grand sermon in the evening, regarding the temperance sentiment of the present time, as largely the outgrowth of the crusade. As our collections on that day are appropriated to the poor of our Sabbath school, we thought the best we could do would be to vote a small sum from our little treasury, which will be sent to the national headquarters.

Mrs. S. K. Cassada.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Parkersburg.—Our local W. C. T. U. is in the municipal fight. A prohibition convention gave us an anti-license ticket. Democrats and republicans both put up strong license tickets. The battle is planned. We have districted the town, established headquarters at the Freeman office, put out our "colors" with National motto, arranged for thorough canvass of ticket in each district, called in the forces of the Y. W. C. T. U., arranged for public mass meetings, and for private appeals in the various workshops at noon. Telegraphed Jennie

Smith to come on duty in the railroad shops. Organized our colored forces, (have already a most royal colored Band of Hope which I organized last spring). We have proceeded on the principle that "the gods help those who help themselves."

WISCONSIN.

The 23d of December was celebrated by many of our unions. Eureka, Menasha, Augusta, Fort Atkinson, Evansville, Warren and New Richmond have reported. Others have not yet sent in their collections, and still others have thought it wiser to observe memorial day at some time in January, as Christmas and New Year are so generally appropriated by the Sunday school.

About six hundred and fifty circulars were sent out to the ministers of the different denominations asking them to preach temperance sermons, and take collections for our work on Dec. 23d. Some of them complied with our request. In Beloit, Mrs. Jeannie M. Jones, pastor of the Christian church, was appointed by the other pastors to present the cause of the W. C. T. U. at a union meeting. Their collection has been sent in, and also the collection taken by Rev. Geo. N. Horton, pastor of the M. E. church at Stevens Point.

Since our annual meeting three new unions have been organized, at Prairie du Chien, La Crosse and Trempealeau. The La Crosse Union has already opened a coffee house, the only one in the state. A good beginning.

Our older unions are sending in good reports. More than ever before mention THE UNION SIGNAL among the temperance papers taken, which augurs well for the year's work.

One secretary writes of several somewhat discouraging things, and then adds, 'But we shall be heard from yet," and so we hope of all our unions.

The state headquarters, opened a year ago with so much trepidation, have proved so useful to our local unions as to be deemed almost indispensable, and are continued this year at Room 3, 31 Pinckney St., Madison, with considerable addition to furniture and supplies.

Our superintendent of juvenile work, Mrs. Eva C. Griffith, of Whitewater, writes: "The people never seemed so much interested before and our work of organization is progressing."

The good time is coming even in Wisconsin.

CANADA.

MRS. MCLAUGHLIN IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin of Boston, whose temperance addresses in Montreal in October last awakened wide spread interest and no little enthusiasm, has recently, under engagement with Brome county alliance, delivered four lectures in this district at Knowlton, Waterloo, East Farnham and Sutton. Her fame as a temperance lecturer had preceded her and she has been everywhere welcomed by very large audiences. Several other villages were desirous of securing Mrs. McLaughlin to "come over and help them" but her engagements in the states forbade her remaining longer with us. Amongst many appreciative newspaper notices, the following paragraph, from the Cowansville Observer of December 27th, though one of the briefest, will serve to show something of the spirit in which this faithful worker has been received here:

"Lamenting and deprecating the indifference and inactivity, 'the idle silence' of temperance people, reminding intelligent citizens of their terrible responsibility for the misuse of the right of suffrage 'which the God of nations has given them;' rejoicing in the advanced position which the Christian church is taking on this question, and deploring the fact that the church has not yet risen to the full measure of its duty and its opportunities; exhibiting in bold relief and painting in startling colors the terrible perils to the young and the immeasurable evils of the liquor traffic and the complicity and the fearful responsibility of the moderate drinker as well as the indifferent voter; portraying with almost superhuman vividness and eloquence the terrible work of the high class hotel or saloon as well as that of the groggery of the slum; dissecting and demolishing with masterly hand the stereotyped arguments of the liquor dealer and antiprohibitionist,—arraigning with trenchant words and unsparing fidelity each and all of these classes and evils, she yet uses no invective, employs no reckless and irritating denunciation, attempts no ridicule, evidently studying to illustrate the spirit of the famous resolution which is said to have been passed in convention at the organization of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, in substance as follows: 'Realizing that our cause is arrayed against mighty and relentless forces, we will go forward in the strength of Him who is Prince of Peace, meeting argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, and all our difficulties and trials with prayer.'"

MISSOURI.

MRS. HOFFMAN'S LIST OF ENGAGEMENTS IN MISSOURI.

Strawberry, Jan. 9; Grant City, 10 and 11; Maryville, 12 and 13; Rochester, 14; Burlington Junction, 16 and 17; Cameron, 19 and 20; Lathrop, 21; Golden City, 23 and 24; Lamar, 25; West Plains, 27 and 28; Springfield, 29; Greenfield, 30; Nevada, 31 and Feb. 1.

HANNIBAL.—Memorial day was duly observed here. In the morning several of our pastors preached strong sermons upon woman's work for temperance, and in the afternoon a mass meeting was held in the tabernacle with fair attendance in spite of very bad weather. We have had a gospel temperance meeting every Sunday afternoon right through the summer's heat and winter's cold. The day of prayer was observed by a two hour prayer meeting, morning and afternoon. The pastors of the Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist and Presbyterian churches conducted the services. We had two good entertainments last month, Mrs. Haggart's able lecture, and Miss Meade's "character sketches." Mrs. Gottlieb Vaterland lives in her, and expresses some very lucid views of "der amendment" in Iowa. Der aggshun of der eggstreme court in Gottlieb's case, will live in history. This month we hope for the pleasure of hearing George Woodford and Edward Carswell.

ALABAMA.

A CALL FOR A CONVENTION.

In view of the fact that the Temperance Alliance of Alabama, meets at Tuscaloosa, on the 23nd of January, 1884, and believing in co-operation in the great cause, I therefore, as president of the W. C. T. U. of Alabama, call a meeting of the state union of Alabama to meet at three o'clock p. m. on the 22d of January, in the city of Tuscaloosa, and respectfully request all unions in the state to send representatives to said state convention. All ladies in the state that are friendly to the cause, are invited to attend the same.

Distinguished workers from Chicago, Ill., and from Germantown, Pa., are expected.

MRS. L. C. WOODLIFF,
State President, W. C, T. U.

VERMONT.

MIDDLEBURY.—The tenth anniversary of the crusade was enthusastically celebrated throughout our state. Meetings in the large towns were addressed by able speakers. The president of our state Mrs. E. G. Greene, has been in Tunbridge addressing an educational meeting, on the new school law; a subject of much interest to the people, she has also organized several W. C. T. Unions.

The temperance cause is marching on to a glorious time when this curse, which we seek to destroy, shall be a matter of history only.

The elegant memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL was generally distributed in all the churches of the state, and we hope the subscription list will be greatly increased thereby.

MRS. M. A. MUNROE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CHAMBERSBURG.—The visit of Mrs. McLaughlin to the W. C. T. U. of Chambersburg, Franklin county, Pa., has caused its members to thank God and take courage. We were but a feeble folk, and too prone to look at the discouragements and obstacles thrown in our way. We saw the many who stood aloof; we saw the apathy of those who, suffering from the curse of strong drink, still withheld the helping hand. We saw a mighty foe arrayed against us. We did not look to and depend upon our mighty Helper as we should have done. Mrs. McLaughlin's words of cheer, her earnest appeals, her record of the rewards given to stronger faith elsewhere, her undaunted courage, her womanly Christian gentleness, her unfaltering trust in and dependence upon God, all taught us a lesson we will not soon forget.

We know that our efficiency will be greatly increased by our added numbers, and by our better knowledge of the work that lies before us. The testimony is the same from every place she visited in the county. Feeble unions have been strengthened, new ones have been formed, and over one hundred additional members have been enrolled. The interest excited was not confined to the ladies. The gentlemen came in crowds to hear her, and vied with each other in their expressions of approval, and gave material aid by generous contributions. We hope to see the strength and depth of their convictions stand the test, when they are called upon in the future to cast their vote for absolute prohibition of all intoxicating liquor.

OREGON.

CORVALLIS. — By entertainments, subscriptinos, and otherwise, the W. C. T. U. has been gathering means for over a year, to establish a reading-room and coffee-house. Finally, all things being ready, we advertised in ringing verses, a "Book and Dish Sociable," asking our friends to come and partake of our tea, and cakes, and music, bringing us in return, pot or pan, table or chair, books or knives, in fact anything for lunch-room as well as reading-room. Our sociable was a success. The gifts brought in were afterward professionally valued at $100, quite enough for young people like us to start to housekeeping on. The room we had procured for our purpose, was in a filthy condition, as to the walls especially, having been used for "keeping store" every since Corvallis had stood as a town; but we all went to work with soap and brush, paper and paint. Our kind merchants gave us all their odds and ends of old wall paper, just enough of a sort to make a panel. So our walls are covered with patch-work panels, with a "high art" dado; and all the many colors in such harmony that I believe Oscar Wilde himself would gaze and admire. Several gentlemen helped us, and we worked hard, and by Thanksgiving Day we were ready to open. On the evening of the day we opened with prayer, coffee, and sandwiches. We sent our best hat around, which gained us $6.00, after paying all expenses. We have engaged a good manager; and up to date we may fairly say our coffee-room and reading-room may be considered a success. Col. Hogg. has presented us Appleton's splendid Encyclopedia, which we consider the very making of our library.

ILLINOIS.

NOTES FROM THE THIRTEENTH DISTRICT.

The W. C. T. U. of Christian county, under the leadership of Mrs. Fannie McBride, the county president, have been untiring in their efforts to arouse the people to an interest in temperance.

As there is no provision made by the W. C. T. U. for a county fund, upon which the county officers may draw to aid in spreading temperance truths, a committee was appointed at the W. C. T. U. county convention, held at Taylorville in June, to arrange for a county exposition for the benefit of county temperance work. It was held in Taylorville, the county seat, three days on Nov. 27, 28, and 29, and proved a decided success, both financially and as arousing public sentiment. Two hundred dollars were cleared aside from all expenses. They also had a concert, and an oyster supper, with a dining hall connected with it.

Much praise is due Mrs. Emma Harrington the sweet singer and energetic little county secretary, for her able management, and her perseverance under many difficulties. The county president being very ill at the time, not only did she plan the whole affair but through her labors alone did the concert prove a success.

Early last summer, before the liquor party of Taylorville had ceased to rejoice over their victory, the county president held a W. C. T. U. convention there, and at one of the meetings four ministers of the gospel testified to the efficiency of woman's work in the temperance cause, and when the chairman put the question: "How many are willing the women should have a vote in settling the temperance question?" nearly the entire audience arose.

PANA.—The city council of Pana, has passed an ordinance prohibiting the sale of cider. Good! The sale of cider is the curse of temperance towns.

DELAVAN.—The young people hold a temperance social once a month, the proceeds of the entertainment to raise a fund for procuring speakers. The scholars, teachers and principal of the public school attend and help in the program. Of the last one held, the Delavan Advertiser says: "One of the best home entertainments that has been given in Delavan for a long time, was the one given by the young people at the temperance sociable at city hall, on Friday evening last. The music, songs, pantomines etc., were well rendered. Many of the participants, particularly Charley Varney in the song, 'Miss Brady's Piano Fortay,' being loudly applauded."

Crusade memorial meeting was observed by the Delavan W. C. T. U. on Sunday evening December 23, in the Methodist Episcopal church. The pastors and congregations of the Baptist and Presbyterian churches also attending the meeting, which was a most excellent one. We had one of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith's Bible lessons, conducted by Mrs. Ellen M. Strait. Mrs. A. P. Martin, county president, gave a short history of the crusade and its results, and two of our young and talented public school teachers took part in the exercises, Miss Jennie Young repeating Miss Willard's speech at the National W. C. T. U. with great power and earnestness, and Miss Allie Brawner read with such pathetic tenderness "The drinking house over the way," that many moist eyes were seen, even those of an ex-member of the town board

Did you read the account of the Distillers' Banquet, given at the National hotel, Peoria, lately, in honor of Hon. N. E. Worthington?

Choice exotics filled the rooms and covered the walls. The American flag draped the ceiling. The table was magnificently decorated with flowers. Before the guest of the evening was an immense floral pillow of white roses, with the word "Worthington" in red roses. Each guest had a button hole bouquet. There was a waiter to every three guests, and the changes were made at once with the regularity of troops at a drill. The dishes were first borne in state around the room and exhibitedto the guests, and then taken to the kitchen and served. One remarkable feature was pheasants elaborately dressed and surmounted by a bird with all of its plumage; and one of the toasts, "They could go to Washington and feel that Worthington would treat them, at least, like a gentleman."

This was received with tumultuous applause. One of the speakers, Hon. M. C. Quinn, arose and amid the soft sputtering of the electric light said: "That he felt proud of the fact that he had been a member of the legislature." His voice was husky with emotion, but he went on to say: "The invention of alcohol is the crowning triumph of civilization.

"This is the factor that has solved the problem which has been to all political economists a stumbling block, Malthus, Ricard, Stuart Mill, Adam Smith, Comte, Hegel, Hobbes and Carl Schurz, have been unable to devise any means by which population can be checked. Whisky steps in and does it easily and expeditiously. The victims are taken off under the delusion that they are enhancing their own happiness.

"Whisky does that which the poorhouse and the hospital only attempts, and does it without any expense or trouble. Every distiller is therefore a philanthropist, and a philanthropist in the highest sense of the word. Like other philanthropists they suffer contumely. Temperance fanatics deride them, and figure on how many victims are dropping into the grave every year, but as these people would soon die any way, it is plain to be seen that these figures are based on a fallacy. The still and the whipping-post are the prime factors that keep the world in awe." (Cheers.) Just think of it! Such speeches amid those beautiful flowers. The serpent in the garden of Eden.

Is it so? We have been teaching the children that in nature there is no alcohol. I have read lately that, "alcohol has been found, by M. Muntz, to be very widely diffused in nature. It exists in nearly all water, including rain and snow, and it is probable that the air contains much of it in vapor. Poor soil yields traces of it, and rich mould has a considerable quantity." E. E. O.

EFFINGHAM.—Mrs. Skelton spent a few days, during the holidays here and after many discouragements brightened only by the faithfulness of a few, there are now held weekly six temperance meetings, and there are four flourishing societies. The W. C. T. U. with a membership of sixty meets one afternoon, the Y. W. C. T. U. another. The Band of Hope is conducted entirely by the Y. W. C. T. U. A large number of the children are from German homes. Every Thursday night one of the unions holds an open meeting, with a good program, and the hall is filled. The Rescue Club, with noble, good men at its helm, holds its meetings Saturday nights; and at a recent meeting raised $90.00 which clears the debt from the hall.

The Y. W. C. T. U. kept open house new year's day. The young ladies decorated their hall beautifully, collected provisions enough to feed all who came—and how many guests do you think they had? About 800! It was a delightful time. The saloons had advertised free lunches; but were largely deserted. The hall was cleared at six o'clock for the evening entertainment, and Mrs. Skelton addressed the people on "The saloon, and its influence on society," after which the young ladies served an oyster supper, by which to replenish their treasury. All classes were represented in the good work, and the beginning of the new year was marked in Effingham by a pure joy that the angels might share. W.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

CHENEY.—We are so glad up here that there was a crusade anniversary to celebrate, because it helped us and our work so much. We held our meeting Sunday evening Dec. 3d, in the largest church in Cheney, beginning at 7 o'clock with a well filled house, with Mrs. Rev. J. W. Bluett, vice president of the union in the chair. [Our president, Mrs. Lucy Switzer was ill at her home.] The meeting was opened by a ten minutes repetition of Bible verses, in which all ladies of the union took part. Then as Mrs. Sessions earnestly read the 146th Psalm our thoughts were carried back to the scene of its first reading in the saloon, and we compared the mental picture with the scene before us, where from the efforts of ten years the work is organized and largely developed, waiting only for ready hands to carry it forward in our new country. While the contrast brought tears to our eyes, inspiration entered our souls, and we prayed, with longing desire, that every woman in Washington territory might raise her hand and voice against our fiendish enemy, while in our own union we may tire not night or day. All joined enthusiastically in singing "Give to the winds thy fears," which hymn was followed by a devout prayer by Mrs. Bowman. Remarks were made by the president and then we listened to the description of the crusade as written by Judge Thompson, read by Miss Polly Bybie. The rest of the program was as follows:

Hymn.—"Rock of Ages."
Declamation.—"Aunt Sally and Limping Joe," by Mary Lowe Dickinson.—Dr. May H. Whitney.
Collection.
Declamation.—"Our Army of the Dead." Mrs. Sprague.
Select Reading.—"Death's Street." Mrs. Long.
Hymn.—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' name."
Presentation by the president, of THE UNION SIGNAL and pledge which were then taken through the audience.
Rev. Mr. Bluett and Rev. Mr. Blowers each occupied a few moments in assuring us of their hearty sympathy, and co-operation in the temperance work.
Hymn.—"How firm a Foundation."
Distribution of temperance literature.
Temperance doxology.
Benediction.

Just before the doxology a bright thought came to Rev. J. W. Bluett, and with permission of the chair he asked, as a demonstration from the audience, that those who would vote for prohibition should rise to their feet, and don't you believe, dear UNION SIGNAL, to the surprise of our union the audience rose en masse, which so unbalanced the equilibrium of your correspondent that she amazed the sedate little president by laughing "right out loud in meetin'."

And so the crusade army did not stop their work ten years ago; they were working here on that anniversary night, adding names to our pledge, strengthening public opinion and enthusing the hearts of their sister-laborers.

Blessings rest on those women forever. "Their works are in the hand of God."

DR. MAY H. WHITNEY.
State Sup't. Dep't Heredity W. C. T. U.

On December 26 a ratification mass meeting was held by the citizens of Cheney, to endorse the action of the last legislature in adopting universal suffrage. Speeches were made by prominent business men sanctioning the enactment, and the women unanimously declared their desire and intention to cast the ballot in favor of righteousness, morality and temperance. A poem, "Woman's Triumph," written for the occasion, was read by the author, Mr. T. M. Calloway. At the close the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The honorable legislative assembly of Washington territory has, at its last session, declared the principle of universal enfranchisement by placing the ballot in the hands of the women of this territory, and

WHEREAS, This step has, as we believe, placed our territory in the front rank of states and territories in the great progressive march of civilization. Therefore, be it

Resolved. By the citizens of Cheney that we endorse the action of our said legislature in thus opening the gates of citizenship to a great portion of our race.

Resolved, That the spirit of manhood which prompted the adoption of this measure by the honorable members of said legislature is one which cannot be too highly commended, and that we extend to each and every member our heartfelt gratitude.

Resolved, That we pledge the vote of the womanhood of Washington territory to the cause of progression, sobriety, morality and universal justice.

Resolved, That we all do everything in our power to make the experiment of equal rights in our territory a grand success. MAY H. WHITNEY, Sec'y.

MASSACHUSETTS.

SOUTHBRIDGE.—We have been greatly encouraged by what we hear of the work that is being done in other places, and perhaps it may encourage others to know what some of our local unions are doing in Massachusetts. We held a meeting to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the crusade, on the evening of Dec. 30. It was very cold and icy but a goodly number were present. We have the hearty co-operation of all our pastors, and we invited them to give us a history of the temperance work from its commencement. One spoke of the customs of society previous to the temperance movement and the need of something being done to save our people. The next gave a sketch of John B. Gough, Dr. Reynolds and Francis Murphy, and their work. Then came the crusade and the W. C. T. U., with its grand uprising of woman to a sense of her power and part in the work. Lastly our present needs in this place.

This with good singing made a very interesting meeting. It certainly is worth while to work up the meeting before hand. We sent ten dollars to our state treasurer to forward to the national W. C. T. U.

INDIANA.

Mrs. William Hudson, president of Lagrange county W. C. T. U., organized a union at Mongo, Dec. 11, 1883, with thirteen members. Officers: President, Mrs. G. Whetzel; secretary, Mrs. Henrietta Hissong; treasurer, Mrs. Martha Wyrick; superintendent of juvenile instruction, Mrs. Colwell.

MICHIGAN CITY.—The crusade anniversary was remembered here by temperance sermons in the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches, and an interesting service at the 3 o'clock meeting of the W. C. T. U., which was led by Miss Hitchcock in her usual bright, interesting manner. A number of ladies residing in other towns at the time of the crusade gave reports of the work done, and a blackboard lesson added much interest. It represented a dove, with outspread wings, each feather of which had a meaning. The right wing represented the legal the left the moral aspect of temperance, the last feather of the legal wing being woman's temperance vote, and that feather needful to make it complete. I have given but a faint idea of the lesson, which was a most beautiful one, and was designed by the pastor of the M. E. church, and illustrated by Mrs. Warren, one of his flock. Two of the churches took up collections for national and state work, and the other has not neglected, but deferred, the doing for a little time.

New Year's the W. C. T. U. kept "open house" at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms during the afternoon, and served cake and coffee to guests. Had a large number of calls, and during the evening held our monthly social. Rooms were well filled and with plenty of good music and social chat the evening passed very merrily. W. C.

KANSAS.

All saloons have recently been closed in Fort Scott, Burlingame, Lawrence and Topeka. Prosecutions are being made in Leavenworth.

The W. C. T. U. in Atchison is doing good work, and we may expect to hear results from that quarter soon.

The Kansas Prohibitionist is now published at Leavenworth.

Mrs. Eugenia Smith, corresponding secretary of Topeka union, writes: "There is not a soloon open in the city, and the police are closely watching the back doors. We have a temperance mayor. Rejoice with us!"

L. B. FIELDS.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Mrs. R. E. Fraser, of Jackson, Mich,. has been appointed superintendent of juvenile work by the Michigan W. T. C. U.

A new W. C. T. Union was organized at Texarkana, Texas, with the aid of Capt. J. F. Linscott, the first week in January, with the following officers: President, Mrs. S. F. Jeffries; treasurer, Mrs. V. Christman, secretary, Miss Abby Whitcomb.

We hear of enthusiastic crusade celebrations at Parkersburg, W. Va.; Longmont, Col.; Englewood, Ill.; Buffalo, Iowa; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Baton Rouge and New Orleans, La.; Toledo and Xenia, Ohio; Cambridge, Ill.; North Evanston, Ill. and Seattle, W. T.; each and all of which had their special features of interest.

The president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., Mrs. J. E. Sibley, writes with joy of the work accomplished in that state, and of the enthusiastic inspiration for the annual convention, to be held the last of January. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, Mrs. Mary L. Dickinson, Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin and Mrs. Nelly H. Bayley have promised to be present.

Commencing Monday, March 2, 1884, a series of twenty prohibition conferences will be held in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri. The conferences will be held six nights in a place and will be addressed by the following distinguished leaders: John P. St. John, George W. Bain, John B. Finch, Mary Lathrap, Mary A. Woodbridge and George H. Vibbert. The cities that secure these conferences will be fortunate.

The decennial was celebrated doubly at Los Angeles, in the afternoon and evening, with interesting exercises. Rev. A. J. Wells gave an able address in the evening, regarding the crusade "as the culmination of intense feeling, which afterward developed into regular organization, combining work with prayer,—the W. C. T. U. That is woman's continued protest. It accomplished two things for woman, 1st, consciousness that intemperance was destroying the homes, and 2nd, liberty to woman to speak and act, which will endure."

THE DEPARTMENTS OF HYGIENE AND HEREDITY IN MICHIGAN.

A State Normal under the auspices of the departments of hygiene and heredity of the Michigan W. C. T. U., will be held in the Presbyterian church at Battle Creek, beginning Monday afternoon, Jan. 28, at 3 o'clock and continuing four days. The first two days will be devoted to instruction on subjects of hygiene, the remaining time will be occupied with the subject of heredity. All state officers and superintendents of departments are invited to be present, and every union in the state is earnestly urged to send at least one delegate, and more if possible, to this Normal. The state superintendents of the two departments hope to be able, through the aid of competent instructors, to so present the interests and needs of these departments, and to furnish such instruction as shall enable the delegates to return to their unions and take charge of the work in hygiene and heredity and prosecute it successfully.

The ladies of the Battle Creek union will entertain the delegates and we trust there will be an early response from all the unions respecting the number to be sent, that the Battle Creek ladies may know how many to provide entertainment for. Cards of entertainment will be sent to such as respond in season to warrant a return mail before leaving home, but all will be provided for. On arriving in the city the ladies will please report at once, if not otherwise provided for, to the committee of arrangements, or the Presbyterian church on Main St., only a few steps from the depot, where the Normal will be held. Should any be obliged to arrive during the night after the evening session, or in the early morning before the hour for meeting (9 o'clock,) they will please send a card to that effect, to either the superintendent of hygiene or heredity at Battle Creek and they will be provided for, if this is impracticable, they may, on arriving, take a hack for the sanitarium where warm rooms will be kept in readiness, and a person to receive them and make them comfortable at any hour.

Delegates will please come provided with pencil and paper to take notes.

An effort is being made to secure reduced railroad rates, which if successful will be reported next week.

While the Normal is especially designed as a help to the workers of the Michigan W. C. T. U. we most cordially invite delegates from other states to attend, and will endeavor to provide for all who may be able to come.

No pains will be spared to make the Normal as interesting and profitable as possible and we trust there will be a large attendance.

MRS. J. H. KELLOGG, Superintendent of the Department of Hygiene of Michigan W. C. T. U., Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Michigan. MRS. DR. MEACHEM. Superintendent of the Department of Heredity of Michigan W. C. T. U., Battle Creek, Michigan.

LITERATURE DEPARTMENT NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

To every President of a State, District, County, or Local Union:

DEAR SISTER—Let me call your attention to the annual report of the department just issued (Oct. 1883). If you have none by you, I shall be glad to forward on application. I am also desirous that every one of you shall have a copy of the new literature manual "Methods of Work with Temperance Literature," a five cent pamphlet ($4 per 100, postpaid), with which you, and your literature superintendent should be supplied.

Permit me now, to ask a few suggestive questions about your work.

1. Have you a literature department in your union which reaches and helps every member in her work?

2. Has every one of your superintendents a set of the tracts suited for use in her special line of work? If not will you supply her?

3. Do your local unions use the readings on beer or cider, or some other similar reading as a part of the weekly exercise for the information of their own members, and do you have "model readings" in your conventions?

4. Do you distribute tracts in connection with these readings for the information of the people at large as to the nature and effects of alcoholic liquors?

5. Do your members read and loan such works as Dr. Story's "Alcohol and its Effects," 75 cents, Guthrie's Temperance Physiology, 30 cents, Heredity of Alcohol, 5 cents? (I will send these post paid for $1.)

6. Do you promote temperance schools conducted like a Sunday school in which the children study these first principles? (Send for a copy of the "Temperance School," 5 cents.)

7. Do you have popular lectures to teach the people these truths?

8. Have you seen the union leaflets, penny papers, beer, cider and gospel handbills, teachers' series, public service series, temperance chromo cards, leaflets for young people, all prepared specially for your use? If not, please send for specimens.

9. Do you appoint some one member of your union to spend one day in the year to solicit dimes from every body for the support of your National literature department? If you have not done so, will you do it at once, and send on the proceeds promptly to the treasurer or the superintendent of that department? Have you the dime collection card used for this purpose, if not, will you send a postal for it?

10. Do you have tables for the sale of temperance literature and chromo cards at all your conventions and at fairs and other suitable places? ("Instant in season and out of season.")

11. Do you keep on hand, in some convenient place, specimens of such literature as your workers most need, with circulars, all of which would help them in sending orders? Three, five or ten dollars laid out in this way is a most profitable investment especially for district and county unions.

12. Has every local union the "union outfit," consisting of the teacher's outfit (for juvenile work,) specimens of the tracts, handbills and leaflets published specially for the work by your own literature department? If not, send $1 with an order for it. If you have the teacher's outfit, get the tracts for each department to fill out the amount. Do you write and report to your National literature superintendent? Seven years she has served you, trying with narrow means to provide some of the literature suited to the needs of the work. If you think her work has been helpful, pray, in this year of grace, give her something more to work with! The department needs your support and encouragement.

Ever faithfully, JULIA COLMAN,
Supt. Lit. Dept., N. W. C. T. U.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. ## Miscellaneous Selections.

"I HAVE made a thousand dollars during the last three months," said a saloon keeper, boastfully, to a crowd of his townsmen. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" "You have made wretched homes—women and children poor, and sick, and weary of life. You have made my two sons drunkards," continued the speaker, with trembling earnestness; "you made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. O, yes; you have made much—more than I can reckon up, but you'll get the full count some day—you'll get it some day!"

THE man who read the paper carefully found the following among the news items: There were nine murders, one of them very brutal, four persons being killed in one house. There was an account of an old farmer, with a wife and family, who had seduced two sisters, young women under 20. A gambler had brought a young girl of good English family all the way to Chicago. There were five shocking deaths by accident. A steamship was lost with thirty-seven on board. There were cyclones in Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Illinois to hear from. There were two attempts to abduct children. Certainly this list cannot be mistaken for a chapter of Mr. Matthew Arnold's "Sweetness and Light," and the question arises, Why is this thus? Is the world given over wholly to evil? Are the sunspots particularly active, or to what untoward influence must we attribute this extraordinary concentration of evil? Is Saturn regnant in the house of Mars, or has anything gone out of gear in any of the spiritual "spheres?" Here are conundrums worth while. Is there a Daniel to solve them?—Chicago News.

THE saloon keepers claim that they pay a large share of the taxes, and hence claim protection and license. The claim is as fraudulent as their business, and both are among the greatest swindles of the century. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, recently published from official records a list of 2,000 saloon keepers of that city, with the amount of taxes paid on personal property. These 2,000 saloon keepers returned personal property to the amount of 280,330, the taxes on which was only $6,222.29 for the entire year, or an average tax of $3.11 for each saloon. Not much "protection" do they deserve. The dry goods house of John Shillito & Co. alone paid $14,191.86 personal taxes, which is more than double of that of all the liquor sellers combined. The Western Methodist Book Concern paid taxes to the amount of $3,135.28, or more than half as much as the 2,000 saloons. The saloons are responsible for three-fourths of the crime and pauperism of the city. They are the nurseries of crime and the hiding places of criminals. The saloons must go.

WHAT is the most popular form of government? "That," said Bias, "where the laws have no superior." "That," said Thales, "where the inhabitants are neither rich nor poor." "That," said Anacharsis, the Scythian, "where virtue is honored and vice detested." "That," said Pittacus, "whose dignities are always conferred upon the virtuous, and never upon the base." "That," said Cleobulus, "where the citizens fear blame more than punishment." "That," said Chilo, "where the laws are more regarded than the orator." "But that," said Solon, "when an injury done to the meanest subject is an insult upon the whole constitution." These apothegms of the ancients are interesting and instructive. They are all good, and have entered more or less into the constitution of all states. Law must partake of their characteristics. The very existence of law recognizes human responsibility, and is a strong argument against infidelity, and in favor of the Divine right of Christianity. The sermon on the Mount by the Great Teacher embodies the germ and elements of all morality, all good government, and all religion. The old theology said "an eye for an eye," but the newer theology commands a kiss for a blow. And the newer is better.—Christian at Work.

P. S. BARTLETT (Late of American Watch Co., Waltham, Mass.), No. 57 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

IN the following paragraph the Sunday School Times hits hard where hard hits are needed. "Some of the devices of the charitably disposed, whereby good can be accomplished without costing anybody anything, are striking illustrations of the power of a warm heart to preternaturally quicken the mind. A proposition is now reported from Dresden 'to collect all the old steel pens and sell them for a fund to educate poor children;' and this intelligence is accompanied by the information that 'there is already in Germany a society of smokers which saves the tip cut from the ends of cigars for a similar charitable purpose. It has already been noted that funds were being raised in England for the buiding of a new church by the purchase of button-hole bouquets from the Princess of Wales' peddling stand. Now, if a movement can be inaugurated by some one to devote the cobs of green corn to the hiring of free pews in the more popular American churches and for the consecration of champagne corks to the purchase of a better class of reading in Sunday-school libraries, what an impetus will be give to champagne, evangelization and green corn."

THE other evening during service in the M. E. church in Steubenville, Ohio, a drunken man passing by was attracted by the singing. He went in and seated himself in front of the congregation and was very quiet. At the close of the meeting he rose and said: "I am not fit to be here, not fit to speak to, or be seen by decent people. I am only living as a sample of what drink will do. In the centennial there were gathered all kinds of samples of work, save only the work of saloon keepers, and I am a sample of what they can do. I fought for my country, and was one of the first to go, but I cannot fight against the temptation in my way, and I am now a poor wreck, an outcast." His remarks moved all who heard him to tears.—Bloomsburg Journal.

Quite a stir was made the other day at a temperance conference which was held at Biddeford, England, by a statement which one of the speakers advanced to the effect that a certain clergyman, in his anxiety to check the evils connected with drinking, had taken a public house in his parish in hand, put in his coachman to manage it, looked after the quality of the beer, and gave the profits to the parochial charities.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOLUME X. CHICAGO, JANUARY 24, 1884. NUMBER 4.

THE regular quarterly meeting of the directors of the Woman's Temperance Publication Association will be held in room 36, 161 LaSalle street, Chicago, Ill., Wednesday, February 6, 1884, commencing at 10 o,clock, a. m

MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec'y.

AMONG the important events of the week has been the assembling of the Iowa legislature, and the message of Governor Sherman, with its recommendations of prohibitory legislation, and the passage of the suffrage amendment. There seems, up to this date, every reason to believe that the republicans of Iowa mean to keep faith with the people.

A BOY who would scorn to read the Police Gazette will take respectable refuge, as he thinks, in "Peck's Bad Boy." But soon the bad boy appears in the Gazette and everybody wonders when the mischief was done. The Milwaukee incendiary fires have been traced to a gang of Milwaukee boys—the compatriots of Peck's—and in their "den" all grades of vile and mischievous literature had place.

THE husband of Mrs. Macrea, who died suddenly at Montreal of drink, told the coroner that he could give the corpse to the medical faculty for dissection, as he did not want it.

If the wives of all the husbands who "die of drink" should make a similar disposition of the dead bodies of their "liege lords" the medical schools would not be driven to disreputable methods of obtaining subjects for dissection, as they are now, at times. There would be an ample and continuous supply.

THE sixteenth annual dinner of Sorosis, was given at Delmonico's during the past week, and without wine. Furthermore, our national president was invited to be present, and to speak upon prohibition. Sorosis has not been a meaningless, and simply dining organization. Among many beneficent works it has inaugurated are the canvass of the entire city to investigate the condition of shop girls in order to ameliorate it; the bringing about of the woman's congress, and the inauguration of the effort to have women admitted to Columbia college.

A SYSTEMATIC educational campaign, whose main features is the distribution of temperance literature, has been inaugurated by the Boston W. C. T. U. Its plan is worthy of consideration in other large cities. Determining to reach every voter in the city with good temperance literature during the coming year, the plan is to have a committee of five—gentlemen and ladies—assigned to every precinct in the city, the chairman of which shall be a member of the W. C. T. U. This committee is provided with a list of the voters of its precinct, and these names are divided among the committee; so that each member is responsible for reaching, either by mail or personally, about one hundred individuals. The committees are then furnished with a full supply of a wide range of temperance literature. No better plan, has to our knowledge, been exploited.

THE pen trembles, even to shuddering, as it records the fearful brutality of the drink-inspired man, who in this city a few days since, nearly murdered his sunny haired, four year old daughter. The father was angered because his drunken sleep was disturbed by the moans of the sick child. He sprang from his bed, and catching the child up, choked it until the blood spurted from its little nose, eyes, and ears, after which he dashed it, stunned and almost lifeless, upon the floor. His wife pleaded with him to desist, but he replied with an oath and told her that if she ever opened her lips about what had occurred, he would cut her throat.

In spite of his threat he was brought to justice, and the full penalty of the law was pronounced upon him, the usually composed judge declaring with vehemence, his sorrow that there was not a whipping post to which he might condemn him.

THE bill now before Congress, extending the bonded period two years, on which the whisky interests will concentrate their powers, contemplates the relief of the distillers to the amount of $27,500,000 worth of taxes which otherwise must be paid within a few months. This, however, is only a fraction of the real demand. The aggregate of the tax on whisky in bond, which this two years extension would cover, would equal over $132,000,000, on which sum, at 4 per cent., the whisky ring would pocket about 5,000,000, interest alone, should the Willis bill become a law. The enhanced value of whisky by getting the additional two years' age would be about $30,000,000, so that these whisky speculators, without any consideration whatever, ask a donation from the government of about half a year's interest upon the whole national debt.

The plea of the traffic at one moment is: "An industry that contributes over seventy-four millions of dollars annually to the government, should have proper recognition, such as will save them from unjust sacrifices;" while the next moment they propose to halve, if not still further reduce the revenue, which, they claim, gives them the right to protection.

THE Silent Ministry is the name of a new charity in Chicago. Its mission is to help the silent poor, the suffering who make no sign, whom to help publicly would be to injure irreparably. Already its little treasury is depleted by the frequent distresses which exist among this worthy class, and the benevolently inclined will do well to consult with the treasurer, Mrs. Helen E. Starrett, editor of the Weekly Magazine, as to the best application of their consecrated funds.

Thinking of this "silent ministry" to the needs of fellow men and women, there comes the suggestion of another beneficence which might be wrought in silence, since to apply to it any of the ordinary measures of relief seem utterly out of the question. There must be a way of doing everything that ought to be done. Hundreds of men, the fathers, husbands and brothers of our friends, are daily tampering with health, life prospects and the fine faculties of the soul by yielding to the custom or habit of drink. Is there a "silent ministry" that may reach them with the word of caution, the tender entreaty, the loving reproof? Think of it. Humanity demands that they shall not drift downward without a note of warning from us, only to be saved "so as by fire" when entirely down.

AT the Boston temperance convention the other day, the Rev. Dr. E. B. Webb said that while he would work for prohibition as an ultimatum, he would work for high license as a means to that end. If the saloon nearest his house could be taxed $1,000, he thought it would break up the business, but if this did not produce the desired effect he would make it $5,000, or $10,000. Anything to shut up the saloon.

Now there can be no doubt that this Christian minister is sincere and conscientious in his desire to accomplish prohibition by means of high license, but the fallacy of his position is, that he assumes that prohibition cannot be enacted, but that a license fee high enough to encompass prohibition, can be both enacted and enforced.

The moment a legislature places a tax on the saloon business so high that the dealer cannot recover it from his customers, that moment the difficulty and the fight will take on all the embarrassment of a prohibition movement. It is only when high license is compatible with gain in selling, that high license can be secured easier than prohibition. If men truly desire to cut off and abolish the traffic, some more efficient measures than $5,00 or even $1000, licenses must be taken.

RECIPROCITY.

"If thy heart be as my heart, here is my hand."—Message from Massachusetts W. C. T. U. to South Carolina.

BY R. T. MURRAY.

"A voice from Massachusetts,
From her free sons and daughters,"
Borne on the Northern winds that stir
E'en fair Virginia's waters;
A challenge bold, and strong, and deep,
For right and freedom given,
And cannon roar and battle cry
Gave answer back to heaven.

Years pass away, the slave is free,
The battle cry is o'er;
But stricken hearts mourn for the lost
Who shall return no more.
For hushed is many a merry voice,
And dim the sparkling eye,
And grassy mounds on Southern plains
Like sad mementoes lie.

And once again the old Bay State
Utters her fervent call,
No battle cry, but loving words
Upon the breezes fall;
And softly in the cadence borne
Like gentle dew and rain,
Virginia hears her sister's voice
In sweet and low refrain.

In the battle that is raging now,
"Give me thy hand," I pray,
I give my effort unto thine,
My heart by thy heart lay;
A deadly foe is pressing on,
Our sons and brothers fall,
But God is ever on the right,
He'll heed our earnest call.

The north and south, and east and west.
Are joining in our band,
And the white tents of the temperance league,
Are dotted o'er the land;
No cannon roar, nor bugle peal
The advancing host proclaim,
But earnest prayer to God above.
And trust in Jesus' name.

One spirit animates the host,
One rallying cry we hear,
"For God and home, and native land,"
Rings out both far and near;
Till death our efforts shall not cease,
We pledge with one accord,
For "I am with you" to the end
Declares our conquering Lord.

MARY'S CALL.

A WOMAN'S SERMON.

BY MRS. JENNY BLAND BEAUCHAMP.

TEXT: "The Master is come and calleth for thee." John xi: 28.

Sorrow had invaded the beloved home in Bethany. Lazarus was dead. No messenger was sent to announce the sad intelligence to the Master but Jesus knew. He conveyed the information to His disciples in the cheerful but significant words, "Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." With this end in view He starts to Bethany and arrives the fourth day after the burial.

Jesus is met by Martha before He is yet come into the town. After receiving her sorrowful and pathetic salutation, "Lord if thou had'st been here my brother had not died," she is sent back to summon her sister. This she did in the words of our text, "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

This proposition has two predicates, "is come," and "calleth for thee." Attention is directed to the last, the words of which constitute Mary's call.

We wish in this discourse to emphasize the truth, that women are called to God's service.

Mary, in common with all God's people, had been the subject of prior calls, issuing from a divine scource. A brief review of these will be necessary in order to understand the nature of this call and in order to a clear comprehension of the subject.

The word Kalleo and its synonyms are frequently used in the Old and New Testament; sometimes in an ordinary sometimes in an extraordinary sense. A resume of the word and its cognates and an elucidation of the doctrine involved would constitute a body of divinity and greatly transcend our limits. Suffice it to say, we find it used in four important senses. It refers sometimes to

1st. The sovereign call of free grace.

God is a being of purpose and being an absolute sovereign He is never thwarted in His purposes. He is not subject to the limitations of time and space or the caprices of men. His plans were laid and His agents chosen in the councils of eternity, and this choosing constitutes the sovereign call of free grace, a grace untrammelled by conditions of merit in the subject. "Who hath called us with a holy calling, not according to works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Mary was thus called and a recipient of God's grace, for "Jesus loved her and Martha and their brother Lazarus." It also refers to

2d. The the call of the Gospel.

"Whom He did foreknow He predestinated to be conformed to the image of His son." We are the children of God by faith. "Faith cometh by hearing, hearing by the word of God, but how shall they hear without a preacher." This call of the gospel is universal; all are included. Mary heard it as she, sat at his feet and learned. It again refers to

3d. The call of the Spirit.

The gospel calls, but the sinner may refuse, for the will is left free to follow the strongest motive; indeed he will refuse unless the Spirit accompanies the word and operates on the heart.

Owing to the perversity of the human heart and the machination of the Evil One it might have happened that all would have refused and so Christ would have died in vain. But the earnest of the Spirit was given as a pledge to the Son of the salvation of those whom the Father had given Him. The sinner may turn a deaf ear to the universal calls of the gospel, but the special call of the Spirit carries with it a constraining influence, which results in conversion. "Christ to the Jews a stumbling block, to the Greeks foolishness, but to them that believe Christ the power of God etc."

4th. The call to service.

Those who are divinely chosen by God's grace and invited by the word, and sealed by the Spirit have some appointed work to do. God never calls one into His vineyard to be an idler. He is called to some duty either in the church or out of it. And he, thus divinely called to a work, has such desires and impressions in regard to it as fit him for that work, and these constitute their spiritual qualification or "gift." Thus some are called to preach, some to teach, to evangelize or do some reform work. These gifts are not to be used exclusively in the church. Some are prepared by means of the church to do duty out of it. God accepts as service even a cup of cold water given in His name. Mary was called to His presence, perhaps to see His miracle, perhaps to be a future witness, perhaps to bring the Jews of her circle to Christ. We have seen that Mary was the subject of these divine calls, and we conclude, that if one woman was thus accepted, no woman will be excluded on account of sex. Indeed there is no diversity of opinion on this point except in regard to the woman's call to service.

No one doubts she is called to service but are in doubt about the kind of service required of her. Many believe she has no church duties, and should hold no church offices. She in common with her brother must perform her social and domestic duties with Christian fidelity, but she must take no public part in divine service, and never fill any office of trust or duty. If she has duties they are of a passive and not of an active character.

But the Savior made no such distinctions in regard to woman. In his ministry they were pre-eminently favored. Elizabeth was the first to announce the incarnation. Anna, who spoke of Him to all who looked for redemption in Israel, was the first to preach a present Savior. The Samaritan women was sent to call her fellow citizens to Jesus. The sinful Mary anointed Him for His burial. He first appeared to Mary Magdalen after He rose from the dead. He commissioned her to announce the resurrection, which was to constitute so important a part of preaching to His disciples. Many forms of service were imposed upon her. But the Savior had respect to the natural limitation of sex, and did not "send her forth" in a rude and barbarous age, but since man has thrown over her the protection of civilized life, and built up around her the defences of law and placed at her disposal the gilded palace car, she has outgrown this limitation. But the doctrine of gifts should settle the question of service. Are the "gifts" and "callings of God" restricted to the brethren? No one would take this position. If the Spirit confers upon woman a gift she is certainly at liberty to use that gift. Yea more, she is under obligation to do so. She, no more than her brother, is at liberty to quench the Spirit. Paul exhorts Christians, of all sexes, to seek earnestly the best gifts. The best gifts fit one for the highest service, and this settles the question of the kind of service required of women. The women of this age enjoy unparalelled opportunities. These oppor- tunities increase their obligations and demand their consecration.

A thousand fields of reform are white to the harvest. In these opportunities for woman, it may truly be said to her, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." But will she, despite the prejudices of society heed this call? If she turns a deaf ear let her beware lest there come a time when Jehovah shall say to her, "Because I have called and ye have refused, therefore will I laugh at your calamities, I will mock when your fear cometh."

KITCHEN GARDEN.---A FEW FACTS REGARDING IT.

BY RUTH OGDEN.

It is often amusing, and full as often pathetic, to note the incongruities which one meets on every side.

"As we journey through life let us live by the way," is the motto emblazoned over the doorway of a Brooklyn liquor saloon. Possibly nothing could better illustrate an incongruity of the pathetic order. But when THE UNION SIGNAL comes to hand in a wrapper advertising decanters, of manifold shapes and sizes, the incongruity is decidedly amusing. Unfortunately among the incongruities of a more serious character must be classed this bewildering little "Kitchen Garden"—bewildering because misleading.

Miss Huntington, widely known as the originator of the Kitchen Garden system, asserts that all titles should be of a nature calculated to excite curiosity. But it is to be feared that the curiosity excited in the present instance is likely to arrive at incorrect conclusions.

"Kitchen Garden!" reasons some one unfamiliar with the subject, "why the name has doubtless been suggested by the German 'kindergarten,' and naturally develops some scheme whereby children are instructed as to the right performance of kitchen work," and the somebody in question having settled the matter to her satisfaction, thinks no more about it.

Now in point of fact Kitchen Garden means no such thing, or rather it means a vast deal more, as all will bear me out, who have either taught it or witnessed a comprehensive Kitchen Garden exhibition.

Primarily the little learners are enlightened as to the setting of breakfast tables, the washing of breakfast dishes, and all the details connected with the first of the ever-recurring meals. Then follows the washing lesson, which, commencing with the basket of soiled clothes, carries them minutely through every process of the laundry, till neatly pressed and folded they are laid away ready for us Then come directions for sweeping, dusting and general house cleaning. Then dinner table setting and waiting, and finally instruction as to marketing, and the use and care of all sorts of kitchen utensils. By the employment of miniature dishes, wash tubs, etc., and by the introduction of ingenious and appropriate songs, the knowledge is imparted in almost as permanent fashion as the A B C of the alphabet. For one, I have yet to witness aught as fascinating, or affording as much real pleasure as a well conducted Kitchen Garden exhibition.

To watch a score of little maidens, each of whom is holding on her course to some sort or womanhood, daintily, cheerily, thoroughly performing every task connected with the demands of a well regulated household, is to enjoy a feast for eyes as well as "of reason," and ought to create, and, in nine cases out of ten, does create an enthusiastic "flow of soul." Indeed it is just this enthusiastic interest excited by every such exhibition which will probably keep the Kitchen Garden ball rolling till this round globe of ours is fairly belted with well organized schools. So much has been said and written on the subject of Kitchen Garden it is superfluous for me to enter into further details here.

The exact relation of the work to temperance has been tersely and adequately defined in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. One thing is certain, many evils of intemperance would be averted were there more well ordered homes to offset the attractions of saloons, and that homes should be well ordered, is the end and aim of Kitchen Garden effort.

The labor of instruction calls for a vast amount of patient perseverance, but I know of no work of a self-denying character more replete with compensation. Apart from the intrinsic value of the information given it is no small thing to have cheered the comparatively cheerless lives of so many "little women," for the classes are composed of children whose lives are sadly dull and circumscribed, and, as a rule, they thoroughly enjoy every feature of the lessons.

Experience has established one fact: that it is impossible for Kitchen Gardens to be established and carried on successfully, unless the teachers have previously come into intimate personal contact with it, and this fact has led to the appointment of Miss McClees as superintendent of the Kitchen Garden department of the N. W. C. T. U. And just here I cannot but bear witness to her peculiar adaptability for the work.

I have been actively interested in Kitchen Garden almost from its earliest institution, and have witnessed, and assisted in, numerous exhibitions. I have yet to see an exhibition as complete in every way as the first one given by the class which Miss McClees and her associates had trained.

I have heard the question has been asked, "Is Miss McClees a normal graduate?"

I am not aware just what the term may signify. If it means one who has taken the course of six lessons of Miss Huntington, I am a normal graduate and Miss McClees is not. If it indicates one who by experience and careful study has not only mastered but developed all the details of the system, Miss McClees is a normal graduate and I am not. By the accident of an April visit to a friend deeply interested in the teaching of Kitchen Garden, Miss McClees became thoroughly acquainted with its workings. Fired with the enthusiasm which it so often excites, and than which none is more contagious, she determined, if possible, to organize a school in Yonkers, and to commence at once, for in a place largely made up of residents for the spring and summer months, she knew it to be the most auspicious season.

Miss Huntington's New York classes were over for the winter, and it was at once impossible, and (I write it advisedly), absolutely unnecessary, for Miss McClees to take the prescribed course of six lessons. Faithful, earnest teachers everywhere, have encountered new needs in the progress of instructing, naturally not anticipated in the first development of the system. To my certain knowledge no one has exercised more ingenuity in providing for the demands of these newer needs than Miss McClees. So much for your young Kitchen Garden superintendent.

Now it seems but right and normal that wherever, throughout this country, Christian women are working in the cause of temperance, particularly young Christian women, that there should be some of their number willing to undertake this branch of the great work. The advantages of it are to an amazing extent reciprocal. From the nature of the subject dealt with there are other learners in the Kitchen Garden schools than the little folk seated at the tables.

I cannot resist the temptation to quote at length these stirring words of Ruskin:

"You may see continually girls who have never been taught to do a single useful thing thoroughly. You will find girls like these when they are earnest-hearted, cast all their innate passion of religious spirit, which was meant by God to support them through the irksomeness of daily toil, into grievous and vain meditation over the meaning of the great Book of which no syllable was ever yet to be understood but through a deed. Give such a girl any true work that will make her active in the dawn and weary at night, with the consciousness that her fellow creatures have indeed been the better for her day, and the powerless sorrow of her enthusiasm will transform itself into a majesty of radiant and beneficent peace."

If there is any nicer work for such a girl or indeed for any sort of "earnest-hearted girl" than this self-same Kitchen Garden, I have yet to hear of it.

THE BAND OF HOPE.

BY MISS L. M. LAWSON.

Why have temperance schools or Bands of Hope? The children are not prejudiced in favor of drink. Their teachers in public schools are temperate and teach it, directly or indirectly by precept and example. It requires much time and study for preparation on the part of those who conduct them, and there is no pecuniary advantage as an inducement. Is there any need of this department of work being crowded into our already busy lives?

Such a thing was unheard of a few years ago, and it was considered a desecration of the Sabbath to give notice of a temperance meeting on that day; yet the past year fifteen thousand children have been organized in Bands of Hope by the W. C. T. U.

Saloons with all their train of evils flourished many years ago, and while we have been waking up to our duties and opportunities, they can number a goodly train of victims not only from the ignorant and unfortunate class but from those whose studies and labors have benefited our whole continent. Among them we see in mental vision distinguished leaders of armies, leaders in education, in politics, in the learned professions and leaders of men in our U. S. senate of to-day.

We remember that these were once children in helpless innocence, ready to be led and taught, promising in their abilities to do the world's work well if the influence and teaching were pure and good; but the avenues of iniquity held secure places on the public street, ready with their music, their pictures, the light and good cheer apparent from front doors to entice the curiosity of the young.

"While men slept, the enemy sowed tares." Because the sin of intemperance is so general, throughout the length and breadth of our land, because many good people are ignorant and therefore indifferent to the terrible poison of alcohol, because we want to avoid the mistakes of the past, and save the children from repeating our own, the importance of temperance schools can hardly be over estimated.

In view then, of the great importance of this work, much devolves upon the superintendent, who should be pre-eminently a person of prayer and holy zeal. Supposing our ideal leader is a woman, she should be an efficient practical one, thoroughly imbued with the responsibility of her position, ready to make sacrifices for the advancement of the cause, one who loves children, loves to teach and has an aptness for the work. If she is prepossessing in her personal appearance, an independent singer and gifted with a talent for originating blackboard illustration, the more fortunate.

While we may covet the talents of our gifted friend Mrs. Nellie Bayley, in the chalk picture line, we need not feel worthless because we can not reach her standard.

The more we can appeal through the senses to the children the better can impressions be made; so, though our dots, curves and straight lines may appear to be rheumatic, tell the children they stand for a man, a tree or a glass of whisky, as the case may be, their lively imaginations will fill the outlines and no criticisms.

One object of this department is to convey definite and thorough instruction in temperance principles, both in regard to what the Bible teaches, and the effects of alcohol on the system. This embraces a knowledge of physiology, hygiene and chemistry,

Another object is to arouse in the youth a feeling of partnership in this great reform movement, therefore the plan that will most thoroughly interest them is the best.

A desirable method for the older children is a Young Folks Christian Temperance Union, with officers chosen from their own membership and election, under the supervision of the juvenile superintendent. Essays, declamations and singing should form part of their program. A kindergarten school is probably the best arrangement for the wee ones.

But the Band of Hope is the organization most efficient for general use, and should be simple, comprising as few officers as can do the work well. A secretary, janitor and librarian may be chosen from the ranks of the school. If competent adult teachers can be obtained, the class system is an excellent one, as impressions can be made by a teacher on a few children of about the same age and acquirements, which are lost in a general exercise, however skillfully conducted. Where adult teachers can not be had, small classes may be given to older scholars thus arousing their enthusiasm to keep up the attendance of individual classes and promoting a feeling of responsibility on their part.

Where juvenile teachers are employed the superintendent should first give the lesson as a general exercise, illustrating the important points; then having the teachers review it, thus giving them an idea how to conduct their work profitably.

A felt need of this department is a series of lessons suitable for the younger children, of simple questions and answers in child language. The quarterlies and catechisms which we have examined, are better adapted to youth who are somewhat advanced in age and acquirements.

The nature and importance of the pledge should be carefully explained and emphasized. We have doubts as to whether it is best to insist upon signing the pledge as a condition of membership. The smallest children can hardly realize its import, but on account of their willingness to be led and desire to please their leader, they are readiest to respond, and so take a pledge binding them for life, blindfolded as it were.

Again, parents, for good reasons, sometimes object to their children obligating themselves at so early an age.

If admitted into the society and thoroughly taught the nature of alcohol and its effects upon the system, the probabilities are that they will be committed to discard it for themselves and fight it to the end.

How shall we secure the attendance of the boys? However, a failure in this direction need not be a total failure; a society composed mostly of girls will be a power for good. Thoroughly impress the little girl of to-day, with an abhorrence of intoxicants, even of the milder forms, for the filth of tobacco, the coarseness and impiety of profanity, and you will have a young lady of the future who will not remark with a simper that she enjoys the fragrance of a nice cigar, and laugh at a witticism coupled with an oath; one who will in no wise accept of a gentleman's company who is suspicioned of occasional indulgence in a social glass. If we succeed in training a class of young ladies who will require of their escorts that purity which is required of them, we shall have solved the problem of social drinking to a great extent, for the supply will soon equal the demand.

Let us say to those about to engage in this work, experience is worth more than theory, and only by practice can ability be acquired.

When we can not alter unfavorable circumstances, make the best of them, always keeping our Heavenly Father in the midst.

Our national and state officers have furnished complete outfits of instruction for organizing and conducting juvenile work. Mrs. Crafts' black-board temperance lessons, Miss Julia Colman's catechism and Juvenile Temperance Manual and D. C. Cook's quarterlies, mark out a plain path for amateurs. Desirable information can be obtained by communicating with our state headquarters, 161 La Salle street., Chicago, and with Miss Colman, superintendent of literature, in New York.

JOTTINGS FROM MICHIGAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The temperance evangelists, Hughes and Ward, have been in the state for two months. At Charlotte a pledge was used with this heading: "Christ for all the world, and all the world for Christ."

Then the pledge followed acknowledging the power of Jesus to save from appetite. The result of this confession of God in Christ, was to give the effort a religious tone beyond the ordinary temperance revival, and many of those signing the pledge have been saved.

These workers have been at Olivet, are now at Chelsea, and do good wherever they go.

The state executive board at their meeting in Jackson, endorsed the effort to secure UNION SIGNAL stock. The vice presidents of the districts, hope each to work up a share to be held by the district.

By arrangment at that meeting 100 copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, and 100 of The Lever, go weekly into the lumber districts which we are praying may do good.

December 23, was we trust generally observed. A wide spread storm of great fury, made the day almost a failure in many places so far as congregations were concerned, and collections were small. It is greatly to be hoped, that our temperance women did not depend on an outside public for the "thank offering" to the national treasury. That should have come from our women, first and foremost. Each one should have made some offering unto the Lord, sacred, and set apart, because of the way in which He hath led us. The fear has come to me, that in the matter of money we are trustiug in "princes and the children of men."

The memorial UNION SIGNAL was simply peerless. I would not take ten dollars for my copy if I could not get another. I sat over it with tears in my eyes, and wondered if all the woman would feel as I did about it. I trust the subscription list was greatly increased.

I spent the day at Union City, with the earnest women there who have canvassed the whole town, by house to house visitations for members contributing, if not active.

The storm was furious but two meetings were held, which we hope had some good results.

The holidays I spent at home, and on New Year's day the W. C. T. U. of Jackson, "received." According to the latest fashion, tickets of invitation were issued, and the guests, one hundred and twelve news boys and boot blacks, sat down to dinner. It was worth going far to see. The tables were twice filled, and each time a song was sung and a tender grace invoked. The citizens of Jackson, made generous response to the call for provisions, and for once the boys feasted like princes. The state president and secretary, the county president and district secretary "received" with the local union. Hereafter a newsboys' meeting is to be held each Friday evening at the rooms of the W. C. T. U.

We find that the people trust the temperance women in ma tters of benevolence. A wealthy man in Port Huron, put one dozen comfortables into the hands of Mrs. Chas. Kinney for distribution on Christmas, and she was applied to for a list of families who were needy, to whom wood would be sent from a bridge which is being removed to make way for a new one.

I am now in revival work at Paw Paw, shall be here until next week. The situation here is hopeful, about forty are already saved; some are seeking, many are feeling the power of the spirit.

The most important political event lately transpiring in Michigan, was the organization of the new "union party" at Jackson, Jan. 9.

The convention was large, earnest and harmonious. Some special grace enabled them to lay on the table all the foolish and unwise things which came to the surface. The State Alliance men, like Chas. Mosher, Prof. Steere, Rev. Mr. Shier, A. S. Partridge and Thomas Moore who have been mostly republicans, joined hands with D. P. Sagendorph, Prof. Dickie, Merritt Moore and others who have been third party men, in the belief that it is vain to expect from the republican party any farther help towards constitutional prohibition.

Of course this state party is in sympathy and co-operation with the national prohibition home protection party, but seek a name free from past entanglements, and wide enough to take in the issues and sympathies of the whole country.

I never heard finer speeches than were made that night. Whatever may be said of Gov. Begole, he has always been an outspoken temperance man, and if he had selfish ambition would not have been in that convention.

The Citizen calls the party a "Bantling" which the dictionary defines as an "infant or young child." We are satisfied therefore, because infants grow and make men.

The committee on resolutions reported the following, which were adopted:

1. We believe license or taxation, whether high or low, is utterly wrong in principle and vicious in practice, accomplishes no good for the cause of temperance, but perpetuates, encourages and increases all the evils and misery of the rum traffic.

2. Therefore, as believers in prohibition, we declare for statutory and constitutional prohibition and its thorough enforcement, and purpose to rest permanently upon the issue and abide the result, trusting in the action of intelligent freemen, in the justice of their cause and in the victorious help of a righteous God.

3. Therefore we cordially invite all people who believe in the principles of prohibition to unite with us in promoting the interests of this union party.

4. We favor the fostering and extension of our system of education for the purpose of securing intelligent citizenship and knowledge in our public schools as to the nature and effects of alcohol upon the human system.

I give a little abstract—the reporter's, not my own—of Governor Begole's address: He said that he was "not a speechmaker, and only just a plain lumberman whose heart and soul were in this cause. He had always been a temperance man and a prohibitionist. In the state campaign that preceded his election he wanted to confess that he had not acted up to his convictions. He was governed by his party and his political associates, who advised him to keep still and say nothing about prohibition. It hurt his conscience, but he yielded. He got letters from prominent saloon men and from brewers and distillers commanding him to define his position. He did not answer these letters. They wrote again and told him he must define his views on the liquor question or they would not vote for him. He never replied. Then came letters from ministers and teachers asking him how he stood on the liquor question. His party advised him to keep still—to say nothing—and he said it.

Lumbermen are called a hard class, but generally it is not true. He was a lumberman and a prohibitionist; both his partners were likewise. Nearly all the great lumbermen are temperance advocates. It is for their interest to be so. The mining interests are nearly all controlled by temperance men—they demand sobriety of their employes, because it is for their interest and their only safeguard. Railroad managers are likewise advocates of prohibition—the welfare of their property and the lives of thousands in their care demand clear heads and steady hands. Men can only be managed when sober, and their employes will do anything for a cause that promises to remove the temptation to drink from the pathway of their servants. This state furnishes good ground for prohibition. We are a little behind Kansas and Iowa, but the states with which we have to contend are Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri. These are whisky states, but they must eventually follow where we lead. Our congressmen all favor whisky reform, and that is the key note to the agitation. Carry this fight to Washington and make congress enact laws prohibiting the liquor traffic. It is easier to elect eleven temperance men to congress than sixty or a hundred to the legislatures. Begin at the head, and, while about it, put the ballot into the hands of the women. We can never succeed in this cause until we give women the right to vote. It is the necessary adjunct to success. Women are more interested in this cause, for they have more at stake than we. They ought to have had the ballot in their hands long ago." He indorsed everything that was done at the convention.

MARY T. LATHRAP.

CRUSADE BLOSSOMS IN DAKOTA SNOWS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—With ink at last in a melting mood—and such other environments as frozen mercury may suggest to you, I will try to write you a bit of the manner of our keeping the decennial anniversary of the crusade,—but first beg to stipulate that if my pen run away with me, as it hath a habit of doing, your pencil, freshly pointed, be ruthless.

Mrs. Barrow's cheery parlor with its masses of verdure, climbing and trailing vine, tender, budding shoot, and blossoming hyacinth, smiled a bright welcome upon the ladies of the executive committee of Kingsbury county W. C. T. U., who met there to consider the possibilities held for us, by the 23d, and to plan in regard to them.

It was decided to invite through our corresponding secretary each minister in the county to preach at each of his several appointments, on this memorial Sabbath, a temperance sermon which should include a setting forth of the aims and manifold lines of work undertaken by the W. C. T. U.; also to extend to each pastor's wife an invitation to accompany her husband to each of these appointments and to give a historical account of the W. C. T. U.

A program was suggested including a collection, "The Story of the Crusade," the "Crusade Psalm," and the grand old hymns so winged with crusade memories. The minutes of the meeting were published in the county papers, also the suggested program.

The ministers throughout the county, Methodist, Baptist and Congregational, accepted the invitation and heartily engaged in the carrying out of the program, some of them having appointments in three different places; among these Rev. Otis, of Lake Preston, where both morning and afternoon session were given up to the ladies. Owing to meagreness of report I can make extended mention of but the meetings at De Smet. On the 21st a bell, secured largely by the proceeds of a course of lectures on geology given by Rev. E. Brown, was hung in the belfrey of the Congregational church and we had so hoped that the first notes of the first church bell heard in all this grand county would break the stillness of anniversary morning, but the first storm of the season burst upon us on the morning of the 22d, and raged with such unabated fury all day that the necessary rope attachment could not be made. Although snow drifts piled so high that two hours were consumed in riding four miles, yet a good audience, with a number present from the county, assembled at the church. Rev. P. Hooker, of the M. E. church, talking for his text, "This woman was full of good works," enlarged upon the fullness of good works of the women of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. L. J. Brown read a poem with such feeling as to bring the tears to many eyes. Rev. E. Brown, pastor of the Congregational church, familiar through many years residence in the vicinity of the birth place of the crusade, proved from its then status compared to that of the present, a large and mighty advance of sentiment regarding the drink traffic.

Mr. Brown presided at the evening meeting. After devotional exercises, Mrs. M. W. Owen read a historical sketch of the W. C. T. U., and by request Mrs. Brown repeated the poem of the morning.

Mr. J. A. Owen gave an exposition of the aims and various lines of work pushed in furtherance of these ends, by the W. C. T. U. Incidentally, in his exhibit of the department of work for obtaining the franchise for woman, he said that, although, as a lawyer he was ever looking away back into the past, always seeking precedents established by it, and felt the force of the tendency of the profession to make its followers regard old things with an almost blind veneration, and thus often to look with real pain upon the innovations of modern legislators, and although naturally conservative, he could not help seeing, ultimate good to the temperance cause would be the result of woman's use of the ballot, and for the sake of this good, she should have it.

Each of the preliminary examinations of persons, charged with selling liquor clandestinely, which examinations he had been engaged in conducting the past few days, had resulted in the offenders being bound over to the superior courts in sums of from $200 to $400 each. Two were in jail because of failure to secure bondsmen. the others although in the "custody of the sheriff," were probably selling liquor tonight!

In looking over the formulated departments of W. C. T. U. work Mr. O. found none especially for the enforcement of prohibitory law when made, and urged each gentlemen present to take this up in our "no license county" as his especial work; to give his support to those who were battling to the end that the liquor traffic get no real foothold in the county; and especially urged upon the new comers the duty of defining their position. Several expressed themselves decidedly for temperance, among whom was Prof. Philips, recently from Wilbraham, Mass., while Mr. Phelps, also from Massachusetts, spoke of the expressed desire of one of the recently convicted liquor sellers to be allowed to keep his saloon open for the sale of cider only, and for amusements. In objection to permitting this, he depicted the strength of the temptation to the young by the cider mills of his former apple-growing home, which in coming here he had hoped his children would not feel.

Mr. Jas. E. Smith, of the Exchange and for years a druggist in Michigan, made an address replete with good things, one of which was that in the preparation of medicine they may always be reduced to powders and the use of alcohol in the preparation of their tinctures may thus be avoided, as he believed it should be. Dr. Gomer Davies briefly but heartily endorsed all Mr. S. had said.

Rev. G. N. Annes, pastor of the Baptist church, pictured the various successes which had crowned special efforts of the W. C. T. U. recently, both abroad and at home. The tone of his address was encouraging; its appreciation of the "pluck" of the W. C. T. U. entire; its animus,—Go forward. Rev. E. Brown related reminiscences of the crusade, some amusing, some full of pathos; and dealt a telling blow or two to the "high" licence fallacy, concluding the closing address with an eloquent appeal.

Mr. Brown has just entered upon his seventieth year, but "his eye is not dim or his natural force abated"; with the granite-like characteristics of his martyr cousin —old John Brown—blended with the simple trust and unquestioning obedience of a little child, the W. C. T. U. of Kingsbury county may well feel that they have in this Sir Great Heart a helper upon whom they may rely.

I see that I have omitted to mention in its proper place, the morning, the detailed account of the rise and progress of the crusade, read by Mrs. Brown.

Mrs. M. W. Owen, county president, voiced the thanks of the union to the gentlemen who had made possible to the ladies this fitting celebration of the anniversary,—the singers, the laymen, and most especially the ministers who had so heartily and so generally responded to their call.

Those who were thankful for what God hath wrought in this great temperance advance were asked to voice their thanks in the doxology, and with unusual fervor and earnestness the grand old words were sung as the people rose with one accord before God.

COMMON COLDS.

THEIR NATURE AND MANAGEMENT.

BY HARRIET N. AUSTIN, M.D.

Nobody need, in the nature of things, ever to go into a consumption as a consequence of taking cold, nor have any other permanent ill result, provided there is on hand a fair share of vital stamina. What is called the cold itself, the external manifestation of internal derangement—headache, sore throat, running at the nose, chilliness, feverishness, etc.—is not to be deprecated, but on the contrary is to be welcomed as a friendly notice that something is wrong, not only, but as a disturbance necessarily attendant upon nature's beneficent work of setting things right.

"I am sorry you have a cold," said a kind lady recently to a physician who was visiting her family.

"Oh, it's good for me to have a cold," he replied; and to a young woman in the house who complained of being very nervous, he said, "You are no more nervous than is good for you."

Herein is given the basis of the true theory of disease, and upon it a rational philosophy of treatment may easily be founded. Disease is a friend; therefore treat it as such, and not as an enemy to be attacked and overcome—crushed out at all hazards. The abnormal or disordered condition of the system, which is induced always by some adequate cause, and never arbitrarily imposed by providence, is certainly to be righted And this is just what nature is about. The sickness, pain, lassitude, loss of appetite, restlessness, sleeplessness; all the discomforts belonging to a state opposite to a state of ease—not merely lack of ease, but dis-ease—all these belong legitimately to the extraordinary effort put forth by the living force inherent in the system, to overcome the disorder which has been introduced into its domain. So the violence of one's sickness often corresponds to the proportion of vitality in him, a strong man suffering much more severely than a feeble one in the same form of disease. The doctor's remark, therefore, "You are no more nervous than is good for you," is precisely true.

If then, disease is a good thing, what is the function of the doctor? "To aid nature," is the answer given alike by the authorities in the profession from time immemorial, and by the individual workers who would represent the advanced thought and practice of today.

It is on the question as to how nature shall be aided, that a difference arises. The attempts to do this have, in times past been frightfully disastrous in untold and uncountable instances. Doubtless men would stand aghast if it could be revealed to them how large a proportion of all the people who have died in their beds within the limits of Christian civilization come to their deaths in consequence of honest efforts to aid nature in their behalf

There are two views to be taken of this matter. The first, and one which is altogether too common, even in the profession, is that nature is opposed to the disease, and therefore, that to aid her is to fight it. Go to work at once, and kill it—by mild measures if we can, but at all events, by some sort of measures. Stop the pain, reduce the fever, overcome the nervousness, even if in doing this we have to depress vital force and benumb natural sensibility. Indeed, this method usually involves measures which heavily tax the constitutional powers, so that the patient rises slowly, if he rises at all, from his debility, and too often with an actual depreciation in general health.

The other view is that the diseased action is a beneficent arrangement, a process set up in the system for removing obstructions and inducing harmonious and healthful working of all its parts. To aid nature then is to promote just such action in the system as the disease is aiming at; by judicious provisions and appliances to assist in overcoming the disordered state, regulating the circulation, and establishing natural conditions. The physician who adopts this method does not go to work with a view, directly, to subdue the pain or the fever. He endeavors to aid in accomplishing what the pain and fever are intended to accomplish, and if he is equal to what he undertakes, in the nature of the case the pain and fever will abate

There may be acute pain in the chest or abdomen, and by that very indication the doctor may perceive that there is congestion of some of the vital organs, or such a state of them as that application of heat to the part will facilitate and increase the circulation, excite added functional activity, and so tend to promote health. If hot water fomentations should be used, then one of the legitimate effects would be to lessen the pain, though that was not the primary object sought in the application.

There may be a burning fever, and by this the physician knows that nature is seeking to make the skin an instrument of relieving the blood from impure matters with which it has become loaded. If he has had experience in hydropathic methods and acquired skill which will justify him in giving a wet sheet pack, he will thus, nineteen times out of twenty, excite the skin to increased activity, excretion will be promoted, the system will be relieved, and as a consequence the fever will be abated. Nevertheless the pack was not a weapon aimed at the fever; it was an ally in doing its work.

So any agent which can be appropriated by the organism to its own purposes in correcting any ill conditions within it, is legitimate to the physician's use. It would be strange if it could be demonstrated that any agent which in its nature is inimical to the health of the body can assist nature. Her remedies must harmonize with life not antagonize it. Persons recovering from a cold or any other acute disease, by the proper use of means, will be completely restored, the constitution losing nothing in strength or soundness.

The reason why colds "hang on," and often leave troublesome symptoms behind, is not so much, perhaps, because persons do not understand what ought to be done, as because they under-estimate the importance of being rid of them, holding health as subordinate to something else. If the teacher, when she finds that she has a cold, could lie by for two or three days; if the mother or the house-keeper could accommodate her duties to her personal needs; if the professional man or man of business could see his way clear to give affairs the go-by; if the miss or the matron could forego attendance at the party or the evening meeting and properly heed the notice given by unmistakable signs, that there is wrong in the system to be righted, this might be accomplished with but little difficulty. And what is true of the common cold is equally true of almost any other form of disease, in its incipiency. Forty-eight hours of rest and abstinence in the beginning would forestall many a tedious sickness of many months' duration.

When one takes cold check is given to the external circulation, excretion by the skin is hindered, and thus other excreting organs are overtaxed, the blood carries an undue amount of waste material, the functions of the organs at large are performed laboriously, and there is more or less general disturbance.

Under these conditions the organism requires the appropriation of an unusual amount of power to run its vital machinery and correct the disorder. No matter how much strength a man has, he would do well at such time to be prudent in its expenditure; not to work excessively, nor to eat largely or luxuriously; not to expose himself, nor take from his full amount of sleep. The power so reserved will be appropriated by the system, unerringly, to the restoration of order, and all will soon be set right.

A person of limited vitality taking cold should allow a large proportion of what force he has for the reparative processes. Encourage these, and nature will be sure to do her part well; interfere with them, use up all the strength possessed daily, whether for personal gratification, for the comfort of friends, or for the performance of any duty, and the slight disturbance may grow into unmanageable proportions; the light cold may slip almost imperceptibly into consumption or some other dreadful shape.

The safest, best, and most economical course for an invalid or delicate person, is as soon as it is evident that cold has been taken, to go to bed and stay there until decided relief is had. The room should be pleasantly tempered and well ventilated, measures should be taken to secure warmth to the feet, the whole body being kept rather warmer than usual by clothing; all care and responsibility to be put aside and the utmost quiet sought. In such circumstances, almost anybody can, with advantage, go twenty-four hours, or longer, without food. Thus no vital force is expended in action, thought, feeling, or in the digestion of food, and nature is left free to summon all her forces to the accomplishment of her own purposes. Digestion always involves the outlay of vitality. To take food when it is not needed is, therefore, to waste power. In the recumbent and reposeful state indicated, the system is all the better for a season of fasting. Indeed nature often hints this by taking away the appetite.

After a day or so of abstinence, a moderate allowance of plain wheat meal, oat meal, or Indian meal porridge, or something else equally simple, taken infrequently, will suffice for a day or two longer. By this time convalescence will, as a general thing, be well established, and the person may gradually return to the wonted habits with safety. And all has been done with the least possible ado.

If the cold has been permited to run for sometime, or if the person is exceeding sensitive or frail, more time will naturally be required for recovery. In such cases meat broths may well be substituted, in part, for other food, particularly with persons who are accustomed to the use of meats. The same may be said with reference to tea-drinking. Still, it is wise to pursue the same general quiet in bed.

Whether the time is longer or shorter, if facilities are at hand, warm baths, judiciously given, may help matters greatly. But of all water appliances in a common cold, for a person of fair vital power, I esteem wet sheet packing the chief. It is surprising what a wet sheet pack, followed by entire rest in bed, will do! And it does not require a large room, nor a great quantity of water, nor very complex or cumbersome appliance. It does require good judgment, skill, tact, and then it will accomplish wonders.

[Will not Dr. Austin enlighten us as to the best way of administering the "wet sheet pack?"—ED. U. S.]

TWO BRICKS.

"The church was old and too small," they said,
And the people knelt as the pastor prayed:
"That the spirit of love on them might fall,
To build the Lord's house. For each and for all,
"Let loving be living,
Let praying be giving!"
"Amen!" answered the deacon, who always led
The subscription list. "Amen!" they all said.

But the deacon thought of the meadow that lay
Right next to his, to be sold the next day
At a bargain; so he started to go,
Holding the hand of his little boy, Joe.
"Let loving be living,
And praying be giving!"
The pastor cried with an anxious heart,
As the people all made haste to depart.

"Papa," said Joe, as his little feet pattered—
Little six-year Joe, whose tongue always chattered
Of all that he heard—"When the preacher prayed,
And prayed—and got done, 'Amen,' you all said;
What does amen mean?"
"Why, so be it, my son,"
"Then amen means a new church, don't it?
And it will be built sometime, won't it?"
"Yes, when there are bricks enough," and then straightway
He thought of the meadow and its loads of hay.

He was off the next morning, busy in buying,
And so was Joe off as busy in trying
His little new wheelbarrow, but 'twas quite a load,
For dear little fingers to wheel down the road;
"Please, mister, come quick,
And get the two brick,
For the new meeting house." And the pastor smiled
In the rosy face of the helpful child.

And the good preacher told when the week was done,
Of the new house to be, for the work had begun;
How little Joe Darrow,
On a wheelbarrow,
Had brought the first brick. O'er misty eyes drew
Many a hand, as the long list grew
To thousands of dollars. The pastor prayed then
As never before, and they all said "amen!"

A LITTLE BEHINDHAND.

OR A GOOD RESOLUTION FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"Grandpa, when does a man have three hands?"

This question was put by a child to her grandfather, in the midst of the family circle on Christmas evening. They were all merry with innocent fun and chit-chat. Giving and guessing riddles was one of the entertaining pastimes of the hour. The grandfather repeated the child's question slowly, and after thinking a moment, he said, "I give it up." The bright children great glee cried out, "A man has three hands when he has a right hand and left hand and gets a little behindhand."

All hands laughed heartily at grandfather's failure to guess, and he looked so grave over it, they laughed the more merrily.

But the "head of the house" did not seem to join very heartily in the amusement and they rallied him by asking if it was not a fair conundrum.

"Certainly, not only fair but excellent; the play on the word is very neat, but it has set me thinking of what comes of getting a little behindhand, and some other time, when you want to hear it, I will give you a little sermon or lecture on the subject."

"Now, now—let us have it now!" they all exclaimed; but he knew the children too well for that, and saying that his sermon would keep, he told them to go on with the riddles and stories.

The next Sabbath evening, when they were all in the parlor, the bright little girl who had puzzled her grandfather with the conundrum, looked up from the book she was reading, and said with a smile:

"Grandpa, are you not getting a little behindhand with that sermon you promised us?"

"You shall have it now, if you wish;" and all sat still and attentive while the good man began:

"Tomorrow will be the first day of the new year, and a good time to take a fresh start. To begin well is half the doing whatever it is! The habit of being on time, never a minute behind, is one of the greatest helps to success in life. While on the other hand to get into the way of delaying, keeping others waiting, not being prompt, punctual and ready, is the secret cause of failure in ten thousand cases, many of which I have seen in the course of my life. We notice it in children. What you are in the morning, you will be at noon, and probably at night. 'The child is father of the man,' 'just as the twig is bent,' etc. The family meet in the morning for worship and breakfast; one child is late. She is usually late, the same one. She was behindhand in getting herself ready; the rest waited for her a few moments and then went on without her, and presently she came, disturbing all and making herself disagreeable and them uncomfortable. The boy with such a disposition is late at school, not prepared with his lessons, always just a little behindhand in everything. Perhaps he goes to college, or into business, trade or profession, and if he is dependent on his own exertions he makes a failure in everything.

"Forty years ago I knew two smart boys, helpers in a grocery store. They were brothers. They seemed to be made of steel springs, so quick, prompt and decisive were they in filling every order. They were poor boys, apprentices then. But they worked as if the concern was their own, and success depended on their energy, push and faithfulness. Now they live on one of the fashionable avenues of New York in their own large mansions, retired from the grocery business, in which they made their fortunes. Holding important trusts they are useful and respected citizens and Christians. They owe their success solely, under God, to their own promptness in performing every promise, in being always ahead rather than behind time. And there are mechanics and tradesmen with whom I once had dealings and now have deserted, because they never would fulfill an order in season, would not send a thing home to me when they promised, and invariably kept me waiting whatever might be my distress to be served. This vice runs in the blood sometimes, and whole families are distinguished by taking it easy, 'time enough yet,' being their motto and rule. They drop behind in their race of life. They would be run over if some one did not pick them up and help them on. Half the world has this work to do, besides doing its own. In the absence of positive crime, this habit of taking it easy causes the poverty and failure of the greater part of the human family. With the same chances, with equal wealth and wit, in the same field, one man succeeds and another makes a dead failure. And why? Because one took time by the forelock, was ever prompt, and therefore prosperous. The other was always a little behindhand, and by-and-by so far behindhand as to be counted out as of no account.

"When you are old enough yourselves to meet and move with men and women in business and good works or life, you will soon find some who are late at the appointed time, who come bustling in, ten or fifteen minutes after the hour saying, 'I had no idea it was late,' my watch never deceived me before,' 'I am very sorry to keep you waiting.' All such managers are poor timber to make boards of. If they had the grace of resignation, they would make room for somebody not always a little behindhand.

"The train starts at nine in the morning, and they are two minutes late and are left. The boat goes at five, and they arrive in time to be laughed at by the passengers who see them wiping the perspiration from their heated brows. I knew a Georgia preacher who was holding forth in an asylum to a congregation of the insane. He described a man on a scaffold about to be hung, while in the distance comes a messenger on horseback bringing a pardon. But the hour of fate was just at hand: a minute or two and it would be too late. The preacher drew out the agony by talking and talking, till one of his crazed hearers cried, 'Can't you hurry up a little? They'll hang that man if you don't.' And when I see people dilly-dallying, wasting precious time in doing nothing, I long to tell them to hurry up, for life, soul, salvation may be lost if they are only a little behindhand. It is so in every relation, calling and duty of life. It is the one principle on which the prize of success in this world depends, and immortal glory beyond. Now is the accepted time. Today, if you will hear it, is the day of salvation. You may as well be a year, or a hundred years, or a whole eternity too late, as to be only a little behindhand. When once the Master of the house has shut the door, yo umay knock long and loud, and with a great and exceeding bitter cry, may call to him, 'Lord, Lord, open unto me; I am only a few minutes late; I heard the door close as I came to the threshold: O Master, Lord, open and let me in.' And He from within will answer, 'Depart; I never knew you.'

"You were never one of His. When He called you were not ready. When He warned, you did not heed. When He entreated, you did not yield. When He shut the door, you were a little behindhand. And, as it was with them when the flood came, and in the cities of the plain, when the rain of fire descended, so will it be with you who put off and put off until a convenient season the work of today.

"There, children dear, you have the sermon I promised. The new year begins tomorrow, and the resolution I want you to make is this, 'With God's good help, for which I will daily pray, I will always be on hand, at the moment, ready for every duty, and will do with my might what I am called to do.'"

While the sermon was in progress, the child who gave the conundrum had quietly climbed into her grandfather's lap. She was one of the irrepressible sort of children, and could hardly wait for him to make an end, when she exclaimed, "Grandpa, it's just the other way, isn't it. If a man never gets a little behindhand, he has three hands or four, and does more work and better than the lazy fellow who is always behindhand."

"That's so," said the old man, "and if you had said that at the beginning, you might have spared the sermon."

"Yes," said John, the oldest boy, "but that would have been a great loss to us, and for one I promise not to be a little behindhand, if I can help it, as long as I live."

"Good night all," said the grandfather. "God bless you all with a happy New Year."

"Happy New Year to you grandpa," they cried in chorus, and went off to bed.—N. Y. Observer.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S LETTER.

DEAR CHILDREN:—A "bird of passage" has brought to me some leaves from the Armenian catechism printed by the missionaries last year for young children; and it thrills my heart to know that among the other subjects taught is temperance; for they say that they "feel that the way to gain the victory is to train the young for the war." I want to give you the translation of the hymn, from this little catechism, by which hundreds of children in Turkey have already pledged themselves to fight against King Alcohol. Here it is:

CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE PLEDGE.

Yes, I decide I'll never drink
The intoxicating bowl,
The cup by which all drunkards sink
To hell, body and soul.

Why bid a deadly viper choose
My bosom for his nest?
Why run the deadlier risk—to lose
My soul's eternal rest?

Shall I, "Deliver me from evil,"
To my dear Father pray,
And in the same voice, call the devil
To tempt me day by day?

No! rather, I, to tempters all,
Will "Get behind me!" say,
And never touch the cup at all,
Whoever give it may.

Jesus, forbid that e'er I break
This vow, that while I live,
Never myself the cup I'll take,
Nor to another give.

THE CHILDREN AND THE BIRDS.

O wise little bird, how do ye know
The way to go
Southward and northward, to and fro?
Far up in the ether piped they:
"We but obey
One who calleth us far away.

"He calleth and calleth year by year,
Now there, now here;
Ever He maketh the way appear."

Dear little birds! He calleth me,
Who calleth ye;
Would that I might as trusting be.

A FEARFUL INHERITANCE.

BY HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD.

After awhile she dressed herself in a dainty walking suit and went out. She was very youthful looking, petite and piquant, and her mother had the taste which Marion had inherited of knowing perfectly the art of dress. With a few dollars Mrs. Mortimer could dress Marion more effectively than many girls were dressed upon whom money was lavished ever so recklessly. In the first place she recognized the fact that heavy gorgeous fabrics were not only unnecessary, but absolutely unsuitable for young girls, and Marion Mortimer was often a dream of loveliness in her soft fleecy, floating tulle, or crepe, her clinging India mull, or her simple swiss dress, when overdressed girls in velvets and plush looked simply vulgar. No dress overloaded with trimmings ever obscured the dainty outlines of her perfect figure, but simple flowing draperies in lines and curves of beauty, showed every good point to the best advantage. No mixing up of incongruous colors ever assailed the eye in her costumes. She was a symphony of color throughout, a pleasure to the most artistic eye. Today she was simply exquisite in a full suit of dark hunter's green, with a spray of golden red at her belt. Everything she wore fitted her perfectly, dress, jacket, shoes, gloves; no wrinkle could be discerned by the sharpest eyes. She looked as if she had been run into her clothes like candles in a mold.

She wore a determined air this morning, and stepped very firmly, as she passed rapidly down the street. She was out nearly all day, and when she came back at night she looked much less bright and determined then when she started. She had been cruelly disappointed in her friends. It strikes deep the hearts of the young to have their first enthusiastic sorties into the domain of effort repulsed coldly and unfeelingly. She had been to all the friends she knew who had children, to see if she could get scholars in painting or music. She had gotten none, and but one or two half promises. She felt bitterly hurt and aggrieved. It had cost her a great pang to go at all. Only the desperate alternative which presented itself to her mind in such awful colors could have driven her to it. She could not recognize the substantial justice of many of these refusals. She could not realize that her youth and inexperience were any positive drawbacks to her as a teacher; that she knew little about this business which she was ready to undertake so lightly, did not seem to her the reason she had been refused scholars who were now in tried and experienced hands. She only felt that these friends of hers ought to have helped her, ought to have seen the desperate strait she was in and helped her gladly. Women are doing this every day all over the land. With no preparation for any career of usefulness, with but the merest smattering of knowledge of what they essay to undertake, they rush wildly out when some emergency forces them so to do, and ask for work which they are unfitted for with all the audacity of ignorance, and feel cruelly ill used when it is refused them by a practical world, which must have its work done by experts.

When she told her mother what she had done the consolation she received was: "You ought to have known better, silly child."

"Why mother, how could I know that they would not employ me as soon as Sarah Brown, who has nearly all the scholars. Of course I meant after their terms were out."

"Sarah Brown has been brought up to it. She knew from the beginning she had to teach music; it is her profession. Besides, these ladies had much rather employ one who has not been socially their equal, they find it more agreeable; they can be as exacting and unreasonable with her as they please. It is a great satisfaction to many of them. It is a sore trial to many ladies to be obliged to treat any one they employ, and pay money too, in a lady-like manner."

"Mother, how dreadful."

"But true, nevertheless, if you really want music scholars you must go about two grades, or even three, down in the social scale. There are women who would like much to employ some one who had been above them socially. The poorer they are the better they enjoy it. Among these people you will find great vulgarity; but perhaps you can stand it rather than beg. But you will find it very hard to get your pay."

Mrs. Mortimer dismissed the subject with a shrug, and began to try various little shapes of bonnets which she had before her on to Marion's head.

For a month Marion was full of schemes for work. She sought several places where a governess was wanted for young children. She tried to sell her pictures at the picture store. She did sell some of her dainty fancy work at the Woman's Exchange. But the prices were pitilessly inadequate to her needs. The vast amount of time which such work takes could never be repaid by the prices given. She could easily starve at such labor.

The mother let her go on without a word, she only exhibited the paucity of their resources at intervals, and as she had ever done, held up the good things of the world in their most alluring light. Occasional beautiful presents of fruit and flowers came from Percy Perry, but Mrs. Mortimer wisely kept him a good deal in the background. And at last, when Marion felt utterly desperate and defeated in regard to work, and when her mother announced that she could hold out no longer, and knew not where to turn, Marion consented to the unholy marriage; consented with the same feeling with which she would have consented to die to save her mother—with perhaps even a more bitter pang.

From that time no pause was made. Mrs. Mortimer was in her element.

"Marion, this blue will be perfectly exquisite with facings of pink."

"Yes, mother."

"And that white lace on the lavender is charming and so becoming."

"It is very pretty, mother."

"You must find fans to match both these dresses; we had better do that to-day."

"You see to it, mother; I don't wish to go out."

"Such a blessing to think you are a blonde. I should never get on trying to dress a brunette; tawny yellow and fierce reds would destroy my nerves entirely."

So on, day by day. Marion never asked where the money came from for all these exquisite toilets. She blushed when she thought of it in secret. She did not take a girl's usual delight in her trousseau. There are girls who would be reconciled in marrying almost any man, if the outfit were but fine enough; but Marion was not one of this class. For herself, while delighting in beautiful things as all women do, she would never have sacrificed herself for them. Often she thought as she sat amid those heaps of delicate stuffs, and was called upon to admire one artistic effect after another, of how happy she could have been in the simplest attire had but the right feeling attended the marriage.

Had Cyril Carpenter come to her, even now, and claimed her by the right of love, I think she would have had strength enough to have turned back. But she did not know that he cared aught for her. If in the sweet seclusion of a happy home she could have waited, all might have been well. But this bud of love, which with time and light and heat might have blossomed into a perfect flower, could not be forced into instant bloom. Alas! If it should bloom when it would be too late!

One evening he came to call, ignorant of the approaching marriage. He thought Marion looked pale and drooping and appeared unlike herself, and it added a touch of tenderness to his manner which it had not before shown. But Mrs. Mortimer filled in the time with lively talk, and when he went away Marion did not ask him to come again. She returned some books to him, and thanked him sweetly for them, saying "good night" at the door with just a touch of her little hand upon his. Did he see nothing of the wistful yearning in her eyes? Did he catch no thrill from the mild pulsings of those delicate fingers in the momentary touch? No! we are often blind and deaf at such crises, and curse our obtuseness in vain through bitter years.

The wedding was soon over, a lovely wedding all the young ladies said. You could trust Mrs. Mortimer's perfect taste, to have every detail as it should be. And Marion looked beautiful enough to please even her fastidious taste.

Nothing very strange was thought of this marriage. No local indignation was voiced over the sacrifice. Society is used to such spectacles. There are thousands of reckless young libertines and drunkards in the land, whose fathers have great fortunes, and whose mothers are looking about for virtuous young girls for them to marry. It is a favorite way of serving young debauchees. To be sure, it does not save them. They usually make only a momentary halt in their mad career. But it is thought to be worth the trying, and scarcely a thought is given to the blight upon a young girl's life caused by the diabolical scheme. A great many pious Christian mothers are parties to these infernal contracts every year, and still sleep at night in undisturbed repose, the sleep of the virtuous, unvisited by the remorse which ought to prey upon their very vitals for any complicity in such unspeakable sin. For my part I would say to the mothers of these prodigal sons, if you wish for wives for such as these, go among their own kind. Seek out from among the prodigal daughters, of whom there are many, for whom no fatted calf is ever killed, one who is suitable to him, and let him marry her. But defile not a young and virtuous life by contact with what is vile and revolting. Stain not the unsullied purity of sweet girl life by contact with what to her are unimaginable horrors. Ashes to ashes, dust to dust.

But there was one spectator at the wedding in church, to whom it seemed horrible sacrilege. Cyril Carpenter could scarcely contain his indignation, nor hold within bounds his hatred of the mother who had done this deed. What little sympathy he found in his wrath, was from young men like himself, of serene morality and fine integrity—of whom, thank God, there are still many in the land. A few unfashionable women grieved, as for their own child, a few judicious fathers raised a protest, but the general feeling was far from being that one of hot tumultuous indignation, which should voice itself at such a time. Feb. 3. LESSON V. 1884.

TOPIC.—Paul's second missionary journey.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 15:35-41; 16:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Come over unto Macedonia and help us. Acts 16:9.

TIME.—A. D. 51.

PLACES.—Antioch in Syria, Lystra in Lycaonia and Troas in Mysia.

1. Paul's rejection of John Mark, the helper of Barnabas had for its foundation the defection of this same Mark in another mission field. Barnabas too had followed Peter in his dissimulation with the Jewish Christians. Both of them are left to go their own way to Cyprus, where they doubtless did a good work, and Paul chose Silas, who was "dependable," and had witnessed the agreement of the apostles at Jerusalem and could testify to Paul's legitimate effort among the Gentiles.

Reliability is one of the first requisites of the apostle—the one sent forth to declare a new gospel. He must not be frightened, as was Mark at Pamphylia at the thickening dangers of the way, nor like Barnabas be led into withholding the truth, or the fact of his allegiance to it for policy's sake, when among a gainsaying people.

2. Paul's rejection of these workers was not based upon feeling, but upon principle. As he set forth on this new mission, the work, and the people among whom he worked, demanded perfect trustworthiness, and brave steadfastness, on the part of his co-workers. Mark and Barnabas had failed to exemplify these characteristics once and might do so again, hence—their rejection. That no ill-will or feeling of continued aversion accompanied the act, is evident from Paul's after commendation of Mark to the Collossians, ("If he come to you receive him"); to Timothy, ("Take Mark and bring him with thee, for he is profitable to me for the ministry,") and from his intimate association with him at Rome, shown in the epistle to Philemon. Whatever Paul found it necessary to do for the work's sake, was not treasured up in anger or set down in malice by either party to the act.

3. If anywhere in the Bible the influence of a pious maternal ancestry is shown with the emphasis of instruction it is in the case of Timothy, whose father was an unbelieving Greek, but whose mother, Eunice, whose "unfeigned faith" developed first in her mother, Lois, was a constant guarantee to Paul of Timothy's faithfulness. Though Timothy was Paul's "own son in the faith," yet he built more strongly on the early training and faith of these pious Jewesses than on his own part in the conversion of him who was his "true yoke fellow" and companion. Gently he reminds the young pastor of the things he has learned, and of whom he has learned them; of the teachings of his childhood—the holy Scriptures committed to him by his mother's hands.

4. Why did Paul yield to Jewish prejudice in Lystra and not at Jerusalem? In inducting Timothy into the Jewish church by its rites, he conferred upon him only what Timothy was entitled to by birthright, and made him available for service in Jewish synagogues, where much of his work was to be done.

In refusing to so admit Titus at Jerusalem he denied him only that to which as a Greek, he had no claim, but he maintained the principle for which he contended there and always that circumcision was not necessary to salvation. If it were necessary to greater usefulness he yielded, but when made a test of saving, he rejected it.

"In essentials, unity; in non essentials, liberty," was Paul's principle of administration, and it is one that may be safely followed today. Wherever policy demands no yielding of principle, let policy prevail. Wherever to support policy one must sacrifice or deny his convictions either by speech or silence, let policy go to the wall, and principle stand its ground.

WHO is rich? He who has subdued his passions. Who is wise? He who learns from all. Who is the hero? He who subdues his passions.—Talmud.

THE CULTURE OF THE SOUL.

An absolutely untrained ear would doubtless find only torture in the classic harmonies of the finest orchestras. An eye uneducated by the observation of nature or the canons of art, might stand unmoved, before the canvass of Raphael or Da Vinci. The libraries of the British museum, Cambridge and Oxford have no charm or attraction for the man who never reads. The lyceum, the debating club, the lecture have little power to draw the man who never thinks beyond the provision of the necessities of daily life. Every enjoyment of other than the physical senses presupposes and necessitates a culture of the faculties for such enjoyment.

A man who has by the drink habit debased his nature, blunted his faculties, and to some extent destroyed his capacity for the higher pleasures of the intellect and the spirit, comes suddenly to the "arrest of thought." The hand of God is laid upon his worn spirit, and the light of heaven for a brief moment reveals him to himself. He summons the weak remnant of will left him by a long course of enfeeblement, and resolves to begin his life anew. He makes a few vigorous but perhaps convulsive movements in this direction. He takes hold by faith on powers unseen and is uplifted by them into an atmosphere that may or may not be congenial to him. After the first glow of warm impulse has subsided, and when life presses upon him with its demands that vary not for uplifting or degrading, he often times yields to the thought that the blessed experience is but a dream—that he has been deceived or has deceived himself with the thought that a real and abiding change had been effected in his character. Too often this suggestion is seized upon by the base nature held only in abeyance, and proves his downfall. What he needs just at this point is a motive that shall lead him to cultivate, not maybe from choice, but with the sternness with which he sets himself to earn his daily bread, the new impulses and movements of his soul—to nurse and carefully train the tender aspirations, and to feed with food convenient for them, the new demands, or what should be the demands of his new life. He should set himself to think what ought to be the employments, and the enjoyments of a rational being, and apply himself to them as if he really had an appetite for them, as he surely will have after a little of this sort of practice. He should figure to himself the exercises of a Christain life and drill himself in them till they become the natural movements of his being. In every dilemma of indecision or of circumstance the deciding admonition should be "Keep the soul uppermost," and in every temptation the "Get thee behind me Satan," should be the answer of second nature as well as of a Divine Spirit within.

The fear grows in candid minds that in emphasizing properly the superhuman agencies that reform lives, we do not sufficiently accent the means lying quite within our reach that "make for righteousness" and are ordained of God as surely to this end as the regenerating power of the Spirit, and the transforming power of the indwelling Savior.

A BIT OF INNER HISTORY.

In September, 1882, the W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts, inaugurated a movement to secure constitutional prohibition in that state.

They called a meeting of representatives from every temperance organization of the state, who pledged their respective associations to work with the W. C. T. U. for the object proposed. A mass meeting was held by the united organizations in Tremont Temple, September 12, at which President Seelye of Amherst college presided, and Senator Blair, and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster made able addresses. Mrs. Livermore took into her hands the raising of funds for the new work, and secured on the spot, in pledges or money, about $1200. The burden of getting signatures to a petition for a constitutional prohibitory amendment, to be presented to the legislature, was thrown on the W. C. T. U. with promises of help from their co-workers in the other organizations, which were poorly kept. Nevertheless, the women secured about 55,000 names to the petitions, which were duly presented to the general assembly.

This year, on the advent of John B. Finch, the movement was renewed, and this time by the men prohibitionists. They called a mass meeting, on December 27, which was sparsely attended, and proceeded to re-inaugurate the work for this season.

Among other meaures proposed was one calculated if not intended to antagonize women; viz., voting down squarely a resolution which recognized women's equality with men, and recommended that women be urged to push forward the work of securing the ballot for themselves, that they might more effectually help the temperance cause.

This brought out the following card of withdrawal from the work, published by Mrs. Livermore, which has been extensively copied into our western papers:

> Learning through the daily papers that the Tremont Temple convention held last Thursday to organize for the accomplishment of a constitutional prohibitory amendment, elected me one of the officers of the permanent organization, I wish to say that I decline the office to which I was elected. I connot forfeit my self-respect by working with a body that urgently needs and demands the co-operation of women, and then insults them by voting down a resolution that recognizes their equality with men. MARY A. LIVERMORE.
> Melrose, Dec. 28, 1883.

In a note, just received from Mrs. Livermore, she writes as follows:

> If the Tremont Temple convention had manifested a different spirit I should have felt less aggrieved. The mover of the resolution might have been persuaded to withdraw it—or, in an amicable and courteous spirit, with the explanation that the temperance reform must be carried on its own merits, it might have been tabled, and I could have borne it. But the resolution was met by jeers, contempt and discourtesy. The papers so report, and a dozen letters now before me, received from men and women in attendance, confirm the reports of the press. And when Dr. Dorchester, on whom I have depended more than on all other temperance men, because of his calm, judicial character, his fairness, his exhaustive knowledge of the temperance question, his noble attitude in battling for the right when in the legislature—when he, my guide and my friend, publicly declared that he should withdraw from the convention if the woman suffrage resolution was carried, no other course was left me but to withdraw myself, when it was voted down.

I do not believe in doing evil that good may come. And to insult women is to do evil. Notwithstanding the contempt in which so many men hold women, even when working with them, God has allied Himself with us, in these great words, "In as much as ye do it unto one of the least of these, ye do it unto me." With such an alliance, women take on almost omnipotence, when battling for the right. And so we can work alone, better than with men who despise us, and I WILL.

VALUABLE information concerning the accomplishments of prohibition in Kansas comes to us from the secretary of the state temperance union. It is gathered from official sources and cannot therefore be open to criticism as the product of fanaticism:

In sixty-six out of eighty-one organized counties there were 708 saloons prior to May 1 1881, the date of prohibitory law efficiency. There are now in the same territory, 313 saloons,—160, or over half of which, are in Leavenworth; leaving but 153 saloons in the sixty-six counties, not including Leavenworth. Prohibition, in less than two years, has closed 395 saloons. During this time the population has increased 12 per cent. If the saloons had kept pace with the population, there should now be 792 saloons; so that in reality prohibition has prohibited 479 saloons in the territory named.

Prior to May 1 1881, there were saloons in every one of these sixty-six counties. Today, the 313 saloons in existence are confined to twenty-five counties, over half the number being in a single county. Prohibition has therefore absolutely driven the saloons out of forty-one counties, in which they existed under license.

In the district courts of these counties, there have been 460 cases of violation of the law brought into court, resulting in 351 convictions, 47 acquittals and 62 hung juries, or seven convictions out of every nine cases tried.

In justice courts there have been 572 cases tried, with 378 convictions, 75 acquittals and 59 hung juries, or convictions in three-fourths of all cases tried. In these cases the fines imposed amount to $95,200. In addition to these fines, there have been 81 saloon-keepers imprisoned, for various periods of time, aggregating 137 months and 19 days, or 11 years, 5 months and 19 days. There has been a larger proportion of convictions in whisky cases than in any other class of cases tried, as reference to the criminal docket of any court in the state will prove. There are now pending in the district courts of the state 218 cases, showing a vigorous determination to complete the work so well begun.

In fifty-one of these counties, the reports all agree that the principle of prohibition is growing stronger with the people. In seven it is reported weaker, while it remains the same in eight.

Since these facts were obtained the thirty saloons of Lawrence have been abolished while in Topeka the stampede of liquor dealers is described by a whisky organ as "agonizing."

THE Louisiana conference of the southern M. E. church, in session at New Orleans last week, adopted a radical report of its committee on temperance, favoring the enactment of prohibitory laws, and called on the women to organize against the great evils of intemperance, and appeal to the legislature to prohibit by law the manufacture of all intoxicating beverages, except for medical, scientific and sacramental purposes. One member moved to strike out sacramental wine. Bishop Kavanagh said that he must caution the brothers against any fanatical and ill-considered zeal. Wine had been ordained to be used in the sacrament of the Supper of Faith by the Lord himself. He had made wine also, and it had been pronounced good wine. It had been claimed that the wine Christ used and spoke of was not a fermented, spirituous liquor, but there is not a shadow of evidence to that effect. There is no shadow of doubt that the wine of Scripture was the fermented juice of the grape. He, the Bishop, was as fully alive as any man could be to the evil influence wrought by the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks, but he was opposed to that blind zeal without knowledge that would banish Christ from the temperance societies.

When the W. C. T. U. organizations, called tor by the conference, are dotted over the south as thickly as in the north, we believe a new body of temperance doctrine will take possession of the church, and not the drugged wine, but "fruit of the vine" will be made, as in our Savior's hands, the vehicle for the commemoration of His "shed blood."

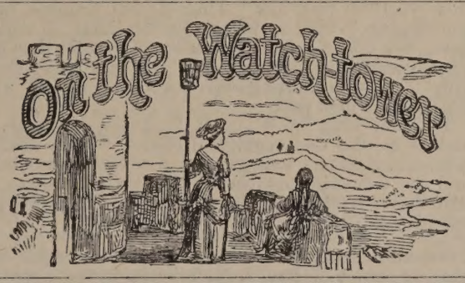
THE National W. C. T. U. leaflets for young people are charming little square tracts, in cream tinted paper, with an engraved heading, showing up in a delightful series of entertaining stories and narratives of facts, the fallacies of the drink habit, and proving that men and women are better off without it, at work, at play, traveling, marching, voyaging, in business and in social life. Twenty-four numbers are now ready, and are sent for eight cents, post paid. Send for a set, and have some of them selected and ordered to distribute in your Sunday school next temperance day, if not sooner. Price, per 100, 25 cts., postage, 3 cts. One union ordered 1000 of one kind, for such distribution last temperance day. Send to Julia Colman, 72 Bible House, New York city.



The Illinois liquor dealers association estimates its expenses for the present year at $10,000. W. C. T. U. of the same state, can you do your work with less?

"Crusade Sunday," was a great day even in Boston, that city of historic days generally. Mrs. Livermore celebrated the day with the W. C. T. U. by lecturing on temperance in Tremont Temple, Boston, and taking up a collection afterwards for the treasury of the N. W. C. T. U., which yielded $75.

It is good to be "instant in season," and I am persuaded that it is impossible to be "out of season." For instance some western delegates to the National convention will remember a little labor with a young gentleman from Ohio, on the homeward trip. On New Year's day, this young man gave up the tobacco habit, and says he feels sure that "those women" have been praying for him ever since that November journey. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

Beef tea, or "bouillon" is now said to be a popular drink served by the saloons in all our large cities. Side by side with this substitution of the saloons, comes the hot water drink of the tea table. I don't know much about either yet, but certain good people that I have great confidence in, seem to take positive delight in sipping the steaming beverage that will never stain a table cloth.

Tea may be superseded by hot water perhaps in the ongoing of reform, but I protest against making it the scape goat for congressional sins. When our congressmen take to whisky in tea cups under the name of "cold tea" it's time for another "tea fight." Over board with that tea!

* * * * *

In this I see that I have the support of that good man, Senator Frye, of Maine. At his instigation, the new rules of the senate prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the senate restaurant whether in tea cups or otherwise.

Miss Anna Sneed, principal of Kirkwood Seminary, Mrs. Alice Peterson, of the W. C. T. U. of St. Louis, and Mrs. Harris, the newly appointed matron of the Four Courts police station of that city, were in Chicago several days of last week, studying the police court situation here and the adaptation of a matron's services to the terrible needs of imprisoned women.

One of the earnest workers and hospitable hostesses of Alton, whom many delegates to the Illinois W. C. T. U. convention remember with grateful love, Mrs. Charles Phinny—has gone home to her reward. Very suddenly on New Year's day came her summons to the "eternal years"—where there awaited her one most dear. Her life on earth was full of ministry. Who shall doubt that it may be so still?

A gentleman largely interested in viniculture and other cognate interests of the liquor traffic, writes to the Champion:

I feel mortified, not to say discouraged, when I contemplate the energy, ability, self sacrifice and pushing determination of the women who have espoused the prohibition cause, qualities which indeed are as commendable as they are wonderful, especially in view of the apathy, selfishness and cowardice of the men against whom the force of their labors is directed; and were it not that there is a vital principle involved. I would say: "Serves them right?" If our prohibition or high license equivalent to prohibition ruins the liquor traffic of the United States, the liquor dealers will have none to blame for it but themselves. Their indifference, their blindness, their stinginess are something phenomenal.

A mass meeting was held last week by the W. C. T. U., of the District of Columbia, in Masonic Temple, to consider the proposal of the commissioners to strike out of the former licensing law the provision that property holders, residents of the quarter wherein a saloon is proposed, shall have the opportunity of legislating as to the same by signature. The W. C. T. U. of the district never forgets its Columbia inheritance.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, president of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, was one of the speakers at the prohibition convention at Jackson. The daily papers which report the proceedings very lightly, not to say contemptuously, speak of her address as the great speech of the convention. Mrs. Lathrap has been very successfully engaged in revival meetings at Charlotte and Paw Paw in her own state. Nearly one hundred have been converted at the latter place.

* * * * *

Miss Mary McClees, after a few weeks spent in inaugurating Kitchen Garden work in Detroit under the auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U., is now in Manistee, Mich., for the same purpose. The beautiful, rebuilt Union Hall is to be the scene of many happy enterprises and I predict that none will tell more directly on the future welfare of neglected little girls than this beautiful charity.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, while in the west filling engagements with lyceums, lectures in courses managed by the W. C. T. U. in Michigan City, Ind., Marshall and Flint, Mich., and Fremont, Ohio. In February and March she will fill several similar engagements made with the W. C. T. U. in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, and Tennessee. On the evening of February 2, Mrs. Livermore will debate the question of woman suffrage with Prof. Van Buren Denslow, of the Chicago Inter Ocean, in Cleveland, O. The debate will be given under the auspices of the "Cleveland Educational Bureau," which has a course of lectures for the people, in the "Tabernacle" built for that purpose, with a seating capacity of between 3,000 and 4,000. The time of the debate will be two hours.

NEW JERSEY.

MILLVILLE.—[The Appeal, published quarterly by the W. C. T. U. of Brockport, N. Y., gives a most interesting account of the wonderful temperance work accomplished in this model town, from which we make some extracts. May it stimulate other committees to greater zeal.—ED.]

"Beginning with very small children the temperance school gathers the young every Saturday afternoon, in the "Boys' Room." Here, under devoted and competent teachers, over a hundred children are instructed in temperance principles and songs. Once a month these children give a public entertainment in the Institute Hall, to which crowds of adults come and listen to the truth from the mouths of little children.

Every weekday evening the "Boys' Room." is opened to the boys of the town. This is a beautiful room, carpeted, hung with pictures, warm and brightly lighted. Bookshelves on the walls are full of good boys' books, full of pictures, with card pictures, stereoscopes, magnifying glasses, and organ, blackboards, slates, and slates for drawing. Here from eighty to a hundred boys gather, who would otherwise be in the streets, and spend the evening with positive benefit. Teachers gather those who desire to learn to read around them, and teach many to read, while the books are a constant stimulus to learn.

The town is not unmindful of its obligations to the factory children. Every winter evening schools are opened in different parts of the city, and several hundred boys and girls are taught during four months. This is a regular part of the public school system, the city council and board of education both uniting in the work. They have just made a further appropriation to teach the young mechanics of the town mechanical drawing.

The Y. W. C. T. U. is a flourishing organization, which has socials and public meetings, under their own control. The strong influence which they exert on the young men of the town is a powerful aid in securing the safety of the coming generation.

The Reform Club is a popular organization, meeting in a public hall, for popular exercises, every other Monday night. This is a club to which both young men and women belong, and in their committee work a great deal of good reforming work is done among the weak.

The executive committee of the political temperance party of Millville has, perhaps, done more than any other one organization to obtain and preserve practical prohibition in the town. For ten years they have worked without ever losing their aggressive activity. First they planned the campaigns where the license party was divided and beaten. Then having obtained the election of an anti-license town council, they set themselves to enforce the law. Money and time has not been spared during these years. Offenders have been detected, tried and convicted by them, and scores of them fined and imprisoned. Every court in the state has sat upon their complaints. At their request the legislature has given them better laws. Every election has secured their active efforts. The majority for prohibition under their earnest work has increased every year, until the license question has dropped out of politics. It is no longer an issue because no candidate who would dare to advocate a return to license would get enough support to escape ridicule. No licensed hotel or saloon exists in Millville, and no unlicensed vender sells liquor over any counter. The evil is narrowed down to the pocket liquor seller, and has lost all pretense to respectability.

The Workingman's Institute was organized to offer a counter attraction to saloons and immoral places of resort. It occupies a building costing $20,000, and has large grounds. It offers working men over eighteen years of age a good place to spend their evenings, and is based on the principle of entertainment leading up to instruction. The membership is large, and very low in cost. It is a very popular organization with the young mechanics and artisans of the town, and bids fair to develop a technical school in its successful class work. Its rooms and hall are always at the disposal of the temperance organizations of the town without charge, and the relations between its directors and the W. C. T. U. are most intimate.

Lastly we would name the W. C. T. U. of Millville. No town of equal size can show a more earnest body of workers. Every minister of the city yields to their sweet persuasion, and a constant and systematic cannonade is maintained on the enemy. The best lecturers of the land are brought to the city, and their meetings every Sunday afternoon in the institute hall are the most popular event of the week. They maintain a regular weekly prayer meeting and are the moving spirits in the boys' room and temperance school. They are untiring and ever vigilant. Personal work with men who drink is, in their hands, more powerful than the compulsory policy of the executive committee.

It may be added that all these departments of activity in moral work are not the result of any patronage by a few interested philanthropists. From the start, ten years ago, when Millville was a drinking town, with four licensed hotels and twenty saloons, the work has been done by the working people on their own motion. This has given a strong assurance to the work, and it may safely be asserted that no sudden revulsion will ever turn Millville back again into a license town."

IOWA.

OSKALOOSA.—Failing to see a line as to how Iowa kept Crusade Day, I write to say that we Oskaloosians held a small afternoon service for children, addressed by Mrs. Snowden, our Congregationalist minister, and some others. In the evening a large audience gathered in the First M. E. church. Copies of the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL were scattered all over the church, and our president, Mrs. M. J. Cook, opened the meeting with prayer. Several ladies were also on the platform, some of whom, with Mrs. Cook, were in the crusade. President Trueblood of Penn College, spoke well, bringing in portions of the printed account of crusade.

The Baptist minister also addressed the meeting. A collection was taken up for national and state purposes.

I am quite of the impression we (W. C. T. U. sisterhood,) don't fully appreciate the spiritual blessing that has come to our own souls, in this labor of love for others.

Another thing I think is, that many Christian workers too much separate the gospel and temperance, whereas the latter is part of the former, and a great factor in the blessed work of soul-saving the Master has left in our hands to be performed; and we dear sisterhood, do need the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

We cannot use our powers so availingly as when we know Christ sanctifies us; when we are not afraid of using every faculty, and daring and doing for Him, who has done all things for us.

I always rise from reading THE UNION SIGNAL, inspirited, and "glad I am in this army." The memorial number is a gem. I sent several over the ocean to old England.

I feel to know the dear sisters I shall never meet on earth, and send to one and all a New Year's greeting, and let us make 1884 a year white in the annals of prohibition history.

R. W. MARRIAGE,
District Evangelist.

BUFFALO.—The first celebration of memorial day, was a meeting for the children of all the Sabbath schools of the city, organized as a Band of Hope, held in the audience room of the First M. E. church at 3 p. m. Mrs. John Mahin presided, and directed the exercises. Four hundred children marched from the room below, bearing appropriate banners, singing as they came. And we would much prefer taking the risk of our sons and daughters making noble men and women, trained in that Band of Hope, to march and with the resolute stamp of their youthful feet bid "King Alcohol tremble, we're growing up," than to follow the teachings of mothers here, who say, "Let the boys have all the beer they want when they are young, and they will not make drunkards." Most interesting exercises were given, in which the children took part.

In the evening the W. C. T. U. held anniversary exercises in the Congregational church. Many thrilling historical incidents were given. A collection was taken, and the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL was distributed freely in the audience. The ministers gave valuable aid, and the meeting was a success.

SPENCER.—Our union at its last meeting acted upon the suggestion of Mrs. J. M. Wheeler in the Lever viz: to ask the member of congress from our district to vote for the 16th amendment. Here it is:

Resolved, That the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Spencer, do hereby earnestly and respectfully request Hon. I. S. Struble, representative of the 11th congressional district of Iowa, to use his utmost influence and vote to procure the passage of the 16th amendment, to the constitution of the United States, and thus help us to secure our God-given right to represent our individual wants and interests in the government of which we form a part and pay taxes to support without representation. Signed by Mrs. J. B. Shesler, president; Mrs. A. G. Carter, vice president; Mrs. C. L. Darrow, vice president; Mrs. B. E. Coats, vice president; Mrs. Addie Carter, secretary pro tem; Mrs. Eva Sober Gilchrist, financial secretary; Mrs. S. E. Thorne, treasurer.

The above resolution was carried without a dissenting vote.

I have often wondered why Iowa's department in THE UNION SIGNAL was not filled each week.* Who can tell? We scattered 150 copies of the memorial number in this county and it is my purpose to drop a card to each recipient asking for her subscription. I have already sent one subscription as reward of this effort.

The Pleasant Valley Union observed December 23 with appropriate exercises. This is a county union where the members are scattered, but a good attendance was had and much interest manifested in our work. I sent receipts of collection as a thank offering to our National treasurer sometime ago but have had no acknowledgment as yet. Spencer Union also commemorated the day. The Greenville Union had no special exercises but took a collection as a thank offering for the national. I have thought for a good while it was the duty of each local union to take a collection as often as once a year at least for the national and one for the state treasury so that our workers need not be so hampered for lack of means.

EVA SOBER GILCHRIST,
Secretary Clay county W. C. T. U.

[*The answer is sorrowfully given that the news is not sent us, therefore we cannot print it, as is the case with many of Iowa's sister states.—ED.]

INDIANA.

CRUSADE ANNIVERSARY.

Extensive preparations were made for the general observance of the day according to the national program, and we had great expectations, which were only partially met, the extremely stormy weather rendering it impossible to hold meetings in many places. Their postponement in many cases has delayed reports, so that it is impossible at this date to say how generally the anniversary has been celebrated. Having done all we could to make it a success in every way, and believing that under such circumstances "good but wished with God is done," we trust the Divine blessing may make up for all deficiencies.

Some of our unions did some pleasing yet real good temperance work on New Year's day. The ladies of the Central Union, of Indianapolis, kept "open house" at their lunch room, which tasteful decorations, a piano, etc., transformed for the afternoon into an attractive drawing room.

Elegant refreshments were served and a dainty temperance chromo card with a knot of white ribbon attached, was given to the callers, who numbered over one hundred.

The older girls of the colored Band of Hope received their friends in a private parlor beautifully decorated. Temperance New Year's cards were given as favors here also, and refreshments served without the wine so commonly used by this class on festive occasions. Eleven of the callers signed the pledge, one a prominent lawyer, who had become alarmed and disgusted with what he had seen of the wine-drinking, in his calls that day.

GOSPEL WORK IN INDIANAPOLIS.

Maloth avenue has a reputation. Not an enviable one. How could it have with——I am afraid to say how many saloons in one block? Being near some of the large manufactories, there is custom enough to support an incredible number. Some of the women of the Central Union, who knew the appalling need, have long been praying that the Lord would open the way for gospel temperance work in that part of the city.

About a year ago they learned of a little vacant room, right by the saloons, rented it, opened a lunch room and hung out the banner of the W. C. T. U. This was the entering wedge but it soon became apparent that this was not the work to be done, and it was soon abandoned.

In the meantime an industrial school had been organized, into which over fifty little girls were gathered and taught to be neat, cleanly and temperate, as well as to sew. Then a Sunday school was started which soon became too large for the little rooms. Just then the Lord pointed out a larger one, in the same neighborhood, which was rented. Still the school grew, but as soon as it became too large for that room the way was opened for them to rent the one adjoining, throw both into one, and partition off one corner for an infant class room.

The walls were nicely papered and hung with mottoes and pictures, and a Sunday school pledge roll, which is nearly filled. An organ was procured and the room seated to accommodate over two hundred. Across the entire front in large letters are the significant words: "Woman's Christian Temperance Union Tabernacle."

To many it is the dearest place on earth. A Wednesday evening gospel meeting has been held from the beginning, but was attended for a long time almost entirely by women. Soon after the opening of the tabernacle, Mr. Pinkham, of Iowa, gave two or three gospel temperance lectures. One evening after the meeting had closed, eleven young men came back and asked to sign the pledge. This was the first fruits. Others came. A young men's union auxiliary to the W. C. T. U. was organized for their mutual help. A midsummer revival followed, in which several of these young men, besides others, heads of families and Sunday school children, found the Savior.

Sunday evening gospel meetings were commenced, and then a Sunday morning service, at which some minister preaches.

As the colder weather drew on, the need of a reading room, where these young men who had been accustomed to frequent the saloons of Maloth avenue, might spend their evenings, was apparent. There was space for a room in the rear of the tabernacle, but how should they get the money to build it? Said the boys: "We have among us carpenters, bricklayers, painters, etc. If you can get the materials, we can build the room." One afternoon's canvass in that neighborhood resulted in the donation of an abundance of building materials. The room was built, furnished to look as pleasant and home like as possible, and supplied with papers, magazines and books. It is also used as a prayer room, and on Sabbath by the large young men's class of the Sunday school.

All the above lines of work are now being carried on, making it one of the busiest places in the city, as the free kindergarten under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., occupies the primary class room every school day forenoon.

"A mother's meeting" has also been held much of the time. A series of revival services before holidays resulted in the conversion of a large number among the young men.

I have tried to make this outline of the work as brief as possible, and assure you that "half has not been told" of this truly wonderful work of the Lord.

Though many friends and gospel workers have given valuable assistance, to the faith, untiring efforts and devotion of Mrs. S. A. Heath, superintendent of gospel work, is due mainly the remarkable success of the work generally. Miss Bessie File is the efficient superintendent of the Sunday school, and assisted by a corps of earnest teachers, mostly young people. Miss Mollie G. Hay, president of the Y. W. C. T. U., superintends the industrial school. So our young people are doing their part in this work which has wrought such a transformation in that part of the city. L. E. R.

MICHIGAN.

DETROIT.—It was my privilege to be present at the last monthly meeting of the Y. W. C. T. U. of this city, on Friday, which was of so interesting a character that I thought possibly the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL might like to hear what this new union is doing. The union now numbers nearly fifty members who are lovely girls with an earnest desire to do some work for "God and home and native land." Their meetings are made profitable and attractive by the study of topics on the temperance question, varied with music. After the devotional exercises, led by the press, an essay upon "cider," well studied and prepared, was read by a young lady who told me afterwards she had known nothing about it, and had to even send to Chicago for David Cook's publications to aid her. This it seemed to me, certainly gave evidence of much interest. One young lady read a chapter from the life of John B. Gough. Instrumental and vocal music interspersed these exercises. Your correspondent was called upon to say something about the Kitchen Garden, as related to temperance, and the meeting then closed. Soon after the organization of the union, a donation of $100 and the use of a spacious hall, were offered the young ladies, by the managers of the industrial school to start a Kitchen Garden, and for the past week I have been instructing an enthusiastic class of eighteen, and in two weeks the classes for the children will be formed. From here I go on Saturday to Manistee for the same object.

MARY C. MCCLEES.

FENTONVILLE.—The W. C. T. U. held an interesting memorial service, in which the ministers gave valuable assistance. A collection was taken, part of which will be sent as a "thank offering," to the national W. C. T. U. and a part to assist in sending temperance literature to the lumbermen. One hundred copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, and two hundred and fifty Union Leaflets, were distributed through the church. This society conducts one column in the Fenton Gazette, and has regular meetings every Wednesday, beside the good work of the Sunday school temperance union, which meets the first Sunday of every month. The ladies intend giving an art loan exhibition in a few weeks.

MANISTEE.—At the decennial exercises, which were full of interest, the following resolutions were read by Rev. Mr. Snashall, which were adopted heartily:

To the end that our reform may go forward,

Resolved, That we, members of the Manistee W. C. T. U., assembled in mass meeting to celebrate the first decennial of our organization, pledge ourselves here and henceforth to do our utmost as individuals and as a union to carry on gospel temperance work among the employes of lumbermen, and to make void the assertion of the saloon-keepers in the lake states, who boast that they have a hundred thousand men at work for them in the pineries.

Resolved, That we request our secretary to forward copies of this resolution to the executive boards of our state and National union, with the request that gospel temperance work for lumbermen's employes be made a department of the W. C. T. U.'s work in America.

WYOMING.

LARAMIE CITY.—A local union was organized in this city November 28, with ten members, and in four weeks our membership has increased to over one hundred. At first our ambition was to get twenty-five members, as that would just put us on a par with the number of grog-shops, in political power and influence, for you know the women vote here, and are therefore an important factor in politics. We had twenty-five members in a week, and then determined to double that number by the time of our next weekly meeting, and every member volunteered as a "recruiting officer." After securing fifty members, we resolved to make it one hundred, which we have already done, and now we propose to secure a membership which will place our association in the majority. We now think it proper to admit gentlemen as honorary members, and there are scores of them wanting to join.

We celebrated the 23rd most enthusiastically. It has awakened an interest in the temperance cause never felt here before. We have sent thirty dollars to the National treasurer, Miss Pugh, and fifteen for THE UNION SIGNAL."

Our legislature meets very soon, and several members from this county have asked us what we want them to do, and promised to make an effort to do it. We shall work to the secure passage of a "local option law," which is the best we can hope for this year. But "we have come to stay!"

A great responsibility rests upon the women of Wyoming.

We enjoy all the political powers and privileges of men, "and where much is given, much is required."

MRS. J. H. HAYFORD,
President Laramie City W. C. T. U.

CONNECTICUT.

NEW BRITAIN.—How the months have rolled away! Can it be a year since, with eagerness as well as anxiety, the ladies of the W. C. T. U. opened their coffee room? One recalls with pleasure that first night, when so many friends of the enterprise came in to give a God speed and survey the pretty room, which had been transformed from a rude dark storehouse to a bright attractive resort. On every evening except Sunday since that night the room has been open and during several weeks in the summer it was also open at the noon hour. Hundreds—one might say, thousands—of men and boys have visited the room where they have found reading, games and music, free to all, without the temptations and sins of a drinking saloon. No small labor has been required to manage such a room. Several hundred dollars have been raised, fuel and supplies of all kinds have been furnished, and untold thought and care have been necessary to make arrangements, suitable for both men and boys. But a devoted band of women was equal to the task, and today they can look with satisfaction upon the first year so successfully completed. Have there been difficulties and discouragements? O yes, but there was strength and zeal to meet each one and a constant determination to succeed. Surely when the magnitude of such a work is fully realized the W. C. T. U. should receive all praise and not be accused of failure or lack of working power. Perhaps it is not generally known that this is the "Banner union," having the largest membership in the state, and it is an organization of which the city may well feel proud.

M. B. R.

MAINE.

PORTLAND.—A great temperance mass meeting was held for the children on decennial day, and every preparation was made, in the way of floral decoration of the City Hall, fine music, engaging good speakers etc., to insure success. Nearly every pastor in the city was on the platform, together with Mayor Deering, Judge Kingsbury, Hon. Neal Dow, and other representative temperance men and women of Portland. The front seats were filled with teachers and children, and the latter were evidently interested, and kept perfect order. Mrs. George Hunt, president of the W. C. T. U., presided. The speakers were Rev. Dr. Hill, Rev. Mr. Bayley, Rev. Dr. A. K. Small, Rev. Mr. Blanchard, Gen. Neal Dow, Rev. Mr. Lowdon, and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, state president W. C. T. U., most of these giving ten minute speeches, which were full of earnest force.

KANSAS.

HUTCHINSON.—The W. C. T. U. held an interesting memorial service December 23, in the Opera hall, with a crowded house. The Joe Hooker Post sent a fine flag for the occasion, and other beautiful decorations made the scene beautiful. A hundred copies of the crusade number of THE UNION SIGNAL were distributed in the audience, and a list of fifteen subscribers was taken, with the promise of additions. A collection was taken, to be sent as a "thank-offeriing" to the national treasury. The audience joined in singing the doxology over the victory of a temperance mayor in Topeka. M. J. H.

PENNSYLVANIA.

OIL CITY.—The W. C. T. U. observed memorial day fittingly, and the meeting was a time of rejoicing over the progress of temperance. They also held a noon-day prayer meeting January 8, which was earnest and helpful. M. M. H.

NEW YORK.

YONKERS.—The two unions united in the observance of the crusade in a meeting held in the First Methodist church, Jan. 10, at 10 o'clock and continuing throughout the day with a change of topics and leaders each hour.

The weather was most auspicious, a bright and sunny day, sandwiched between two days of storm the heavy rain of the previous night washed the sidewalks seemingly to prepare the way for the feet of some aged and invalid ones who delight to tread the courts of Zion. The services began with songs of thanksgiving, as was most fitting, as an occasion when the review of ten years of our organization revealed so much of the loving kindness of our divine Leader.

The first hour led by Mrs. Mary A. Smith, president of W. C. T. U. was devoted to a Bible study upon "Peace." The second hour Miss Helen Rollins, leader, gave opportunity for continued attention to the command, "Search the Scriptures." The noon lunch hour brought the visitors together in friendly greetings.

The topic for the third hour, from 1 to 2 o'clock, was the "Consecration of the Purse." Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, after considering the obligations resting upon Christians as laid down in God's word, made an appeal for a "free-will offering" to the N. W. C. T. U. which was responded to by a liberal collection.

The young ladies of Yonkers W. C. T. U. aided not only by their presence, but in taking turns at the organ accompaniment to the singing. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, corresponding secretary of National union, filled an hour most profitably and agreeably, in talking upon "Influence." The last hour was occupied by Mrs. Margaret Bottome, in one of her inimitable, indescribable "talks," inspiring and electric. The benediction was pronounced by the pastor of the church. S. A. MCCLEES.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

VICTORIA.—I want to thank dear Miss Willard through your columns for having visited our province last summer. The seed which she scattered when here is springing up and bringing forth fruit abundantly, and many of us have to thank her for the salvation of our husbands, brothers, and sons. Some of us were abstainers before she came, though our influence was only felt inside our own family circles, but she convinced us that as mothers and sisters we owed a duty to the public and to the rising generation, and should combine together for the overthrow of King Alcohol. Those of us who were not convinced by her clear reasoning, were won by her love and sympathy, and we are very grateful to the Giver of all good for sending her among us, and for the success which has followed her coming.

It is really wonderful how temperance has grown in this and our neighboring city, New Westminster, during the last year. No week passes but several names are added to the already large list of total abstainers.

Our W. C. T. U. held a reception at their rooms on New Year's day, and great success attended it. Between three and four hundred gentlemen called upon us, and partook of the sumptuous repast which was prepared by the ladies, but our success did not lie here, but in the large number who joined our ranks, many among them having to overcome early education and family objections by so doing. In the evening we held a meeting, and are much encouraged by its successful character. Liquor is banished from the tables of nearly all our best citizens on New Year's day, and temperance is becoming quite fashionable in Victoria, and we hope it will not be long before we can have a law of total prohibition in our province similar to the one they have in the northwest territory. G. H. G.

ILLINOIS.

FINANCIAL.

Please report Galva "ahead" in Illinois, as far as heard from, in the line of "decennial offerings." Thirty-five dollars and forty cents for state work, and the same amount for national treasury. Elgin sends $20.00, and wishes the honor of the first credit for the new year. "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." Today, a letter inclosing one dollar, was received from a dear sister, a minister's wife, who writes: "I have been wondering how I could help a little, though shut up in my own home. That I am interested, is proven by the facts that I am shut in today, because of some temperance tramping, done for local option, a few years ago. Your letter in THE UNION SIGNAL reminded me that every dollar would help the state work, even if I could not now help my next neighbor. May success speedily crown the W. C. T. U. banner in Illinois."

God bless the "shut in," workers! ,They also serve, who only stand and wait." Let the offering scome jingling in. It's music in a treasurer's ear, who is waiting for the means to throw the belts over the great wheels of work. Who will be the next to respond to this call? Don't forget to give the number of district to which you belong, if you wish due credit to be given you, and send through your district treasurer, if possible.

MRS. G. H. READ,
Treasurer Ill. W. C. T. U.

EVANSTON.—The Citizens' League of Evanston are following up with great vigor the vile dens at Calvary, whose owners persist in selling liquor in violation of the law. January 12th Mrs. Mares, wife of Adam Mares, who has been convicted several times, and against whom judgments of some thousands of dollars are now pending, was arraigned before Justice Curry at Evanston on nine different charges of selling liquor without a license. She was found guilty and fined $100 on each charge, or $900 in all, and Mr. Paxton, who prosecuted, declared that the prosecutions would be kept up until the violations ceased.

ALTON.—The W. C. T. U. held a service in their rooms Tuesday afternoon Jan. 8, in memory of Mrs. Chas. Phinney, an active worker, and at one time president of the society. The attendance was large, and the exercises were deeply affecting. Papers were read by the following ladies: by Mrs. P. B. Whipple, on Mrs. Phinney as a "Friend and Neighbor;" by Mrs. Sparks, on her "Work in the Temperance Cause;" by Mrs. C. H. Taylor, on her "Christian Life and Character," preceded by some touching reminisences of her sympathetic ministrations and many errands of mercy. Others followed with loving words, and Miss Isabel Norton read a poetical tribute. The resolutions are as follows:

WHEREAS, God in His mysterious providence has deeply afflicted us in the removal of one of our most interested and efficient workers in the cause of temperance, and one who by wise counsel and material aid had strengthened our hearts and hands, we, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, hereby resolve:

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Phinney, we have met with a loss that is irreparable.

Resolved, That we shall long miss her face from our circle and her zeal and faith in our work.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved household. that are so deeply and suddenly smitten, our most heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers that they may be sustained by the same trust and hope that characterized the departed wife and mother, while pass ing through the deep waters of affliction.

Resolved, That in outward token of our bereavement we drape the rooms of the W. C. T. U. and mingle black with the white badge of our union for thirty days.

Resolved, That we publish these resolutions in the Alton daily papers and also in THE UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. E. G. CHADDOCK,

ROCKFORD.—At a preparatory meeting previous to the 23d, Mrs. Henry gave somemost interesting remin iscences of her experiences ten years ago; of the agony of struggle as to her duty, and the final determination to call the women of Rockford together, from which conference resulted the W. C. T. U. about three months after the crusade movement. Others gave precious talks of God's leadings during these ten years in Ohio. Among the mementoes preserved with care at the headquarters, is a glass pint bottle. From this, four men took their last drink before they signed the pledge. These men formed the "Reform Club" of Rockford.

On Saturday afternoon—our Band of Hope day—Mrs. Eva Griffith entertained delightfully with one of her Chalk Talks, as also again on Sunday afternoon.

The 23d, was quite generally observed by the churches, with a temperance sermon either in the morning or evening, or an appropriate Sunday school exercise, and a collection taken for our mother society, the N. W. C. T. U.

Tuesday, January 8, we observed as a day of prayer for temperance, meeting at headquarters, from nine o'clock until eleven. Many prayers were offered, and helpful words spoken.

Testimonials from men, once in the depths of sin and misery from strong drink, now made whole through Christ our Lord, were given, and requests for prayers made.

One point was made, bearing strongly upon the matter of Sunday closing. A sister said she had a burden upon her heart for our Christian men, who by the manner in which they conducted their daily business. and by their votes upon election day, were putting stumbling blocks in the way, preventing sinners from coming to Christ. Some of these men were members of our churches; active in Sabbath school, always at the weekly prayer meeting, ready with a word or prayer, and yet allowed their places of business to be open on Sunday, and goods delivered, when desired, to the homes of their customers. And others, by casting their votes for licensing these saloons in our midst.

It is a fearful fact that Christian men do these things. May their eyes be opened to see where they stand in God's sight! Again, the matter of Sunday letter writeing or mailing letters on Sunday, was mentioned. Post office clerks say they are prevented from attending Divine service because so many letters are mailed, and so many Chrisrians go to the post office for their mail Sunday noon. Isn't here a matter for Christians to ponder?

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Miss M. A. West, who is now in Washington, has written to headquarters that she is preparing to return home the 1st of Feb., "able and willing to do all that God and the women of Illinois give her to do."

—Unions in the ninth district will please remember that Miss Lizzie Bullard, of Forrest, is now treasurer of that district, and dues should be sent to Miss Bullard and not to Miss Alice Briggs of Metamora.

—The literature committee of the state who will have charge of publishing and distributing campaign documents consists of Helen Hood, Mrs. M. B. Willard, Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Mrs. F. C. Hathaway, Mrs. E. W. Kirkpatrick and Miss Gilbert. A meeting of this committee is called for Monday, Jan. 28, 2 p. m., at headquarters Chicago.

—The spring elections are drawing nearer, and in many homes "license or no license" will be the issue. Let unions bestir themselves and do their utmost to carry the day for prohibition. Applications for speakers should be sent to headquarters, 161 La Salle street, as soon as possible. Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss M. A. West, Mr. Geo. Woodford, Capt. J. F. Linscott, Mr. Alexander Cooper and others are already in the field. Mr. G. W. Bain is expected in the state early in April. Miss Hood is now in correspondence with Francis Murphy, and also Mr. Edward Carswell of Canada, with reference to coming to us.

—Leaflet 1, "Organization," by Mary Allen West; Leaflet 2, "Gospel Temperance," "Band of Hope," and "Temperance Literature," by Miss Hood and Miss West; Leaflet 3, "Young Ladies' Work," by Mrs. F. S. Best, state superintendent; Leaflet 5, "Nothing but Sweet Cider;" Leaflet 6, "Scientific Temperance," by Miss West, are ready and will be sent to Illinois workers for the price of postage, 15c. per 100. Leaflet 7, "The Story of a Great Conviction," or "Why the W. C. T. U. of Illinois Seeks the Ballot," by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, ready Feb. 1. All district and county presidents who are arranging for conventions will please note this fact, that supplies may be sent in time for their conventions.

—Reports for 1883 are ready and are being sent out as rapidly as possible. Extra copies will be sent on request of 2c per copy to pay postage. This report will be valuable to our workers as it contains in addition to the usual matter—the annual address of our president—which was so highly appreciated when delivered that 10,000 copies were ordered for use as a campaign document. Mrs. M. B. Willard, chairman of legislative committee, says of this address:

A magnificent campaign document is the annual address of Miss Mary Allen West, now on hand at Illinois headquarters, price two dollars per hundred. It is just the thing to put into the hands of thinking men and women.

IOWA.

The State W. C. T. U. occupy a suite of rooms at the Aborn House as temporary headquarters. Mrs. Foster, superintendent of legislation; Mrs. Aldrich, president; Mrs. Maxfield, corresponding secretary, are established there and are carrying on a vigorous legislative campaign. Prohibition, scientific instruction in schools, reformatory prison for women, equal suffrage, and a change of code making prostitution a crime, punishable alike on either sex, are objects for which the Iowa W. C. T. U are asking special legislation. Mrs. Foster on invitation of Rev. Dr. Young, of the First M. E. church, occupied his pulpit on Sabbath evening, Jan. 13. An immense audience listened to an earnest presentation of gospel temperance. On Wednesday evening the State W. C. T. U. held a reception at the Grand Opera House, which for the first time was filled with an audience of about two thousand. The evening following the reception was the Governor's reception. An exquisite basket of flowers, in the center of which were the talismanic letters, W. C. T. U., in blue immortelles on a bed of white carnations, was presented to the Governor, by the officers of the state union.

On Sabbath morning Mrs. Aldrich, president of the state union, occupies by invitation the pulpit of Friends' church in East Des Moines, and in the evening she addresses a union meeting held in Lewis' opera house. Mrs. Foster by special request speaks in Dr. Frisbie's Congregational church. The union has also accepted an invitation to hold an afternoon meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

One of the best features of the work is the holding of a daily prayer meeting in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Thus are our women combining faith and works in the great battle "for God and home and native land."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Through the efforts of the state superintendent of juvenile temperance work, thirty-three boys and girls at the Hillsboro county farm have signed the triple pledge. All have an illustrated pledge card, with their names thereon, to keep, while a "Roll of Honor" nicely framed hangs upon the walls of their school room, with a full record of names.

The inmates of this institution were deeply interested on a recent Sabbath (January 13) in a temperance Chalk Talk, by Mrs. D. M. Heald, of Milford, N. H., and the kind superintendent, with his motherly, Christian, ladylike wife, expressed themselves in substantial thanks. Their family consists of two hundred and ninety-four inmates, seventeen paid officers, themselves and three children.

A. P. S.

The W. C. T. U. of New Hampshire have engaged the services of Mrs. E. McLaughlin for a temperance campaign. The following are her appointments: Lisbon, January 24; Plymouth, January 25; Manchester January 27: Newport, January 28: Meredith, January 29; Tilton, January 30; Suncook, January 31.

MRS. N. H. KNOX.

NEWS IN A NUT-SHELL.

TEMPERANCE prayer meetings were held by a good number of the W. C. T. Unions of Canada, January 8.

THE temperance women of Cheyenne, Wyoming, are making arrangements to secure Gov. St. John for a lecture about the eleventh of February. May they have grand success!

REV. F. E. BRUSH preached a strong, practical temperance sermon for the W. C. T. U. of Davenport, Iowa, the Sunday following Memorial Day, and some new converts were added to the work.

THE Elmwood, Ill., W. C. T. U. celebrated the decennial with appropriate exercises, the chief feature of the occasion being the very eloquent address of Rev. R. R. Pierce, of the M. E. church.

MRS. M. M. CLARDY organized a W. C. T. U. at Ritchey, Mo., January 1. A Band of Hope has also been formed with forty members; and besides these the town is blessed with a Christian Temperance Alliance and a Murphy Club.

A NEW temperance paper is announced, the Alabama Prohibitionist, a semi-monthly of four pages, subscription one dollar a year. We welcome the new volunteer to the ranks, and have good hope of a grand work to be accomplished by this voice of the people.

ON Christmas the W. C. T. U. of Kearney, Nebraska, honored their president, Mrs. Fone, and their librarian, Mrs. Brooks, by giving each a costly present: To Mrs. Fone a beautiful easel with picture,—to Mrs. Brooks an elegant set of majolica ware.

WHAT a Maine pastor says of THE UNION SIGNAL: "It is the very best paper I know of. All temperance papers are excellent, at least as to sentiment, but this is super-excellent. It is built on the highest plane; nothing cheap or common about it, and every family ought to have it."

TEXT books on alcohol and hygiene are used in the public schools in East Hiram, Maine, and the best method of teaching temperance was profitably discussed at the teachers' institute held there December 14 and 15. Rev. H. Chase, pastor of the M. E. church, gave a very able temperance sermon December 30.

THE officers of the Effingham, Ill., W. C. T. U. are as follows: President, Mrs. Annie Gillmore; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Alice Sligar; treasurer, Mrs. Emma Crooker. Of the Y. W. C. T. U. as follows: President, Miss Mary Moore; corresponding secretary, Miss Sadie Lecrone; treasurer, Miss Mollie Funkhauser.

A MATRON has been appointed for the Four Courts, upon the suggestion of the W. C. T. U. of St. Louis, Mo. The plan has been adopted in other cities, and has been very successful, and surely it accords with the proprieties of civilized life. The selection of the person is left to the W. C. T. U., and the vice president of the board, upon whose recommendation this action was taken, is appointed a committee to carry out the arrangement.

THANK OFFERING MEETING.

There will be a meeting at NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS, 16 E. 14th street, New York, beginning at ten a. m. and continuing till four p. m. The first hour, from ten to eleven, will be a social hour; that from eleven to twelve will be devoted to the opening of the thank offering envelopes. The next will be devoted to a prayer and praise service, after which the program will be varied by short addresses from invited guests. All members of the W. C. T. U. and all friends of the cause in or passing through the city on that day are cordially invited to be present and take part in the exercises. Some of our friends have requested that the meeting be deferred to as late a date as possible, and to gratify this desire the time is fixed for February 2. We hope for a full attendance and a pleasant and profitable meeting. The amounts in the several envelopes with the names of the unions from which they came will be announced in a later issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

IMPORTANT NOTICE FROM THE NATIONAL TREASURER.

There has been a general and gratifying response to the call for "thank offerings" on Dec. 23. But some have asked an extension of time to gather up all the fragments. February 5 has been designated as the time to open the precious envelopes. Will not each local treasurer who still holds any sum, the result of that day's appeal, please send at once to the treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, 16 E. 14th street, New York city, in order to reach her by Feb. 3. It is very desirable to have the money pass through the hands of state treasurers, but it is now probably too late for all to do this, in order to be in at the "opening," but all sums will be credited to the State sending it. A report of the anniversary collections will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL.

ESTHER PUGH,
Treas. N. W. C. T. U.

It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

A MODERATE DRINKER.

It can't hurt anybody. Why, I know a person—yonder he is now—a specimen of manly beauty, a portly six-footer. He has the bearing of a prince, for he is one of our merchant princes. His face wears the hue of health, and now, at the age of fifty odd, he has the quick, elastic step of a young man of twenty-five, and none more full of mirth and wit than he; and I know he never dines without brandy and water, and he never goes to bed without a terrapin or oyster supper, with plenty of champagne; and more than that, he was never known to be drunk. So here is a living example and disproof of the temperance twaddle about the dangerous nature of an occasional glass and the destructive effect of the temperate use of good liquors. Now, it so happened that this specimen of safe brandy drinking was a relative of ours. He died a year or two after that of chronic diarrhœa. For four months before he died—he was a year in dying—he could drink nothing without distress, and at death the whole alimentary canal was a mass of disease. He left a legacy to his children which he did not mention. Scrofula has been eating up one daughter for fifteen years; another is in the mad house; another is tottering on the verge of the grave, and only one is left with all the senses, and each of them is as weak as water.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE retail liquor trade in Belgium is absolutely free; anybody can open a public house who chooses. The result is that the annual consumption of distilled liquors and beer has increased so as to alarm good citizens. The annual consumption of distilled liquors is 12½ quarts for each of the five and a half million inhabitants, or 268 quarts of beer—a consumption almost twice as great as that of Germany. There is one public house for every forty-four inhabitants; and crimes and suicides have trebled in forty years. The Europeans should study carefully the experiment of prohibition going on in this country. Prohibition is gaining in public favor from the results reached in Kansas, Georgia and other states.

GOOD Templary was recently introduced in Switzerland under the auspices of the English Grand Lodge. A report to that body says: "We have made it a rule to accompany and conduct to their homes all the drunkards who lie helpless in the streets. Then we never leave them without giving them some tracts and subsequently we visit them. We have acquired some good members in that way. As the townsfolk often see drunkards between blue ribbon men, they begin to call us 'ambulancier' (field hospital men.) We are proud of the title."

Miscellaneous Selections.

RED used on a railroad signifies danger, and means "stop!" So it does on a man's nose.

MORE than thirty of the mining companies of Colorado make total abstinence a condition of employment.

THE New York asylum for the insane shows that out of 254 patients admitted, over 77 per cent were drinkers.

ABOUT three hundred employes at the New York post office are members of the temperance societies of that city.

THE prohibition vote of New Jersey at the last election was about 5,000; of Pennsylvania between 6,000 and 7,000.

THE buildings formerly used in Kansas for breweries are being turned into factories, pork packing establishments, and the like.

THE New York correspondent of the Boston Herald says that not more than one-third of the ministers of New York city are total abstainers.

A NEW YORK chemist says he wants nothing more than three pails of water and twenty cents' worth of drugs to make six gallons of just such champagne as fools pay a dollar a pint for.

IN Auburn, N. Y., there was the singular spectacle of a church fair voting as to the comparative popularity of various brewers in the state; the one receiving the largest number of votes was to receive a silver water (!) set.

THE temperance reform is making rapid headway in Germany. It is enlisting the earnest co-operation of many of the most influential men—physicians, ministers, lawyers, judges, state attorneys and men from all stations in life.

No one has the influence over the opposite sex that our young ladies have. If every one would use it for temperance, we should have no fear but that in less than five years intemperance would be a thing of the past.

BUT a few years ago there was no temperance organization in China. Now a temperance hotel is advertised in Hong Kong, and at Shanghai there is a lodge of Good Templars, and a good, able temperance paper published weekly, called the Temperance Union.

HON. THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN said: "If men will engage in this disastrous traffic, if they will stoop to degrade their reason and reap the wages of iniquity, let them no longer have the law book as a pillow, nor quietr conscience with the opiate of a court license."

MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec'y.

REV. PHILLIPS BROOKS says that if today we could sweep intemperance out of the country we would wipe out almost all of the poverty in the land. There would hardly be enough left to give healthy exercise to the charitable impulses.

THE Liquor Dealer's Association of New York city is trying to fend the passage of a high license law introduced in the legislature by promising that if no change is made in the license fee not a single saloon keeper will keep open on Sunday. The query naturally arises whether a legislature can compound with the violators of law in this fashion.

TOTAL abstinence is becoming the rule among the nonconforming ministers of England, and in the colleges the students for the ministry who are abstainers are in the majority. For example, in the Baptist colleges there are 235 students, of whom 223 are abstainers, and in the Congregational colleges of 363 students 306 are abstainers. A very active temperance propaganda is also being carried out by the Wesleyan body, with whose ecclesiastical system the temperance movement is how firmly interwoven.

A CELEBRATED physician, Dr. Martin, of the Salpetrierie, Paris, has made a series of observations stretching over a period of years, on nervous affections among the children of alcholic drinkers. In eighty-three families in which one or more members showed nervous excitability, traceable to alcoholic origin, there were four hundred and ten children. Of these one hundred and eight, more than a quarter, had convulsions, and in the year 1874, one hundred and sixty-nine were dead, two hundred and forty-one were still alive, but eighty–four, more than one-third of the survivors, were epileptic.

ANOTHER instance of liquorocracy is the situation at Lewistown Ill. Less than a year ago, the fact was chronicled in our columns, that for the first time in years this city had elected a license government, thus breaking in upon one of our proud prohibition counties. Six months later we were glad to record that the earnest efforts of a few strong and stirring temperance men had accomplished the revocation of all licenses and the license experiment was declared a failure. A few evenings since, however, without a word of warning, the city council clandestinely and without a word of excuse or explanation, ordered the dramshops to be re-opened. It is generally believed that the Peoria whisky ring was consulted as to the policy of re-opening dramshops in Lewistown, an honor not paid to any law abiding business man or other citizen. Thus does this Jupiter nod and at once the politicians bow.

JAMES H. HARRIS, the secretary of the National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association of the United States, which held its ninth annual session in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a few days since, in concluding his official report for 1883, says:

> Only one thing now stands in our way, preventing the perfection of our purpose, and that is the curse of alcohol. I trust that this association will take stringent measures to prevent the golden chain of our order being broken by the deadly influence of drunkenness. There is nothing in the use of strong drink that is not debasing. Even occasional intoxication should be sufficient cause for obliterating the name of the offending brother from the roll of membership. Enforce the law of temperance and our order will swell to wonderful proportions, our suspended number will be reduced, and the mutual aid will find no brother unable to pay its demands.
> Do this, and your members will no longer look for employment, but employment will seek them. Do this, I say, and the intemperate engineers will no longer be found in charge of the engines and boilers of our steamships and steamboats, and the traveling public will applaud your efforts to improve the moral and intellectual status of your members.

CHRISTIANS, work for the Band of Hope. It will prove your grand reinforcement when the battle presses hard at the gates. It will strengthen your churches and Sunday schools, and prove a very highway of salvation to hundreds whom the churches and Sunday schools do not reach. A careful investigation of its beneficence in Great Britain, where its work has been most thoroughly tested, shows that in ten schools having no Bands of Hope which give the greatest number of scholars to the churches during the last four years, an average of 31¾ in the 1,000 per annum are reported as joining the churches. In ten schools having Bands of Hope from which the greatest number join the churches in the same period, an average of 49¼ in the 1,000 of scholars per annum are reported. In the ten schools not having Bands of Hope which have the greatest number of scholars, an average of 12¼ in the 1,000 per annum during the past six years have joined the churches. In the ten schools with Bands of Hope having the greatest number of scholars in the same period 22½ in the 1,000 have joined the churches. In every single year, in both sections, the schools having Bands of Hope show by far the greatest results.

Several startling deductions may be made from these facts; not the least calculated to arrest thought is the small percentage of Sunday school scholars who become church members. This, taken in consideration with the increase of percentage wherever a Band of Hope is connected with the Sunday school, leads us to believe that the recruiting of King Alcohol's army has much to do with the slow gains of the church from the source which should legitimately feed it.

THE Iowa women are not only diligent in business and fervent in spirit, but full of innocent artfulness, learned long ago in the sweet ministries of the home. Last week they carried to their new capitol floral tributes of exquisite beauty and touching significance. To the president of the senate Lieutenant Governor Manning, the author of the memorable "school house" legend, a school house, and to Speaker Wolf, a floral gavel. The school house was almost a solid mass of the most lovely flowers, the only parts not covered being the door and the windows. It was fifteen inches in length, ten inches in width, and fifteen inches to the top of the belfrey. The flowers used in making the house were tea roses, tuberoses, daisies, coronations, pansies, sweet allyssums, with smilax. The belfry was a delicate combination of the richest of the flowers, the four uprights being capped with tuberoses. The bell was an exquisite calla lily. On the door were the words: "District No. 1," we suppose intended to represent the first school house in the new era of "no saloons in the valley." Accompanying the school house was the following card:

> HON. O. H. MANNING, Lieutenant Governor of Iowa: "And all 'Iowa's' children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of 'Iowa's' children." Signed, W. C. T. U.

The gavel presented to Speaker Wolf was of course more simple in its design but just as elegant in the flowers used and in the make up. It was fourteen inches in length, and the same kind of flowers used in it as in the school house. The representation was very complete. Accompanying this was the following card:

> HON. W. P. WOLF, Speaker of the house of representatives, twentieth general assembly of Iowa: "Judgment also will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place."

FOR OTHERS' SAKE.

BY MARIA W. JONES.

"Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow
The Christ—else wherefore born?"
—Idyls of the King.

Around King Arthur's table came
Brown stalwart men, who soon or late
Won for themselves a famous name
And climbed up to a knight's estate.
And each one sought some maiden's smile,
Her "favor" on his helmet wore
On deeds of errantry,—the while
She praised and loved him more and more.

And poets' idyls new and old
Cease not to tell the wondrous tale,—
How these good knights so true and bold
Rode forth to make some tyrant quail
In his stronghold,—for ladies fair
Risked life and limb, and thought no deed
Too hard for them to do or dare
Could they but win the hero's meed.

O grand the story of brave deed,
And sweet the guerdon bravely won.
So brave! so sweet! that as we read
Electric currents swiftly run,
From noble lives of ages past,
And thrill our hearts, until we fain
Would live as they, as they at last,
Such love, such praise, such honor gain.

Nor are there wanting men of might,
Nor wrongs to tilt a free lance for;
Nor now need maidens, out of sight,
Wait weeping till the battle's o'er.
Some cycles nearer has earth rolled
To the eternities, whose light
On us more broadly falls. Behold!
God's truths shine out in clearer sight.

And gentle woman now has found
To do is finer than to be,
That our King at whose "Table Round"
There sitteth "neither bond nor free,
Nor male nor female"——He doth make
Us "one in Him"——gives unto all
Something to do for others' sake
Some blows to strike for error's fall.

For others' sake, O men of might!
For others' sake, O women fair!
Spurn from your taste, your touch, your sight
Circean draughts, where lurks a snare
That robs the nation of its men,
Wives of their husbands and their sons,
Yea; God of His earth-born—and them,
Of heaven and its shining ones.

For others' sake! O strong! O sweet!
O common tie! that binds our way
To God's great throne, when we repeat
In such small measure as we may
The earth-life of His own dear Son,
Who lived and died for others' sake,
For others' sake God's heaven won
By cross and curse none else could take.

A CONSECRATED VELVET DRESS.

HOW THE Y. W. C. T. U. WENT INTO SOCIETY.

BY C. A. L.

CHAPTER I.

The shades of an October evening were falling as Mrs. Arthur entered her cosy home made bright by firelight. She was talking to her cousin, Mary Allen, upon a subject of importance since fig leaves were first worn for a covering. The discussion concerned a new dress, whether it should be silk or velvet. Mrs. Arthur was a conscientious woman, and in the smallest purchase was guided by her sense of right, so the matter of the dress had to be looked at on all sides. Her husband wished her to dress handsomely, and always talked with his wife of their finances, so she knew what was prudent. Love of dress had never been her weakness, indeed she could see where she had failed in this direction, not in neatness, but in dropping social duties, because not prepared to meet them.

Does not inclination sometimes clothe itself in the excuse of a sacrifice that we may quiet disagreable suggestions?

When we are told to "be in the world, but not of it," I think part of the meaning is, not loving it. So when quiet life suits us best, we do not understand part of our duty is to purify what is right and proper in itself, only wrong because abuses have come in. American women have this phase of life socially to accept, and their duty is plain in the positions in which God has placed each one.

The question of how far it was right to expend money for dress had been a vexed one for years to Mrs. Arthur while the proper amount of sacrifice to be used in giving had caused many a wakeful hour.

As a girl she had gone into "society" though never liking parties, or indulging in round dances, and when in a year after marriage a little daughter came to gladden the home, then delicate health, she gradually withdrew from any but quiet family gatherings. In these years the struggle came concerning dress with all the pros and cons. But light dawned at last, partly in study of temperance matters. When the National W. C. T. U. met in Louisville in '83 comments upon the fact that the women dressed well proved one of Mrs. Whitall Smith's "eye-openers." It proved so many things to Mrs. Arthur that she felt that consecrated dressing might assume preprotions of great importance in the work. Upon the evening of Mrs. Barnes' report, when Mrs. Barney and Miss Wadsworth spoke with so much power, the call to take up the work came to this Christian woman and there she determined to give up the best of heart and head to the temperance cause. It was her nature to work earnestly, so it was no wonder to friends who knew her that it became the daily thought and prayer of her life. Her lot was cast with the young women and then came the question whether "society" should not be taken up again for the sake of the cause. The work must be aggressive and storm the enemy, opening the way where many will follow but not lead.

And so we reach the discussion concerning the velvet dress. It was decided to be more judicious than a silk, because less varying in style and always elegant, while the lighter goods grows shabby, but in the purchase it was dedicated to temperance.

Dear friends, in all honor to the noble women who will wear plain gloves, and go without in warm weather, that our treasury may be replenished, we ask do we not have the opposite side of the question to consider also, for the advancement of the cause? If in no other way we can contribute to the fund I believe it right to make this sacrifice, but I do think such things may become so excessive as to be unhealthy sentiment. We must try to strike the happy medium, and that desire has prompted this article. It is true, that if we are outre in dress we cannot be as attractive to our friends as when conforming to proper customs nor can we avoid repelling many we might win. Right here the question settled itself for me, and my friend Mrs. Arthur agrees with this conclusion.

With her consecrated velvet dress she tried to win the young cousin, Mary Allen, by showing the way to good work need not make her peculiar in this line.

CHAPTER II.

The Y. W. C. T. U. wanted to go into society to establish its position as a social factor, so a New Year reception was chosen as the proper way to make the debut. It was to be held at a private house, with the names of the ladies announced as in any other case, and everything done to make it charming in a simple way. The girls entered into it with zest, and kindly made the labor light for the president. No one bought a dress for the occasion, but all managed to look wonderfully well and to be so charming to each other and their guests that some gentlemen reported it the most delightful reception of the day, which was wretched enough outside to make the warmth and light within very inviting. Plants were about the rooms, Y. W. C. T. U. in smilax on the mantel lambrequin met the eye from the door, while just above stood a dish of pure, white flowers. Hand painted temperance pledges were scattered about for souvenirs, to any who wished them, while two copies of "Woman and Temperance," laid on tables to be taken up in leisure moments. No temperance talk was indulged in, unless the guest opened the way. The refreshments were simple, but all of the best, and well served—salad, bread, pickles and coffee, two kinds of ices, cake and fruit.

The number of guests was not so large as it will be another year, because many gentlemen expected to be attacked if they touched wine. But one hundred and fifty had the courage to come, many men of distinction in the professions, while the real society men came together (for self protection), and then did not want to leave, some staying an hour. The dear girls all wore white ribbons, and one gentleman begged for one as a distinction of honor.

Of this band of girls, Mrs. Arthur is leader, and as she received the guests in the consecrated velvet dress, her society friends could find no lack of care for any womanly ways of old, though her soul was in her work, and she had spoken in a public meeting. It was altogether a victory for the Y. W. C. T. U., and their footing is secure now.

To the president's heart have come many loving thoughts of the girls who so bravely took their stand, and when they left her, no word of envy or jealousy had been spoken to mar the day. This report would be incomplete without saying Mr. Bain graced the reception with his presence. So one Y. W. C. T. U. has entered society.

"RELATION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC TO THE DESECRATION OF THE SABBATH."

BY MRS. A. E. WESTON.

That they are related is an obvious fact. That the saloons are kept open on the Sabbath unless prevented by strict laws and vigorous action of the police, is everywhere known. Let any one call to mind facts of her own observation, and consider how many of the saloons within her own knowledge are faithfully closed on Saturday night and not opened till Monday morning. Let this business be compared, in this respect, with any other business whatsoever, and facts are abundant to show that the liquor traffic does go hand in hand with Sabbath desecration.

Let an attempt be made to keep liquor shops closed on the Sabbath, let laws be passed looking to this end, like the "Smith Sunday Bill" of Ohio, the recent legislation in our own state affecting the Sunday traffic in New York and Brooklyn, or any other measures intended to enforce the quiet and morality of the Sabbath by compelling liquor shops to submit to the same regulations that govern other kinds of business, and how soon a howl arises from all the liquor sellers and all their hangers-on, in all parts of the country! What devices are resorted to to evade it! How policemen are feed to keep their eyes shut! How many back doors are opened on unfrequented alleys! And in spite of all endeavors how much of illicit traffic is still carried on upon this sacred day! All these facts exist, and many others might be pointed out, showing that there is a close relation between the traffic in liquors and the desecration of the Sabbath day.

The reason for all this persistence of the liquor sellers is that other fact, that their Sunday business is more profitable than that of any other day in the week. Thus the beer gardens—a German institution which is rapidly becoming acclimated in this country—and similar places of public resort are most largely frequented on the Sabbath.

That German element in our population which is always carefully weighed by political parties when the political aspect of the temperance question is under consideration, seems to put free liquors and free Sundays in the same category, and restraint upon the one or the other meets from them the same opposition.

Other facts might be named of the same tendency, but these are sufficient to show that the liquor traffic and the non-observance of the Sabbath are uniformly found together. Now when we are studying the abstruse principles and methods of inductive logic, we are taught that when two facts or phenomena are found uniformly co-existing, they may safely be said to be connected through some relation of cause and effect. Are we not safe, then, in maintaining that the relation of the liquor traffic to Sabbath desecration is that of cause and effect?

It is doubtless true that, in this case, as in all other moral questions, the influence is, to some extent, mutual. To some degree, both are cause and both effect. The liquor traffic leads to the desecration of the Sabbath, and the desecration of the Sabbath encourages and fosters the traffic in intoxicating liquors, but our conviction is—a conviction which we think the facts will obviously sustain—that the liquor traffic is the first and leading offender. And a most important measure in establishing the quiet and proper observance of the Sabbath must be the suppression of the liquor traffic on that day, and incidentally, it may be said, that in order to suppress it effectually on that day, it is necessary to suppress it on all other days. In other words, the final goal to which all paths lead is prohibition.

But how does it come about that this close relation exists between these two evils? It is a general principle that demoralizations go hand in hand. The letting in of one evil leaves an open door for the entrance of another. So demoralizations are both special and general—the special leading to and strengthening the general. The liquor trrffic is an evil of a special kind, but no other special evil is so general in its influence and consequences. There is not an evil in the entire catalogue of evils to which it does not minister. Its baneful effects are both direct and indirect, and among other evils it ministers most effectually to Sabbath desecration.

There are different circumstances which lead to this result. The practice of paying off workmen on Saturday night puts them in funds, and the liquor seller stands ready to pounce upon the laboring man and get from him as much of his hard earned money as he can to fill his own coffers before the work is resumed on Monday morning. In this he is utterly without conscience. For the family at home, for the comfort of the wife and children, or even for the supply of the absolute necessaries of life he has no regard. If the husband can be enticed away from his home, the fact that the wife is left there with a heart aching because the home and her companionship are deserted for the company of the low frequenters of the saloon and bar room, that the children are compelled to stay at home in hunger, or walk the street in rags, bears with no weight upon his mind, so long as the money that ought to supply their wants and give comfort to their home goes to increase the profits of his business, and the funds that remain in his till.

Thus he puts his victim in the sure way to violate not only the sanctities of the day of rest, but all the sacred obligations resting upon him to home and family. The ruin wrought to the soul of the victim is not once thought of. All considerations of that kind have to be thrust aside before he enters upon the traffic at all.

Another reason why the liquor traffic leads to the desecration of the Sabbath is the fact that drinking is eminently a social evil. Men rarely drink or at least get drunk by themselves. It is the treating and being treated, the hilarious companionship of the gilded saloon or the maudlin company of the low doggery that attracts the victims to these places, and holds them when they are there. As Sunday is a day of leisure and finds the workingman as mentioned before, with some funds in his pocket the liquor dealers fit up their saloons with special attractions to lure the social and company loving people to their dens, that they may victimize them, one and all, to the fullest extent possible. Thus it is that the liquor dealers cause the desecration of the Sabbath on their own premises.

If this were all, the evil would be limited to the saloon, and the annoyance to those who live in its immediate neighbourhood. But the going to and fro, the joining of a ride for pleasure, or a walk for companionship with a liquor shop either at the end of the journey or on the way, or both, and the return through thoroughfares past our residences and before the eyes of men and children, after these rioters have been drinking and have become excited, noisy or besotted, cause a disturbance of public peace, a corruption of public morals and sow the seeds of general desecration.

Thus these frequenters of saloons and violators of the Sabbath become causes of public demoralization to those who are influenced by their example, a public nuisance to those who wish to enjoy in quiet the sacred privileges of the day, and a sore grief to those who regard the immortal interests of man, and believe the Sabbath and its observance to be a means appointed by God for the promotion of those interests.

Jesus taught that the Sabbath was made for man, that is, for the highest interests of all mankind. The liquor seller takes it as made for himself and for his own mercenary and ruinous ends.

The Christian who believes with his Master that the Sabbath was made for sacred uses in the interests of the souls of his fellow men, is impelled by this conviction, in addition to every other consideration that moves him, to join his influence with all those who are working to the same ends to bring about as completely and speedily as possible the utter suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks.

And we women who believe in the religion of home and Sabbath, who are wont to be moved by anything that affects our fellow beings for good or ill must look at these facts and work and pray for their removal, trusting in Him without whom we can do nothing, but by whose blessing every well meant effort has in itself some reward.

VIOLATION OF LAW.

BY P. B. THOMAS.

Shall the country make laws and attach to their violation penalties sufficient to prevent frequent repetition? It never has been the practice of our government to inflict any but the mildest forms of punishment upon its criminals, save murderers. The Bridewells, jails and prisons all testify to the truth of this assertion. Were Draco's laws for punishing all crimes with death, enforced now, there would be little need of penitentiaries. But, it may be asked, if any government ever did succeed in putting an end to crime by any system of legislation either stringent or lenient. It is true that China has prevented largely some varieties of crimes by the very severe treatment of its criminals, yet the professional executioner there sometimes becomes so expert with continued practice, that he severs the head of the criminal from the body in such a sudden and skillful manner that the head remains upon the stump, and the swordsman gives the victim a pinch of snuff to make him sneeze it off. This one fact shows that penalties even in China, are often inflicted and consequently crimes often committed. In more enlightened nations, plans have been devised to prevent crime, but nowhere have they been blest with universal success. It may be asked if this is the enevitable law of things? To which it is safe to assert that human sympathy is so great that it would seem impossible to have it otherwise, until people are brought down to the belief that justice in law affords the community more comfort than benevolence. While such men as Schinderhannes are admired by their countrymen, while novelists embalm the memory of Jack Sheppard and Richard Turpin, and such as Jesse James receive from their countrymen an atom of respect, it is useless to expect the entire putting away of criminals and crime.

Every intelligent inhabitant of the republic knows that no legislature ever instituted a criminal code with the expectation that it would be universally enforced,—or if enforced, would practically annihilate the crimes against which its laws are directed. The fact that all crimes are now being committed that ever were committed, does not weigh in the least against the making and executing of laws. Everybody knows that laws against murder, robbery, larceny and other crimes must be made, and as far as practicable, enforced.

In view of these facts, can any one tell why objections have been brought against a prohibitory liquor law on the ground that it could not be enforced? For many years a few people have agreed that it is of no use to enact prohibition because prohibition is not practicable. Dr. Dio Lewis has taken this ground, and coming from so worthy a source, it is necessary that the objection should be met in a reasonable manner.

Men have only to look at this item of legislation in the same light as any other. Prohibition should be the law for the good it may do, not that it is expected that, at present, it cannot in a single instance be violated. The country has laws against murder, but scarcely a week passes but the newspapers chronicle the assassination of some fair girl or hoary-headed man.

But, does any one because of this, say: "Do away with the law?" "Hang such as fast as they appear," is the people's sentence.

But why not do away with the law? it is ineffectual. "Ah, yes; but it won't do." Won't do? Why not? If it will do to repeal prohibitory liquor laws, on this ground, it will do to repeal every law against murder and theft and other crimes.

This brings matters to the firm basis of equality. Laws are not made with any expectation that they will be totally destructive of specific crimes, hence the sophistry of anti-prohibitionists is apparent; apparent because they bring an argument against prohibitory laws that they would ignore in relation to other laws. Prohibition may do much good if only partially enforced, license tends only to harm, enforced or non-enforced. Objections that are brought against prohibition are brought by those who fear that prohibition will be brought against them.

Finally it must suffice to answer the first question of this article by saying that, considering the present condition of things, very few reformers labor with the expectation that drunkenness like other crimes can be totally banished. Law should keep pace with the public sentiment, when it goes beyond that it becomes a dead letter, yet hope points to a day not far distant when drunkenness and intemperance shall be swept entirely from this fair country as a fog is swept away by a mighty wind.

TEMPERANCE IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

BY. MRS. C. M. H. WRIGHT.

There was a time when only men felt it incumbent on them to stand up and declare against intemperance, and it was by some considered a little breach of decorum when women claimed a right to stand up beside man to work for the protection of her home and the good of all mankind. But she looked at her darling babes innocent and happy in their childish freedom from sin, and she saw, too, as a mother's quick eye will, the danger hanging over them, the net spread for their unwary feet, and it overcame her exact notions of propriety so far that she was made willing to get up and bestir herself for the sake of the babes that God had lent her, and made her responsible for their care and well-being. Thus we see the men have worked, the women have worked, and the young people have been given work to do, but the children—have we not well nigh forgotten the strength which lies in the great army of Sabbath school children that are called together each Sabbath from various parts all over the land to be taught lessons of faith, hope and charity? The safety and welfare of the nation lies with the rising generation, and the pillars of our national government rests upon the shoulders of the children about us, more than upon those who have reached the noontide and evening of their days.

Then how careful should we be to see that our instructions are correct and the most important ideas conveyed understandingly to their minds. I have not (nor can I) quite forgive a temperance speaker of some prominence who could say that he did not give much thought to the preparing of a certain lecture as he supposed his audience would be composed mostly of children. Just as though a lecture for children did not require deeper thought and a more judicious wording than for old people. An unsound idea may be advanced before an adult audience with comparative safety, but take care what you say to the children. If temperance and prohibition are essential and important, and intemperance one of the greatest sins to be overcome, let us teach the children accordingly. fill their mouths with Sabbath school temperance songs. Fill their hands with temperance literature. Fill their minds and hearts with temperance sentiment. Harness them up for the work right in the Sabbath school, where every good and laudable enterprise should originate.

Give them work to do and let them feel that we are depending upon them; that their help is needed and that they are doing something which cannot be done only by their personal effort. Then shall we begin to see their eyes kindle with enthusiasm, and enthusiasm is contagious. Once get the whole national Sabbath school army thoroughly enthused with a temperance spirit, the effect would be irresistible and no power on earth could stop the spread of it. The masses can be reached in no other way so effectually as through the children. The most eloquent temperance appeal may be lost on a drunkard who would listen to the pleading of his little child and be saved in that way. The rumseller can not close his ears to the prattle of his children. The moderate drinker and those claiming to be neutral are alike exposed to reproof if the children are enlisted. Then let us teach their little tender minds in the Sabbath school to call things by their right names, and that intemperance in all its bearings is a sin which God requires all good soldiers of the cross to fight against. Teach them as murder is sin, so is intemperance; as robbery is sin, so is intemperance. Teach them, not by little spasmodic jerks and paroxysms when it is convenient, a few moments set apart for the work and the subject avoided between whiles, but constantly and persistently to abhor it with all its attendant vices, and it is alike disgraceful, unsafe and dangerous, reeking with filth in the lowest slums of the streets, or clothed in purple and fine linen at the presidential mansion. For God will make no distinction. Don't be afraid of making temperance fanatics of your children. Better temperance fanatics than drunkards, and remember that a little child may find the way to papa's heart and save him when all else has failed. Teach the children temperance because it is a duty we owe to God and home, and native land. Teach it in the Sabbath school, because it is the aim of the Sabbath school to counteract all evil influences outside. Train the children for the work because out of the abundance of their little hearts their mouths will overflow, scattering the good seed where it is most needed. Let the children help to draw the heavy load that strong men and women are sweating under, and we shall in time see it move onward without apparent effort, for the children, if properly instructed and trained can be depended on, and will not, when weighed in the balance, be found wanting, like so many of our voters are on election day.

WHAT SHALL WE DRINK AT THE LORD'S TABLE?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL: There is perhaps no more solemn and important question for each member of the W. C. T. U. to decide for herself than this one: Is it right to sanction the use of fermented wine at the Lord's table?

Brought up as we all have been, to feel that we enter the Holy of Holies when we receive the "sacrament," is it to be wondered at that to many it seems like a sacrilege to suggest any change in the emblems of Christ's body and blood.

This question has been made the subject of a special department of the National W. C. T. U. for five years, ably conducted by Miss West. She has given to it her best thought, earnest prayer, and conscientious labor, so that I am sure, by following closely in the paths which she has marked out for our guidance in the past, we can intelligently direct others, and conscientiously decide the question for ourselves.

By a careful study of the New Testament, we find that the word "wine" is not used in connection with the Lord's Supper. Nine times it is simply called "the cup," and our Saviour's own descriptive term is "the fruit of the vine," Matt. 26:29; Mark 14.25; Luke 22:18. By "the fruit of the vine" is it conclusive that Christ meant wine, with the modern definition of the term. As an answer to this question, we learn that the Lord's Supper was instituted at the Passover Feast, from which every species of leaven and ferment was excluded on pain of death to the partaker. Read carefully, Exodus 12:15-20; Lev. 2:11; 10; 12; Amos 4:5; also Exodus 34:25; which says: "Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven," etc.

Whenever the Passover is celebrated by the Jews of today, it is celebrated with unleavened bread, and unfermented wine. This fact is sustained by the highest Jewish authority. Testimony on this point is contained in the Temperance Commentary.

Since it would have been so easy to procure the pure juice of the grape, ("the fruit of the vine") and since the Jewish laws forbade the use of anything fermented, since Christ distinctly stated that he came not to destroy but to fulfill, does it not seem unnatural to conclude that in defiance of Jewish authority and custom Christ should have used at his last supper the fermented wine?

The personal experience of many a temperance worker will testify, that reformed men who have come to the communion table for the much needed strength to battle with the old appetite for alcohol, have had the appetite revived beyond control by the taste of the wine offered them as an emblem of Christ's redeeming blood; offered in remembrance of Him who went about doing good; in remembrance of Him whose own model for our prayer was, "Lead us not into temptation." In remembrance of Him who said: "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

Is it not more of a sacrilege for Christians in the name and for the sake of Christ to tempt men and women to their deadly peril, than for each one to intelligently ask herself if fermented wine can be thus used, in the spirit of the Master since "fruit of the vine" may be had unbrandied and unfermented, does not Christian charity demand its use in our churches?

As temperance women we are striving to so educate our children, that they shall have an abhorrence of alcoholic beverages. If we make no protest against its use at the communion table, do we not give to it a sanctity, which will break down all of our former arguments against it, as an evil thing? Is it right for us thus to familiarize our children with the taste and smell of wine, and thus give to it a title to reverence and respect?

In view of these points which I have gathered from Miss West's former papers, you will I trust see the necessity of bringing this subject faithfully before every church in the several states, which you represent.

I will again refer to Miss West for valuable suggestions:

1. Thorough study of God's Word.
2. Personal refusal to partake of fermented wine at communion.
3. Petitioning local, state and national ecclesiastical bodies.
4. Preparing unfermented wine for communion.
5. Bible-readings upon Bible wines.
6. Circulation of leaflets, tracts and books.
7. The use of all womanly, Christian means to banish it from our churches.
8. Earnest, persistent prayer.

From No. 7. I would suggest as one womanly means of bringing about the desired result, a personal interview with every pastor in the cities, towns or villages where a local union exists. I would also urge that articles on this topic should be sent to all denominational papers. If these excite controversy, it will do no harm. If no member of the local union feels competent to do this, enlist the sympathy and co-operation of some clergyman to write up this subject. Have published in all papers, secular and religious, sometime during the early fall this receipt for preparing communion wine as used in one church for twenty-five years: "Express the juice of the grapes as you do for jelly; heat immediately to the boiling point, bottle and seal exactly as you do fruit. Adapt the size of bottles to the number of communicants, as the wine will ferment if left over from one communion to another." Suggest to the pastor of each church, the appointment of some lady in his society, who shall have special charge of the communion wine, preparing it herself if necessary.

Dear friends, if you will conscientiously follow the directions here given, we shall find that our churches will be purified, and that no holy sanction will be given by them for the use of fermented wine.

The following books are recommended for the use of all who are interested in this department; and besides you are especially enjoined to study the Feast of the Passover, and its connection with the Lord's Supper.

THE W. C. T. U. RECEPTION TO THE IOWA LEGISLATURE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The reception given by the W. C. T. U. of Iowa at Des Moines, Jan 16, was a gratifying success throughout. The one great desire of those who originated it and had it in charge was, that an impression be made for temperance on the public at large, and it is hoped and believed that this was accomplished. All the circumstances were favorable, four or five different conventions of prominent societies were being held in the capital during the week and so representative people were in attendance from every part of the state.

There was no small amount of labor in the proposed entertainment, and some of the most conscientious workers in the cause were startled when they heard of it and doubted the wisdom of the undertaking.

But with our Mrs. Foster, the incomparable, and our Mrs. Aldrich the indefatigable, to plan and devise ways and means, and with such noble untiring women as Mrs. Maxfield, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Callanan and Mrs. Berry to aid and execute, there could be but one result, especially when underneath and through and above and woven about all the plan was the sincere prayer that the all wise Father would guide and add His blessing.

The evening was pleasant and it was estimated that three thousand people were in attendance. The State Register, the largest daily in Iowa, devoted three columns to an account of the meeting and reports of the addresses. It said:

The largest audience that ever assembled in the Grand Opera House met last evening to attend the reception given by the Iowa Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Every seat was taken, from parquette to upper gallery and probably two hundred people occupied the stage. It was very fitting and graceful that the noble women of Iowa who had stood in the forefront of the fight that has been waged in behalf of the homes of this State, should meet together, on the eve of the consummation of their labors, to recount their victories, and to gather inspiration for future work. The immense audience last evening represented the brain, the heart and the homes of our fair state, and the exercises were worthy of the occasion.

All the papers of the city spoke in praise of the reception and many people who have never before cared to be identified with those prominent in the work, were unsparing in their congratulations and kind attentions to those who took part in the exercises. The following is a brief synopsis of the program of the evening as carried out. The state president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary J. Aldrich, presided over the meeting in a most pleasing, easy and graceful manner. She is possessed of an infinite fund of genuine wit and humor, and this tempered as it is with the sweet spiritual trust which directs every act of her life, always makes her a favorite with her audiences. She never allows any awkward pauses or embarrassing interludes of confusion, yet she is always gentle and womanly. The exercises opened by the singing of the hymn "Watchman, Tell us of the Night," by a chosen quartette of two ladies and two gentlemen. Dr. Magoun, president of Iowa College, then read the Crusade Psalm, and Dr. E. A. Young, of Des Moines, followed with prayer.

After this came a beautiful temperance anthem, and then Mrs. Aldrich welcomed the guests in a happy and most winning address. The following are her opening words:

As president of the Iowa W. C. T. U. it is my duty, as it is also my great pleasure, at this time to welcome our guests who have assembled here in response to our invitation. We welcome you as friends, because of the kindly words, the generous assistance, the judicious advice, and in some cases the adverse criticism you have given us in the prosecution of the work so marvelously committed to us women a few years ago. In the entertainment we have provided for you we have been embarrassed by our "wealth of riches" from which to choose. The best of everything has seemed to be at our service, but the best of everything would be too much to offer at once, so we have taken a little here and there, leaving many for some future occasion, whose ready service would richly entertain you and does us the highest honor.

We would love to give her address in full but space forbids.

Bishop Hurst of the Methodist Episcopal church followed with an eloquent and scholarly address, subject, "The church and modern reforms." We can only give the closing paragraphs, but all was so good it seems a pity to select:

We must labor at these great reforms one by one. No two questions of moment are settled at once. The task is too great. We settle one and then go on to the next, and then to the next, as need requires and a merciful providence points out the way. And when one is adjusted, and the public mind is satisfied, and a great want is realized, we wonder that it was not done sooner. When this legislation enacts statutory prohibition, and we have the most we can get and have the grand consummation, our good people will wonder why it came no sooner. There be some who still prefer the prison of the old bondage of our open saloon and a woman's hand instead of a ballot as did the prisoner in the Bastille, who, after the jailor threw open the door and declared his liberty, said: "No I will go back to my cell. I am used to that." But he is only one of the ten thousand. The other nine hundred and ninety-nine will rejoice in the glad sunshine and kiss with gladness and rapture the hand that terminated the bondage.

Mrs. Aldrich in announcing music said she would call for the hymn which was found so precious in the crusade, as to be called the Crusade Hymn, and therefore the ladies and gentlemen who sang the first selection sang "Jesus Lover of my Soul" to the beautiful arrangement "When the Swallows Homeward Fly."

Mr. John Mahin then read an earnest and truthful paper on "The Press." The following opening sentences will give an idea of his line of thought:

The Press: What shall I say of it? It has been likened to the lever that lifts the world. It is indeed potent, but alas! not as a unit for good. The ideal press, it is said, is

"Pledged but to truth, to liberty and law,
No favor sways it, and no fear shall awe."

But the ideal press, like the ideal man or woman, stands for a pattern rather than a realization. Goethe says "there are many echoes in the world, but few voices." The men of decided convictions, and with the courage of their convictions, are comparatively few.

He was followed by Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster with the address of the evening, her theme "Iowa's Temperance Record and Glory." To attempt an abbreviated report of her words is useless. Never was this dear and gifted woman more inspired and lifted up than on this occasion. Never were Iowa people more proud of her. The vast crowd hung upon her words, and applauded, laughed, wept, or were hushed in solemn silence as she willed. Queen of oratory, and queen of intellectual acquirements, she is queen of hearts as well. May the dear Lord spare and keep and bless her yet these many years for the sake of temperance and right and justice. She inspires us all with courage, and the force of her arguments is unanswerable.

Delightful as the evening was, it would have been incomplete without the closing adieux from Anna Lee Mahin. They were as the warm kiss and sweet good night of the mother, after the children's evening romp. The fragrance of her presence and her words will linger when the shape of argument and the color of oratory may have been forgotten. She said in opening:

Friends, I represent a class of women who are unable, because of duty, to be present with us, but who send you greeting and God-speed through my weak lips tonight. I come from out the shelter of a happy home, where as yet, thank God, the trail of the serpent has not entered. I come with the hallowed touch of baby fingers upon my lips. I bring to you the blessing and the trust of the home keepers and the home mothers of Iowa, the women tender and true who are tonight keeping your homes safe and pure and carrying your children on their warm bosoms. We know that the safety of the nation lies in the well ordered homes of the people, and we will endeavor to do our part well, believing that the new year is to "Ring in" for us, through you, "sweeter manners, purer laws." There is but one kingdom which the women of Iowa desire to reign over, and that is the divine kingdom of the home. Ah, my brothers, that is the keynote of all this great movement, this uprising of women. God has implanted deep in woman's very soul this great love of her home, her husband and her children, and when danger threatens them, her every instinct is on the alert and her whole being stirred to its inmost depths, and life itself is not counted too great a sacrifice in saving them.

And then after a clear synopsis of the methods of work of the W. C. T. U., she made a final appeal:

Men of Iowa, the prayers and thanksgivings of the nation are every day, almost every hour, going up to the all wise Father for you, that He will help you to be wise and brave and strong for the right. The faith of the Christian women of the land tells them that prohibition is coming. The seed has been sown with many bitter tears and broken hearts of women, and now we believe that the "fulness of time" is near.

The W. C. T. U. has lifted the curtain, and they are ready to march with you to victory when you shall "clear the way."

PROHIBITION IN THE IOWA LEGISLATURE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I write just a line to tell you of the work here. The legislature opened on the 14th since which time the governor has been inaugurated, the new capitol dedicated, Senator Allison re-elected and an immense amount of work done. The senate chamber and hall of the house of representatives are more beautiful to my eyes than those of the capitol at Washington.

The first bill introduced in the senate within one minute after Lieutenant Governor Mannings' gavel went down and he declared the hour for the introduction of bills, was a bill for the repeal of the wine and beer clause, and this introduced by Senator Donnan, who is chairman of the republican state central committee. This will pass with little debate. In the house of representatives the battle will be hotly contested, the republican majority there being very small.

Our bills for scientific temperance instruction, for woman's reformatory and prison, and for change of code making men and women equally responsible before the law for crimes against chastity, these have all been introduced and referred to proper committees. The resolution to ratify action of last legislature in submitting to the votes of the people an amendment to the constitution striking out the word "male" has not yet come up. There is every indication that it will pass.

I here insert the account given in the Des Moines Register at the head of its first column on the outside page:

BILL NUMBER ONE.

The first bill introduced in the Iowa senate at this session was by Senator Donnan yesterday. We give it below in full:

By Senator Donnan: (Senate File No. 1)
A Bill for an act to repeal Sec. 1555, Chapter 6, Title 11 of the Code, and to enact a substitute therefor, relating to intoxicating liquors
Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:
SEC. 1. That Section 1555, Chapter 6 of Title 11 of the Code, be, and the same is hereby repealed, and the following is enacted in lieu thereof: "Section 1555. Wherever the words intoxicating liquors occur in this chapter, the same shall be construed to mean all intoxicating liquors whatever: and no person shall manufacture for sale, or sell or keep for sale as a beverage, any intoxicating liquors whatever, including, ale, wine and beer.
"SEC. 2. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

This is a bill, straight, direct and positive, to strike out the wine and beer clause of the prohibiting law. Senator Donnan, who introduced it, is the chairman of the republican state committee.

The republican party does not propose to lose a minute's time in redeeming its pledge and giving to the people of Iowa total prohibition.

Good for Bill Number One! Let it be put through without crossing an i or dotting a t.

Dear sisters everywhere, I know your eyes are turned toward Iowa. So far all is well; but the end is not yet, and I say again as I have often said, pray for Iowa.

Des Moines, 25th inst. J. ELLEN FOSTER.

THE CAPTURE OF YOUNG WOMANHOOD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I often wish I could make all the women in our Woman's Christian Temperance Union realize the importance of getting young ladies organized into Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions. It is too much to expect to enlist all in that special line of work but if I could arouse one wide awake judicious woman in each union; it would be enough to start such a sister union wherever an older one exists.

Oh sisters, enlisting these young girls means so much for the future of our cause! We who are wives and mothers will comparatively soon have finished our work, and to enlist our daughters and younger sisters means just so many trained workers to take up the work you and I shall leave. An experience of about three years as president of a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been one of the happiest in my life and I do want to enthuse others with this delightful department of temperance work.

Standing upon the threshold of a New Year, my thoughts have been turned especially to this subject. "Our girls" are in the New Year's day of their lives and particularly susceptible to what is good and pure and true. Many of them have felt the great evils of the liquor traffic and only want to be shown how they can help in the overthrow of that enemy of the home. Said one to me not long since: "I'm so glad to find a way in which young ladies can help." I wish every sister worker who reads this would look about and see what can be done in her place of residence to start a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Seven live girls are enough for a beginning and they will not fail to bring in others if they work with energy and tact.

And you know dear sisters, how we older ones have felt that there was a wonderful reflex blessing in our Woman's Christian Temperance Union work. Well it proves a great help to our young ladies also. I am frequently in receipt of letters from young workers which show the same tender leadings of the Spirit bringing them in their young womanhood to that earnest consecration to the temperance work which many of us did not reach until we had passed the noon-tide of our lives.

THE U. S. LICENSES IN MAINE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have just read Aurilla Forbes' letter and hasten to do my part towards enlightenment. It is true that in Maine there is a United States tax paid on about one thousand places. Part of these are town agencies, allowed by our state law, one for each town that demands it, so that liquor may be there obtained for medicinal and mechanical purposes. Part of them are drug stores where alcohol is kept for the purpose of mixing medicine. Take out these places and it would not leave one liquor selling place for each town in Maine. Again, every one who undertakes to defy the state law and sell liquor is very likely in the beginning to pay his United States tax; for the risk of being caught by the state law is generally all he cares to face; and so I contend rumsellers in Maine are more likely to pay their United States tax than they are in license states. Not very long ago a young man whom I had reason to believe knew very little about our laws, opened what seemed to me a drinking place. I talked with him about it and he replied, "I have my license," showing me the receipt for his United States tax. I explained to him that this in no way excused him from the provisions of our state law, and told him if he insisted upon selling he very likely would get into trouble, probably into jail. And sure enough in a very few months he was tried for violating the law of the state, to which he was just as amenable as though he had not paid the United States tax.

Now that I am speaking of this it may be wise to state that the United States tax on manufacture and sale of liquors in the United States is per inhabitant $1.40. On same in Maine .03. To be sure the law has not exterminated the evil against which it is aimed. No law does this; but more than half our Maine towns are free from the traffic, and in the other small half the way of the transgressor is made hard. L. M. STEVENS.

LITTLE DILLY-DALLY.

I don't believe you ever
Knew any one so silly
As the girl I'm going to tell about—
A little girl named Dilly.
Dilly-dally Dilly!
Oh, she is very slow;
She drags her feet
Along the street,
And dilly- dallies so!

She's always late to breakfast
Without a bit of reason,
For Bridget rings and rings the bell
And wakes her up in season.
Dilly-dally Dilly,
How can you be so slow?
Why don't you try
To be more spry,
And not dilly-dally so?

'Tis just the same at evening;
And it's really quite distressing
To see the time that Dilly wastes
In dressing and undressing.
Dilly-dally Dilly
Is always in a huff;
If you hurry her
Or worry her
She says, "There's time enough."

Since she's neither sick nor helpless,
It is quite a serious matter
That she should be so lazy that
We still keep scolding at her.
Dilly-dally Dilly,
It's very wrong, you know,
To do no work
That you can shirk,
And dilly-dally so.

THE LITTLE TEETOTALER.

The little birds that fly and sing,
So happy, blithe and free,
Are water drinkers every one—
Teetotalers true, like me.

The trees that grow so tall and strong,
And spread their branches wide,
All quench their thirst from dews and showers,
They, too, are on our side.

Yes, birds, and flowers and stately trees,
And beasts that walk the sod—
All nature's with us, and our cause
Is blessed by nature's God.

ONLY LOOKED ON.

The music and the patriotic speeches were over with the day; but the boys gathered at evening around a bright bon-fire in the street, laughing and chattering, adding fresh fuel and stirring it to a brighter blaze. The cheerful light—and perhaps the warmth also, for it was a cool night—attracted one unlike others of the group. A bare footed, ragged boy drew near and hovered on the outer edge of the company for a few minutes, but presently made his way nearer to the fire and stood beside it in evident enjoyment.

Then the largest, roughest boy in the crowd suddenly discovered him.

"Hello, tatters! where did you come from?"

The boy tried to draw back, but he was too late.

"Bare feet and such a cap as that! Well, you're too fine entirely. Don't you know that kind of cap is better roasted?" and a quick blow sent the faded head-covering into the fire.

Its owner made a faint effort to recover it.

"That was mean, Jim," said one of the boys, faintly. The others said nothing, and one or two laughed.

The forlorn stranger drew back, escaped from the group and sat down on the doorstep at a little distance, drawing his raggid sleeves across his eyes to wipe away the tears of anger and grief. A pitying, indignant little face looked down upon him from an upper window, and a pair of childish eyes that had watched the scene grew tearful in sympathy, and then brightened with the hope of comforting. Lily hurried away and was back in a few minutes with an outgrown cap of her brother's, a package of sandwiches and cookies that she had coaxed in the kitchen, and a bright silver dollar of her own. She put the articles into the cap, fastened a string to it, and lowered it softly toward the boy on the steps, dropping the end of the string as it reached him.

"Why, Lily, what are you doing?" asked a voice as she drew back.

Lily shook her bright hair and looked up at her brother.

"Doing what that speaker man said this morning. He said, 'Let some of your blessings fall into the lap of those who haven't so much;' and I did. It fell right straight into his lap, and I guess he did'nt know whether it came from a window or from heaven, for he looked up real quick and queer and said, 'Thank you; amen!' and then ran away."

Guy laughed and Lily's face looked reproachful.

"You were there by the bonfire all the time. O, Guy, I don't see how you could do it."

"Why, I didn't knock his cap off," said Guy, "it was Jim Gregg; he's a rough fellow always. I didn't do anything or say anything; and the other fellows didn't either."

"That was just the trouble," said his aunt gravely. "I, too, watched the whole thing from the window, Guy; and if I were going to talk to Amercian boys on a day like this, I should care far less about urging them to join this or that political party than about warning them against belonging to the great party in this world—those who only stand and look on. I believe they are responsible for the larger share of its evils. They do not help any good cause: they only look on and do nothing. They never hinder a wrong cause; they only watch and say nothing. O, Guy, did you ever think how our Lord's parable makes the final condemnation rest, not upon actual transgression but upon omission? 'I was a stranger, sick and in prison, and ye did it not to me.' They only looked on and did nothing."—Morning Star.

A DAY AT SCHOOL.

When I was a little girl and went to a little school and wore a little sunbonnet and dress and apron, and carried a little slate and one or two little books, something happened one day that I can never forget. Years have come and gone; many changes come with many years; but that one day at school can never be erased from my mind.

I must have been about seven or eight years old when it happened, for my little reader had in it the story of "The Three Boys and the Three Cakes." I remember our teacher was a tall, handsome woman. I used to think she must look like a queen, for she was so beautiful to me. All day long a noisy mischevious boy had given her great trouble. She watched him, but did not seem at all angry, only she looked pale and sober. When evening came, she called him to her, and said to him just as kindly and calmly as though he had been very nice:

"Tommie, you have been very bad today, and you must be punished."

We all expected her to ask him to hold out his hand for a feruling, but she didn't. She stopped and looked at him a moment, then said:

"I can't strike you, Tommie, you must strike me."

Then taking a ruler from her desk, she handed it to him. We all sat in breathless silence. I remember my heart got right up in my throat, and I wanted to cry. Our teacher's face was as white and still as marble. Tommie shrank back and would not touch the ruler. The teacher said again:

"Tommie, you must," and laying the ruler on his arm she stretched out her delicate hand toward him. Dropping the ruler, Tommie sank down on the platform with a great sob. I guess we all cried then; I did, I know. But our teacher sat there so pale and beautiful—not a particle angry or excited; so calm, she seemed almost an angel to us. I can never forget how she took the poor boy's hand and drew him up to her side, and how sweet her voice sounded as she said:

"You know now, Tommie, how it hurts me to strike you, and how much more it has hurt me all day to know that this boy needed to be struck."

After that, the "worst boy in the school," Thomas Greene, became a gentle, noble fellow. The calm teacher had conquered, not the flesh, but the spirit. Had she grown angry and uttered bitter, unkind things, how the boy's heart would have fired up with anger, too, and how different all our hearts would have felt! I always wished to grow into the same sweet, patient kind of a woman that my loved teacher was—for to me she was the most perfect type of womanhood' and such she will always be.

I have told you this story of a day at school in order to teach you the beauty of calmness, gentleness, patience and forbearance. These are hard lessons to learn, dear boys and girls, but let us learn together from the one best and most perfect teacher, Jesus, that loving Savior who went about doing good.—Western Christian Advocate.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—Instead of talking to you myself, this week, I am going to give you a letter sent to me, which will be good for every one of our large circle "around the camp-fire." May you all enjoy it as much as I have!

Dear Captain Deborah:—This Prevention Army always reminds me of that old story about the animals holding a meeting on the banks of the Nile, away over in Africa. The meeting had been called to see what could be done to save the animals from being destroyed by the crocodile. Not a day passed but some creature was gobbled up by this wicked reptile, and if things went on in this way it would not be long before all would be destroyed. A great many plans were proposed by the large animals, and the wise animals. But a very little thinking showed the whole convention that these plans were not good. They were intended for good, but they could not succeed because the crocodile was too mighty for them. He was a sneak, as well as a powerful fighter. It was plain to all, some new plan must be thought out. Just at this point up jumped a wee bit of an animal called the ich-neu-mon,—a little fellow that sometimes lives in the houses of the Egyptians, instead of a cat, to kill the rats and mice. Some of the big animals hooted and hissed when he began to talk. But he went on and said the wisest and best thing of all. This was his speech: "When I undertake to kill the crocodile"— When he had got this far the hooting was tremendous, but he shouted out at the top of his small voice,—"I always take him in the egg." And I tell you there was what the grown folks call a sensation then. Why that tiny creature was famous for running along the sandy shore and destroying crocodile's eggs; and everyone at the meeting saw that all that was needed was many busy ich-neu-mons, and the thing would be accomplished.

"I always take him in the egg." That is just what the prevention army is doing; it is killing the whisky monster in the egg.

Yours, Volunteer.

Now don't you see how busy and how useful you can be, boys and girls? Never think, for one moment, that your part of the great temperance army is of little importance.

Captain Deborah.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

BY MARY L. DICKINSON.

Let the New Year bring what it will, O Friend,
Nothing have we to fear.
The past it was good;—let the good past lend
The future its glow and cheer.
Ay, good, though its darkling clouds dropped rain,
And its care seemed never to cease;
After the gloom there was light, and the pain
Was only the road to peace.

There is nothing to fear in the coming year,
Though the smile be faint on its face,
Better than hope is a faith that will grope
In the dark for the hidden grace;
Better than joy is the brave employ
Of the days in the Master's field,
But the harvest still is the work of His will;—
To make it thrive or yield,

Is not thine or mine, but the task divine
Of One who has waited long,
In sorrow and travail of soul, to see
His world redeemed from wrong.
And the truth is this, that the work is His,
And nothing have we to say,—
He carries the care for the whole long year,
We for each little day.

As hour by hour reveals His power,
Unfolds His wondrous will,
His cross we bear, His work we share,
Or wait resigned and still.
Patient to suffer or brave to do,
What can we have to fear?
Old years are His, and His the new—
He can make it a glad New Year.

A FEARFUL INHERITANCE.

BY HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD.

For a few brief weeks after the marriage, Marion went out in the round of gay society, to which her mother aspired. Mrs. Mortimer displayed her own toilets over those of her daughter to her heart's great content, and Marion felt perhaps a faint satisfaction in her youth and beauty. But it ended suddenly for her. Percy Perry, for a short time before and after his marriage, had one of his frequent spasms of reformation. By a desperate effort he kept control of himself, and Marion almost thought she had wronged him in her judgment. Mrs. Mortimer was unduly elated; all was more than well. Then, one evening, when they were invited to a dinner party where the guests were of the choicest, and everything, as Mrs. Mortimer expressed it, in the finest tone, Percy was led into taking wine. Long before the close of the long dinner he was boisterous, a little later he was maudlin, and he was carried home in the carriage at last helplessly drunk. Marion sat through the dinner like a statue carved in marble; the set expression of her mobile face was painful beyond measure, but she gave no sign. Not a sound did she utter as the carriage rolled home, and her mother tried to talk.

Not a soul did she see for days afterwards, not a meal did she take save in the presence of the servants. She moved about like a little wan ghost from room to room, trying to kill the awful hours whose length and number appalled her in the contemplation.

"Marion, the visitors are in the parlor; do come down; it will do you good."

It was a month after her deep disgrace.

"No, mother, you go down; say I am ill."

"Marion, pray come out with me this morning; the carriage is at the door. You need the air; you will soon be a little fright."

"No, mother, I cannot ride today. Go and take some of your friends out; the Mertons would like to go, I am sure."

"Marion, you must positively have a little change; let us go to New York for a few days."

"Ah, mother, why should I go to New York?"

"Shall we furnish this boudoir in pale blue or rose color, darling? It will be charming in either. But perhaps the pink; you are so pale."

"Yes, mother, have the pink if you like."

Thus existed for months a heart breaking listlessness and apathy from which nothing could arouse her; then a great resolve, a feeling of religious exaltation, weeks of prayer and self abnegation—a sort of peace at last, a mighty resolve to save this soul, a determination to save him if she died in the attempt.

A new purpose entered into her life. She grew strong and even cheerful. She began by making herself necessary to his comfort, to his entertainment. He was at thirty years of age, perfectly blase, and tired of his own existence. He was one of those numerous young men, the sons of the wealthy who are the victims of their education. Naturally of good abilities and of good heart, with no stronger vicious tendencies than other boys, a judicious training in youth might have made him a noble and useful man. He was not unlike his own father, whose Spartan discipline in youth had brought out all the gold of his character; but, instead of plain fare and hard work and wise commands laid upon him and enforced with a severity which is but tenderness toward youth, Percy had been brought up in the limp and easy method of our modern parents. No "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not," after God's manner of dealing with his children, but "my dear, I had rather that you would not stay out of school today;" "Percy dear, I don't like to have you take coffee—strong coffee is not good for children;" "Percy, don't smoke, my son—it is really vulgar for such boys as you to smoke;" "Don't take another glass of wine, Percy—one is quite enough for a boy of your age, please, dear." So on through his childhood—every wish gratified, every sense satiated, his digestion ruined by rich food, his nerves by stimulants and narcotics, his system kept in constant low tone by late hours and excitement—was he not, as I have said, the victim of his environment? Hard, strict and plain fare, and the excitement of a laudable ambition, would have made a man of him like his father; the contrary made him what he was at sixteen, a boy with all the sweet edge of boyish delight taken off, with no zest for life, no capacity for any of its pleasures. At this critical age he was sent to Germany to be educated. The few restraints which an over-indulgent affection had thrown around him were all removed and he was left without any rudder of firm principle, in the very worst place in which it is possible to leave any boy, a large boys' school, removed from all influence of home or friends. Here, in an atmosphere of smoke and beer, he lived for five years. The indulgence of these stimulants at that age, did what it will always do—it destroyed his brain, his will, his health. He returned home one of those youthful wretcher which it is so common and so sad to see. The folly and sin of allowing a boy to form these habits before he is old enough to realize the fatal consequences, was brought fully home to the parents' hearts by this time. They never blamed him, as indeed they had no right to do; but they felt him to be, what he was, the crowning affliction, instead of the comfort of their lives. In his marriage they felt some hope, as drowning men catch at straws, but that hope soon left them. The father kept at his work of piling up useless dollars which could never give him happiness or help his son, the frivolous mother went on her usual round of gaities, and made no sign.

As soon as Marion's new resolve was taken she constituted herself, as it were, his keeper. She scarcely left him by night or day. She secured his promise to make one more gigantic effort for freedom from the thralldom of his vice; but she knew how his will had been destroyed, his conscience debilitated, his strength sapped by his career, and she never trusted him alone. He grew passionately fond of her in a short time. He would never think of his temptations when she was near him. Although he suffered horribly at first and she knew it, he would never complain; but as soon as he was alone the old ennui and unrest would weigh upon him, and he would cast about for any diversion for his mind.

So it came about that she became his shadow. Percy Perry for months at a time would never be seen alone. For hours of every day she would ride with him. He had a passion for fine horses, which she encouraged, and he grew to take more pleasure in driving than in anything else. She was always at his side; she cultivated her powers of conversation, not great at first, but she learned to talk to amuse him. She would read every moment when he was occupied, and when he wished it she would tell him all that she had read, in a certain bright way that she had, which he found immensely amusing. She found a use for her singing and her playing; they filled great gaps of time, and with less weariness to her than most other ways. It was this terrible length of the days that she fought. Never were there twenty-four hours of such length as hers. Eternity will not seem as long to her sanctified soul as some of these days and weeks. When he read she sat by his side and made new plans for his diversion. Hating cards, she sat and played endless games with a weariness no other soul could ever know. She induced him to lay out flower beds and work with her there, but he never stood there a moment alone. She followed him to the stables, and while he groomed the horses and brushed the carriages, as he would often do for employment, she stood by and affected an interest in each proceeding. Endless were her devices, endless her ingenuity, endless her patience and endurance. The world looked on in wonder. It had generally been supposed to be a mercenary marriage; how account for such devotion as this?

"Marion, come with me today, Percy will do very well alone," Mrs. Mortimer would often say; but the reply was always: "No, I am going out by and by, but not with you. Never mind me, mother, I am doing very well." So Mrs. Mortimer went out in her own carriage and made calls, leaving Mrs. Percy Perry's cards with her own, or she attended parties and receptions, dinners and balls, bearing her daughter's regrets,—and she had what she had sought, a life of ease and pleasure. She was always one of the handsomest women in any crowd and one of the best dressed. She knew it and it was all she asked. Earth could hold no higher happiness for her than what clothes could give; She lived, moved and had her being in an atmosphere of toilets. The dream of her life was of drapery; the highest aspiration of her soul was for an effect. The nearest approach she had to principle was a passionate dislike for inharmonious colors. The becoming was her sole idea of duty; the tyranny of taste was her code of morals. The decalogue for her contained but a single commandment: "Thou shalt dress better than thy neighbor." The imbecility of frivolity could no further go. She thought Marion was a fool as this last phase of her character developed itself, but thought the folly would not last long. She could not imagine why the girl could not take things comfortably and have an easy and a pleasant life.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Feb. 10. LESSON VI. 1884.

TOPIC.—The conversion of Lydia.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 16: 11–24.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whose heart the Lord opened that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. Acts 16 : 14.

TIME.—A. D. 52.

PLACES.—Philippi, in Macedonia.

1. Paul, Silas, Luke Timothy journeying toward Europe make thankful record through Luke, the chronicler, of their "straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis."

Favoring winds are and should be ever a cause of thankfulness, but one can imagine how grateful to Paul, who had embarked on this voyage at the bidding of a vision, a spiritual call, must be the appoving seal of a "straight course" set upon his decision and action. The Spirit's voice is often perplexing—not the voice exactly, but the purely human intellect often hesitates to enterprise hazardous things, on what it may term "a mere intuition." If spirit conquers intellect, and God's call is heeded by it, how good of our heavenly Father to confirm us in the way and upon it, by tokens of favor and of loving sanction.

2. The scattered Jews had in many places increased in numbers to such an extent as to build synagogues for their national worship. But in others they were few and feeble. Nevertheless in these they did not forsake the "assembling of themselves together." They had their places sacred to prayer in groves, gardens and by the river side. Here in a sort of "Headquarters" they "held the fort." How important and how significant this "local habitation" by the river side at Philippi became, is seen in the conversion of Lydia. Had there been no such place, where would these evangelists so soon have entered on the work of their ministry? And it was fitting that the women, who bore doubtless the same proportion to the Jewish church in number, faithfulness and zeal that the women of the present time do to the churches of today, should have the honor and privilege of introducing Paul to the European world.

3. Technicalities were as forceful in A. D. 52, as 1884. The letter of Roman law allowed the Jews to enjoy their own religion but not to propagate it. The pagan masters of the soothsaying slave, seeing that their hope of gains was gone, sought an occasion against the men who had cast out the demon which had possessed her. They found officials as ready then as now to stretch a point in favor of the oppressor and to fire the heart of the people with the intimation that something was being taught or promulgated contrary to Roman rule and spirit.

4. Paul is very reticent on the subject of his sufferings. He never parades his persecutions and his hardships. In all his writings there is but one itemization of his sorrows, perils and injuries. Luke with all his love of details gives little space to recounting the sufferings of Paul and Silas in the inner dungeon where they lay stretched on the rack, subjected to as cruel torture as human ingenuity could devise.

"Neither count I my life dear unto myself," was the life experience and motto of this man, frail in body but mighty in spirit.

AM I MY BTOTHER'S KEEPER?

Sometimes we ask the question despairingly, realizing our failure to wield personal influence over others; sometimes impatiently, trying to throw off all responsibility; and yet again we ask it of our souls in that earnest spirit which "recognizes God as the third party," in the conference.

Barriers of custom, of reticence, of indifference, are built up between human hearts, and only the exigencies of life have power to sweep these away. It is then that the kinship of the world comes out clearly, and even strange hands are gasped with no sense of unfamiliarity. In a common danger we all know that this is true. Or under any circumstances of pathetic interest, how quickly the masks of indifference are thrown off, and the soul looks out!

Just one picture of the thousands that might be drawn, dipped in life's vivid hues! It is a clear, frosty morning. Men hurry on their several ways, but we see one group stationary, and every moment it enlarges. An accident has occurred, in which the life of one human being is jeopardized. Tender hands have just lifted the mangled body, and it is conveyed as gently as may be to the home over which already the fearful shadow of death is projected. As we approach the scene, how eloquent of sincerity is every word spoken and every look exchanged! A rough looking man comes to us and says, "It's awful! I couldn't bear to look at him as they carried him away, all cut to pieces. And to see his blood there on the snow!" and he draws his hand across the dark eyes that are dim with manly tears. We never looked into those honest eyes before, but that matters nothing, and is not remembered at all in the common sympathy that rules the hour. A thought lingers with us, however, afterward, aroused by the man's closing words: "To see his blood there on the snow!" That human blood was a sorrowful object lesson, that reached the shuddering depths of every heart. But who was it that said we should "fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell!" If we could only see it, our brother's blood is staining many a fair scene where the outside show is gay and beautiful; where laughter is heard instead of weeping, and no one stops to commiserate the destruction that is far greater than the mere dissolution of the body, for it is double and irrevocable.

What can we do? The awful reality of our responsibility, in behalf of the tempted and sinning all around us, and especially the cases which God puts into our hands, presses us to seek a solution to the question at the beginning. How shall we do this? The workers who are attempting this great task of temperance reform will need to establish their ministries upon a plane out of which will come all the influences that are needed,—the mightiest influences that are known in this world.

As one has said, "'Not by might, nor by power,' not by genius, but by that disposition in us that likens us to the Lord Jesus Christ, in that royalty of self-sacrifice, that glory of love, that intense and entire sympathy with others rather than with ourselves, that sort of personal plasticity by which we may wrap ourselves around circumstances, and glorify base things, and seek out low and little things, and give them a newer power," and breathe into those for whom we labor the breath of life.

This has to be done by personal effort. The soul has to be held in readiness for every emergency of those who look to us for help, and sympathy, and strength. It is not sentiment, it is reality. William Arthur in his great fraternal address at Cincinnati, a few years ago, uttered these words: "I know there are many people who always cry out for something prartical, something to do. And by something to do, they always seem to mean something that the hands can handle, or the feet can touch. Very well. All that is practical in its way. But permit me to say that so far as I know, the most practical thing in this world is a thought put into a human mind or a feeling raised in a human heart."

Test it in your own life. What has made you what you are? Is it not the personal touches here and there, all along the way, that have shaped your nature into its present state? The faithlessness of that friend away back in your history, touched the springs, and sent that taint of bitterness into your being which has tinged your whole life. That word of cheer which another spoke, when your heart was heavy and overborne with sorrow, can you ever forget it? Or forget how you lifted your head in renewed hope and comfort? That staying hand that laid hold on yours in dire temptation, that silent pressure that spoke so thrillingly of the presence of one soul who refused to forsake or betray, could anything have been more real in its effects on you than that? The last triumphant look from dying eyes, and the glad pointing upward of hands that dropped a moment later on the pulseless breast, how often have those looks and gestures been like viewless wings, carrying you to the very gates of the heavenly city!

And when we realize the potency of these individual influences, how can we fail to see that here is our greatest work? For here we pierce through the outer form to the very heart of the matter—the life.

A BIT OF EXPLANATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL;—Please tell us all you know about "bonded whisky." I asked the wisest man in H———, and he began to explain by saying: "I do not fully understand." Since then I have not felt so ignorant, but have wanted to know more than I did before; hence this appeal to THE UNION SIGNAL.

All whisky and all distilled spirits must pay its tax,—ninety cents the gallon to the United States government. It having been found that distillers will cheat, a government officer takes charge of the spirits as they issue from the distillers "well" (what a misnomer!) and locks them up in a warehouse, of which he keeps the key and over which he exercises constant watch and ward. When the distiller sells a barrel of alcohol or whisky he must go to the government store keeper, who will release the goods on the payment of the tax. The spirits in this warehouse are called bonded spirits, because the distiller is obliged to give bonds to the government for the payment of the tax on all spirits in the warehouse, whenever sold and delivered to his patrons. The government with these bonds in its possession engages that the distiller may keep these spirits in bond, i. e. in the warehouse, for so long a time, after which interest must be paid on the value of the goods. It so happens that with a large amount of whisky stored away in Kentucky mainly, this period expires this year. This was also the case last year. Hence the great effort on the part of the manufacturers to avoid paying interest on the value of these goods. Also the necessity of selling them and paying the tax, by securing from congress an extension of the bonding period. There is not the market that once existed for these wares, but they hopefully think that if they can, without expense or damage to themselves, keep the whiskies aging and increasing in value in the warehouse, the market will revive and great shall be their profits. They therefore ask of congress to put not less than thirty million of dollars in their pockets, as was shown last week, by the passage of a bill extending their warehousing privileges for two years. It remains to be seen if the people of this country think well of such a project.

INQUIRIES often reach us concerning the expenses of a student at the free kindergarten training school which is doing such fine work in this city. In response to all such we trust these few facts will clear the way for many a true hearted girl who desires to make herself a power for good. The time required to learn this system of teaching is ten months; cost, ordinary living expenses, and about twenty-five dollars extra for materials for work during the course of study. Good board can be had for five dollars per week, or, if several ladies choose to co-operate and make a cosy home, the expense will be somewhat less than boarding.

A good common school education is all the essential preparation for the kindergarten Normal, though each added acquirement is another advantage.

There are now twelve free kindergarten schools founded by the association, where are gathered many of the little "street waifs" to be found in this great city; each school is provided with one or more salaried teachers—graduates from the training school—also two or more assistants from the same source; and these hours of practice are of much value to the student. The afternoons are devoted to study of theory and to lectures which embody clearly and perfectly the principles underlying this beautiful method of developing the child nature. The call for teachers is greater than can be supplied; there will be no difficulty in securing positions after graduation. The salary, when paid by the association, is never less than forty dollars per month for the first year; fifty dollars the second year, and more as experience or special adaptation to the work commands.

On the first Monday in February a new term will open, and pupils will not be received after the middle of February. For all further information Miss Ross herself should be addressed at 175 Twenty-Second street, Chicago.

Valentine's Day is not to be disregarded by temperance women. Not this year at any rate, for here comes ever ready Mrs. McClees with a bright little card to soldiers and sailors, calling it a W. C. T. U. Valentine. On the reverse of the pretty sea picture in colors is a real motherly letter to blue bloused Jack, which will reach his heart I am sure.

Mrs. Chapin, all her friends will be glad to know has entirely recovered and is at work again. Last week she was at Tuscaloosa, for the Alabama convention and from thence travelled rapidly to that of Georgia. She will fill appointments in five states, with no abatement of energy and zeal.

Martin F. Tupper seeks to find some "philosophy" in the restriction of drinking places to one out of twenty now existing. He would burden this twentieth permitted nuisance with the revels and orgies of the twenty.

A Washington, (D. C.) paper advertises in the regular advertising columns the shame of a young pastor in that city after this sort:

The prayers of God's people are most earnestly requested for the thorough purification of a young church whose pastor and officers are inveterate tobacco users, much against the wishes of its members.

* * * * *

How many grand things Iowa is doing. Her new state house which they say is not specked with a single charge of corruption or jobbery, is not to be specked with tobacco juice either. The senate says so in a resolution and it can't be possible that the lower house will refuse to take the hint.

They do say that Mrs. Carlisle is now the Lucy Hayes of Washington and that last season she disagreed to the point of "coolness" with a Kentucky friend with whom she was to receive New Year's calls and who insisted on "punch" as a feature of the entertainment. The Lord bless and keep her!

* * * * *

This is what I have to bear when I try to urge good people on to the heights of duty:

Ah me, that it should come to this! That I who have persistently "pushed" for temperance where I "belonged" and otherwhere, should be accused of "backwardness about forwardness." I rise to explain: I was in the state teachers' association, en route to my work here. Said teachers' meeting was held Thursday evening, Friday and Saturday morning Mrs. L. spoke. Friday morning I heard her and then left at noon, coming here in the afternoon. Supposed of course it would be noticed in resolutions. Had I even dreamed of such a failure, should have "pushed" some of my good friends to do the work which I, not a member of the association, could hardly do with propriety. The telescope "on duty" was not focussed quite right. Yours as ever,

ALICE M. GUERNSEY

"Sweet Alice"—Ben Bolt himself couldn't have seen into your inner consciousness. My telescope never agreed to read hearts.

Miss Mary A. Wadsworth is full of work in Massachusetts. She has special adaptation to conservative circles and towns, so whispers my good friend Mrs. L. B. Barrett who is not a bit conservative, and yet like all true radicals knows how to honor the bravery of conservatism in this progressive age.

* * * * *

For it is brave to be conservative. It is always heroic to be true. I glory in the honest little woman who rises in a convention when she knows everything is against her and says: "I must protest against this resolution, if I would be loyal to my convictions." Such women are sure to be converted, and make the stanchest of all allies. I honor the conservatives because—well, because I've been one myself.

* * * * *

Our W. C. T. U. women make full proof of their ministry. Some of them in the pulpit as on the platform. It strikes one a little queerly that so many of these hard working evangelists are Marys. Last week I noted Mary Lathrap's earnest revival work in Michigan, and now word reaches us of Mary H. Villars' faithful labors in Pekin, Ill., a city of distilleries, where "the smoke of their torment asendeth day and night." Thirty-three conversions are accredited to these labors.

The Amercian correspondent of a London paper, writes of our John B. Gough thus appreciatively:

Mr. Gough is no longer the man we remember him once. He is stouter, and more staid. His hair is getting very white. His voice is husky with both use and abuse, for certainly no one ever treated a magnificent organ so unmercifully. But he is wiser, riper, better than ever.

* * * * *

Occasionally I get a peep at a private letter. For instance at one received by Mrs. McLeod of Maryland from one of the elite of the British provinces, and which says:

You, whose every thought is turned temperance-ward, will be glad to hear of the results of Miss Willard's seed-sowing on British soil. Many have awakened out of sleep, seeing that they have solemn responsibilities in the matter. Ladies unions are being formed through the province and a good work begun which is, I trust, sign of the better time to come, when there shall be safety for our boys, now in the midst of temptations. Great disappointment has been expressed, in her failure to attend the meeting arranged for her in Sackville. We shall hope it is only postponed, and a good, which the future holds in store for us.

Ex-Governor Butler's unsolicited commendation of Miss Barton's management of the Woman's Reformatory prison, at Sherburne, Mass., is worth all the more when one knows just how he informed himself as to its inside workings. Never any warning was given the prison authorities of his visits, but like the Assyrian he came "down on the fold" with his cohorts at the most unexpected moments and absolutely "went through" everything—pantries, cupboards hospital, workshops, cellar and storehouse with the zeal of a detective. Miss Barton is devoting her entire time now to the Red Cross society, having consented only to organize at the prison, the success which Gov. Butler has so thoroughly estimated. Such strong skillful service makes all women stronger and more skillful as says the Governor:

Your administration and success have caused me one further appreciation of the fact that fit women are the fittest to take care of women.

Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, once of Iowa, now of Essex, Conn., is again in the temperance lecture field with four good addresses on Chicago has a judge who discriminates bravely in the case of the gambling iniquity. He says:

In my judgment the man who knowingly rents his premises for the purpose of gambling is quite as guilty as the man who occupies them. I am unable to draw a distinction between the man who owns the property and voluntarily rents it for a valuable consideration to a gambler and the man who goes in and uses it for gambling.

Write liquor selling by the side of gambling and the words will be just as true.

A prominent "machine" paper lately gave as its conviction that in the coming campaign the parties must be held together by stronger ties that the old issues of the past twenty years. Wonder where they would find a stronger bond than the prohibition of the liquor traffic?

ON DUTY

News From the Field.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE.—We are still engaged in sending out "life boats" after wrecked humanity, trying by gentle earnestness to lead them to ports of safety. We are holding at 16 W. Baltimore street a noonday gospel temperance meeting during the week, and also on Sabbath afternoons at 3:30 o'clock; also in tabernacles and churches whenever opportunity offers. We are now building "light houses"—are gathering in the children, and teaching them to steer clear of the "rocks along the coast." Any one passing along casually would have no idea of the grand work being carried on in our quiet looking "headquarters," but, in addition to the men's meetings, we have on Sabbath afternoon at 2:30 o'clock a school for society waifs, and a strange grouping it is of every class and condition!

Every morning excepting Saturday we have a free kindergarten (the school numbers twenty) under the superintendency of Mrs. Sarah Welsh. The children are provided with a plain, hot dinner at the close of each session.

Four afternoons in the week a Kitchen Garden school is conducted for girls of larger growth, who are taught all kinds of house work. This school is under the care of Mrs. Walters. On Friday afternoon at four o'clock we have a woman's meeting, and in some instances we have the whole family under the blessed influence of the gospel. The work is increasing and we are praying the "Lord of the harvest to raise up more workers."

On Christmas Eve twenty-three children of the free kindergarten had a Christmas tree which they heartily enjoyed and each had a toy and bag of candy to take home. On the 27th thirty girls of the Kitchen Garden were given a substantial dinner and allowed to carry home a portion of the good things.

On January 4 ninety of our Sabbath school boys were also given a supper, and in addition had a magic lantern show and music.

We intend, at an early date, to open the rooms one evening in the week and invite the boys to spend the evening with us; will provide games and other amusements for them.

We have saloons surrounding us and a theatre within one square, so that our work would seem discouraging if we did not remember that our "Captain has never lost a battle."

We have formed a Band of Hope at Madison ave. M. E. church, also one at Madison street Presbyterian (colored) church. One at Elk Ridge Landing, Howard county, one at Mt. Washington, Baltimore county, so our outlook for the year is bright. We held the crusade anniversary at First M. E. church, and, notwithstanding the inclement weather, had a large audience. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gave a glowing account of the crusade and its marvelous results, showing plainly that each woman had her work, which if she did it not, must go undone. Addresses were also made by Rev. C. E. Felton, of M. E. church, W. W. Williams and P. Wroth of P. E. church, W. J. Gill of Pres. church. Rev. J. F. Goucher of First M. E. church presided.

We sent out an appeal to the ministers to read to their congregations and also had one published in the daily papers, asking the women of our city to abstain from putting an "occasion of stumbling" in any one's way. We saw less drunkenness this season than for years.

Mrs. McLaughlin did a good work in Maryland and we hope to have her again in March to rouse the sleeping ones.

Death has been in our midst and taken away one of our vice presidents, Mrs. General G. H. Nye, of Laurel, Howard county, president of W. C. T. U. of that place, passed from labor to reward, December 21, 1883. We mourn but not without hope.

Our people seem to be arousing to the fact that three-fourths of the wickedness of the land is traceable to the rum traffic. May God speed the day when the church shall be thoroughly aroused and then we shall go on to victory. C. B. N.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE.—We have just closed a year of earnest effort. Our officers have been faithful and efficient, our president Mrs. W. H. Munnell, has presided at forty-five regular, and seven call meetings.

Our membership list numbers two hundred and eleven; honorary members thirty-one. The average attendance during the year has been thirty-seven.

Four Bands of Hope have been organized; three are in good condition. Committees have visited the home of the friendless, city hospital and jail regularly, carrying God's message of love to these "shut in ones," holding services of song, prayer and Scripture reading. On June last, committees were appointed to visit the almshouse and workhouse monthly. Regular gospel services were held at these places, besides visiting the rooms of the sick and afflicted.

The committee on "Unfermented Wine" has labored faithfully with voice and pen. Six of our churches are using unfermented wine at the Lord's table.

We have had two lectures, one last February, by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, the other last May, by George W. Bain. The latter was given in the interest of the Y. W. C. T. U. and W. C. T. U. Both lectures were a grand success.

A book reception was held last May, with a view of opening a reading room; about two hundred books have been donated, and we hope to carry out this plan this year.

A paper fair was held in December, which proved highly remunerative. The 23d of December was duly observed. Bible readings are held regularly the second Wednesday of every month. On November fourth a gospel temperance mass meeting was held in the First Christian church in order to bring before the public our work and resume our gospel meetings, which had been discontinued through the summer and fall. These meetings are held every Sabbath afternoon at our headquarters, Mrs. C. C. Craig, chairman of committee and leader. Men are being brought to Christ. Forty-five have signed the total abstinence pledge, making sixty-five during the year. Two only of this number have violated their pledge.

A few weeks ago Col. Hoagland, known as the news boys' friend, and who has devoted more than ten years of his life in their behalf, suggested to our ladies that the W. C. T. U. take up this line of work the coming year. His suggestions was favorably received. Mrs. Clark, who has been superintendent of that work for some time, is now a member of our union, and has been appointed chairman of committee, having charge of that line of work.

The press has been extremely kind, giving our items prominent places. The Courier Journal has given us a column semi-monthly, the Democrat, a column weekly; these columns have been prepared most of the time by our president. We also had a column in the Worker, a prohibition paper, and the Southern Herald, until they suspended.

On New Year's day we held a reception at our headquarters from 3 o'clock until 10 p. m. A delightful lunch was served. About three hundred, perhaps more, called; among the number was one of the leaders of the crusade, in Illinois, Col. George W. Bain, also some of our prominent citizens, and ministers. But when those came, for whom we had labored and prayed, our hearts were made glad. They came with firm step, for they had braved the temptations so peculiar to the holidays, and had entered upon the new year with bright hopes, high resolves, and faith in God.

One young man said, "I cannot help drawing the comparison between my surroundings tonight and one year ago." These men talk in our gospel meetings and tell the same sweet story of God's love and salvation through Jesus Christ.

Our officers for this year are: Mrs. W. H. Munnell, president; Mrs Watts, vice president; Mrs. George Mathers, recording secretary; Mrs. Frank Fry, treasurer; F. G. Ferguson, corresponding secretary.

The outlook is encouraging. We have women brave and true, and as we stand upon the threshold of the new year with "willing hearts and ready hands" to work for "God and home and native land," our faith is strong, for we have a sure "foundation."

F. G. FERGUSON, Cor. Sec.

MISSOURI.

BURLINGTON JUNCTION.—The W. C. T. U. of this place held their anniversary on the evening of December 23. It was well attended and the exercises were interesting, although given entirely by home talent.

On January 16 and 17 the fourth district convention met here, and although not as many local unions were represented as we had hoped, yet it was a decided success. Mrs. Hoffman was present and gave two grand addresses, beside much good counsel and encouragement during the sessions. The whole community is aroused.

We have no saloons, but are cursed with drug-stores that carry on the traffic. The death of a young man, occurring the day after the convention, caused by liquor, has still further incensed all temperance people. Our congressional district is not fully organized, but we hope by next July when our next convention meets, that we shall have all our forces in the field. The union here is steadily growing in interest and members, and our Band of Hope is our pride. Missouri is gathering up her forces, and with such a leader as Mrs. Hoffman, will not be far in the rear. L. S. DODDS.

ST. LOUIS.—At the regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. the last of December many interesting reports were given, and the whole view of the work was encouraging. Much temperance literature has been distributed, and many visits to the work-house and jail, and meetings held among the women, taking their pledges to give up drinking. At the annual meeting Col. Hoagland, of Louisville Ky., made a stirring appeal for the news boys, which was promptly met by the union, in the appointment of a committee, out of which grew the St. Louis Newsboys' Association, with a distinct organization and treasury, but reporting quarterly to the W. C. T. U. November 24 the union established its headquarters with the Newsboys' Association. Through the ten days' labors of Mrs. Hoffman, state president, in November, the membership of the union was nearly doubled, now numbering seventy-five, besides forty-six formed into an Auxiliary union in the South Presbyterian church.

In reply to the work of the special committee appointed to present the work of the W. C. T. U. to the Evangelical Alliance and ask for union of temperance sentiment and a contribution in the month of December a resolution was adopted by that body, cordially approving of the work and pledging help whenever it was expedient. A special committee was then appointed to write to each pastor asking the fulfillment of this pledge during December and January. Many cheering responses have been received.

A special committee was also appointed to wait upon Congressman John J. O'Neill, recently placed at the head of a committee upon labor in the house of representatives at Washington. He received the ladies courteously, and was found to be already alive to the demands of the hour, having presented a bill for postal savings banks, which have been so successful in England, and are a great foe to the saloon, Gladstone himself showing how money formerly left in the gin palaces is now deposited in the postal savings banks.

The union holds weekly prayer meetings every Wednesday at 11:30 to 12:30 at headquarters. N.

LAMAR.—A series of meetings has been conducted recently under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. in the M. E. church and the opera house, by George Woodford, with crowded houses and great interest, 371 having signed the pledge. After his last lecture, a free-will offering was solicited to aid the union in carrying on the temperance work, and $46.25 was paid in cash, and nearly $20 or more subscribed. S. H.

KNOB NOSTER.—Six months ago, Mrs. Mary M. Clardy, organized here a W. C. T. U. with nine paying members. We now number fifteen, and thirteen honorary members. We have a Band of Hope and temperance Sabbath school combined, which hold special exercises every fifth Sabbath. On these days, we are assisted by the pastors of the kifferent denominations.

We have lately had our state president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, with us, and enjoyed a pleasant and profitable time during her stay. The 23d of October was observed by us in private devotion in the closet, and in a prayer service in the afternoon, for the national convention. The tenth anniversary we expected to have a regular crusade sermon, especially prepared for the occasion, by Rev. J. H. Gillespie, of the M.E. church, but the bad roads, sleet-covered, made travel so difficult that he was unable to fill the appointment, the remainder of the program was carried out, including the distribution of leaflets (beer series), and fifty copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, purchased for the occasion. As a union we have been for sometime taking two copies of this paper, and I have six new names toward a club of ten and hope to complete it soon.

As a W. C. T. U. we have held our weekly meetings regularly; have kept the Band of Hope supplied with badges, scarfs, charts, and necessary literature. We have paid into the state treasury the sum of $7.50, the same amount to lecturers, have about the same amount now on hand, and today sent $2.00 to the national fund. In my temperance Sunday school class I use Dr. Richardson's lesson book, and we have strong hope of introducing it in the higher rooms of the public schools. We have distributed in the families here, including the colored people, a large quantity of purchased and collected temperance literature, and in every way that we know of, have tried to forward the temperance cause.

MRS. MILLIE C. GILBERT.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.—Our union in the northern part of the city was organized a year ago last December with about a dozen members, under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Ellis, state secretary of New Jersey. She gave us much inspiration and help in planning work, and we tried to carry on these plans when left alone. We held mass meetings and kept temperance before the people. Afterward the ministers and other gentlemen formed an organization among themselves, and gospel meetings have been held since last May four times a week. Over a hundred have signed the pledge, and about eighty have become true Christians.

Mrs. C. F. Lord is our president, a sister of Mrs. Ellis, and we are grateful to God for her large measure of spiritual power and executive ability.

MRS. J. KELLEY.

DAKOTA.

LAKE PRESTON.—The crusade anniversary was appropriately celebrated by the W. C. T. U. of this place, with a most interesting program; and though none here have any personal knowledge of the crusade, yet the fact of observing this anniversary has done much to awaken an interest in the history of this movement, out of which has sprung the W. C. T. U., which by the blessing of God has become such a power for good in our land.

E. J. SPOONER, Cor. Sec.

DELAWARE.

WILMINGTON.—The local unions throughout the state are continuing their work with the determination to persevere until victory is obtained. The Y. W. C. T. U. here is doing a good work. And a flourishing W. C. T. U. was organized among our colored sisters a few weeks ago. Our local union holds a prayer meeting every Tuesday p. m. A. S.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

"It is His birthday—His, the only one
Who ever made life's meaning clear—
Dawn is He to our night."

ASBURY PARK AND OCEAN GROVE W. C. T. Union are increasing in numbers and interest under the leadership of Mrs. Crane. There is strong pressure made upon these places (owing to their prohibitory laws and regulations), the rum seller does not reap here, and eternal vigilance is the price we pay for our safety from his inroads. It is said that the supreme court has decided a case against us in favor of one who has done more to demoralize this community than any other, through his den of iniquity just outside the limit of prohibition.

HACKETTSTOWN College, under the presidency of Dr. Whiting, is preparing its students for noble and effective temperance work. There is no educational institution in the state so pronounced on the temperance question. Dr. W. is one of the great forces who are mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan.

NEPTUNE township, Monmouth county, gives our prohibition standard-bearer a small majority, and he returns to the legislature, where he so honored himself and his constituency last winter. The W. C. T. U's. were at the polls all day with hot coffee and lunch. They did their duty though some opposed.

HADDONFIELD.—The "public good" of this place is assured for another year at least, as the Batesville Hotel alias Blazing Rag, has been licensed for that purpose. Ten votes cast at the late election for prohibition. Little by little Haddonfield will be lifted to a higher plane notwithstanding the Blazing Rag.

NEWARK.—The Fourth W. C. T. U. (colored) celebrated the crusade anniversary with an interesting program. A collection for the national treasury was taken. The pastors generally spoke of temperance in their churches, commending cordially the work of the W. C. T. U.

TENAFLY is strong for prohibition. The people vote as they pray, and are working for the redemption of that "apple jack" cursed county.

LUMBERTON society has sixty-five members all working diligently for total abstinence.

TEXAS.

WHITESBORO.—About two years ago the ladies of this place organized a W. C. T. U. It was good seed sown that did eventually germinate, and with God's help will grow and bring forth much good fruit. The 27th of last November Mrs. Beauchamp came into our midst and suggested a reorganization of the union which was heartily entered into by a few earnest spirits. Twelve ladies and two gentlemen of the number present enrolled their names.

When the business of the evening was dispatched, Mrs. Beauchamp proposed a union Christian temperance mass meeting in the near future.

The proposition was accepted and on the evening of December 16 the Cumberland Presbyterian church of our little city was filled to overflowing and ministers were there to aid us.

Different ones contributed to the interest of the occasion by earnest and timely talks in commendation of the W. C. T. U. and in behalf of the temperance cause.

Mrs. Beauchamp was with us and stated facts in reference to the origin and object of the W. C. T. U.

The audience was exceedingly attentive, and before the meeting closed nearly seventy had signed the pledge.

We meet once a week, and have been much encouraged by additions to our union at almost every meeting. We number over a hundred now.

We will organize a Band of Hope for the children in a few days. ELIZABETH MARCH,
President of Whitesboro W. C. T. U.

MASSACHUSETTS.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE Y. W. C. T. U. NEWS.

The temperance society at Wellesley College, although large and flourishing as to numbers, has not opportunity to do much home work. Beyond one or two open meetings every year, when some earnest worker such as Miss Willard or John B. Gough comes and talks with the girls, little is done at the college itself.

But work enough has been found among the children and factory girls in the neighboring and manufacturing villages.

A wide awake little Band of Hope of twenty-seven members, holding weekly meetings is sustained in Charles River village, about three miles from Wellesley. This is supplemented by the Sunday school work, when one Sunday a month is given up to gospel temperance, with a temperance concert in the evening. As this village has for years been notorious for its intemperance, we feel that these children, with their brave blue ribbons are indeed a Band of Hope.

In another village, for some two years, the factory girls have been organized into a mutual improvement society, called "The Saturday Night Club." Through the efforts of some of the Wellesley girls, this club has recently had the resolution to devote every fourth Saturday night to temperance, and twenty-five out of twenty-seven present on that evening signed the pledge. The work which can be done here seems great, for these girls have almost limitless influence in their village.

As a society we regret that we have not the time to do more of the work which lies so near to us, but we strive to do what we can now, hoping to be able to help in the larger fields by and by.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Our Mountain state moves slowly but surely. The Parkersburg Union called a council of the solid prominent temperance men of the town and asked them to go into the party conventions and secure the nomination of a council pledged against license.

Finding that impossible they held a separate convention, nominated a ticket for which our union worked. The result was the defeat of the republican party who had it in their power to grant our petition, but most flagrantly spurned it. Whether they will profit in the future by the lessons of the past remains to be seen. If they had nominated a ticket that temperance men could have voted for, it would without doubt have been elected. They felt their only safety lay in courting the "bummer" vote. It proved unavailing.

The Wheeling W. C. T. U. has opened a lunch and reading room in that city.

Miss Willard carried captive the hearts of conservative Parkersburg. "Above criticism" was the verdict on her lecture. Your correspondent had a most delightful conference with her and felt almost repaid for missing her lecture, through sickness, by this visit of comfort and consolation.

Next year West Virginia will again petition the legislature for the submission of a prohibitory amendment, nothing daunted by three refusals. "Submission" is our battle cry.

Dr. Warner, a most indefatigable worker, is canvassing the the state and organizing for the coming campaign. The W. C. T. U. is marshalling her clans. The Freeman is her "slogan." Miss Esther Pugh is under promise to "come over and help us" after February 1.

MRS. I. H. JOHNSON.

CALIFORNIA.

POMONA.—Three services were held here commemorative of the decennial, and these were full of interest. Rev. Mr. Mather, at the M. E. church, gave a clear, outspoken temperance sermon in the morning. At the children's meeting in the afternoon, several short, pithy speeches were made by the pastors of the town, after which a number of names were added to the Band of Hope roll.

In the evening, at McComas' Hall, Reverends Latourette, Weller and Mather, and others spoke forcibly for temperance. Mrs. McComas read the crusade psalm, and Mrs. Weller read from Miss Willard's book how one woman secured prohibition for Kansas. Mrs. Lorbeer surprised and gratified the large audience with her recitation of an original poem. More than forty names were added to the list of the W. C. T. U. A deep under current of interest has set in as the result of this celebration. C.

MICHIGAN.

CHELSEA.—We were favored January 5 with the presence of Hughs and Ward. This was once the banner town of the state, but had fallen into a deep sleep; have wakened from our slumber to work for "God and home and native land." They were here two weeks. Held meetings every evening and afternoon. Nine hundred signed the pledge. Organized a large blue ribbon club and a Band of Hope. Closed with a delightful social. Over 300 people present. N.

ILLINOIS.

QUINCY.—The saloons of this city have run on Sundays in open violation of law, for a period of "time so remote that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," but last summer a home protection society was organized, which, after petitioning the "mayor" to pay some little regard to his official oath and being unsuccessful, commenced prosecuting under the criminal code. The grand jury refused to indict; one of them who is of the genus alderman, giving as a reason that he could not conscientiously vote to indict, because it would be too great a restriction of personal liberty, but that same conscience interposed no objection when he called God to be his witness that he would "without fear, malice or favor, inquire into, and true presentment make of all criminal violation etc." Then informations were filed in the county court, and these cases were, of course, continued. Next, complaints were made before a Quincy justice of the peace, and after several days were consumnd in preliminary matters,—the most trivial objections, which in any other proceeding would have been dismissed as unworthy of consideration, being elaborately argued and as usual taken under advisement,—a jury was finally obtained who were not conscientiously opposed to the enforcement of the law the legislature made, and a witness was called and sworn, but cautioned by the court not to answer any question that he (the witness) thought would tend to criminate him, and after testifying that he thought the defendant—a saloon-keeper of ten years standing—kept a saloon, as his name was out on the door of the saloon, and that he (witness) was in no way connected with the defendant in such business as partner, employe or otherwise. He was asked to state whether he had known defendant whithin eighteen months prior thereto to sell any intoxicating drink on Sunday, and witness thought the answer would criminate him; the justice of the peace sustained witness, no evidence could be obtained, and the farce ended with great eclat for the crowd of saloon-keepers there assembled, who had frequently hissed, in open court, counsel for the prosecution while engaged in the discussion of questions raised. All the other prosecutions were at once dismissed and commenced at the opposite side of the county where the air was purer and Gambrinus was not king. Convictions were secured in every case and on last Sabbath, the secret agents of the society could find but one place in nearly 180, where drink could be obtained, and this man was not doing a thriving business, as witnesses fight shy of places where a subpoena inevitably follows, to appear 25 miles in the country to testify about that visit. You see we are not all asleep in Quincy, even.

SAM WOODS.

BELLEVILLE.—Our society is quite small, yet we are steadily persevering in our efforts, believing in final success. We celebrated the crusade anniversary with a most intersting program, following that sent out from the national headquarters as far as possible. Mrs. Kline, Baptist minister's wife, gave us an admirable address. Mrs. S. B. Davis, one of our most liberal and earnest workers, (now in her seventy-sixth year), gave us a very interesting off-hand talk. Thank offering amounted to $8.54. The cause of THE UNION SIGNAL was presented, and pledges were offered. O. N. P.

MACOMB.—A W. C. T. U. was reorganized Jan. 18, by Mrs. Lucy Simpson, with 37 member, with officers as follows: President, Miss Ida Evans; recording secretary, Mrs. Hattie Clarke; corresponding secretary, Miss May Stryker; treasurer, Miss Mary Montfort. Mrs. Simpson's work is highly appreciated by the people, and good results are anticipated, reaching far into the future. W.

AMBOY.—The W. C. T. U. held its seventh anniversary Dec. 13, 1883. The secretary reported thirty-two regular meetings during the past year, and forty-four members,—an increase from the previous year. Mrs. Skelton was with us and remained three days, giving four lectures, and meeting the union and the Band of Hope once. Good seed was sown, and we hope for good results. MRS. M. E. BENEDICT, Cor. Sec.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE CATHOLIC T. A. UNION OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF CHICAGO, FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Resolved, That we regard drunkenness as a vice condemned by the laws of God and the dictates of reason. We also consider it an enemy to religion, a foe to humanity, and we are convinced it tends to the subversion of every principle of good government.

Resolved, That we are fully convinced that this vice owes its prevalence to erroenous ideas regarding the use and sale of intoxicating liquors, whereby private habits are formed and public customs established favoring and encouraging the evil.

Resolved, That in our judgment the remedy is: a correct sentiment as to the nature and tendency of all alcoholic drinks, the practice of total abstinence from motives of religion and humanity, and a system of righteous laws co-operating with moral influences for the overthrow of this enemy to God and man.

Resolved, That we reaffirm the three resolutions of the National Convention at Brooklyn which declare: "That we deplore the conduct of those who, through selfish motives or cowardly silence, have failed to denounce this vice and its abettors."

Resolved, That it is a dire calamity to intrust the management of public affairs and the making of laws for the common good of the whole community to unprincipled men who hold office at the good will of liquor dealers. Such men deserve severe condemnation, because they heed not the sufferings of widows and orphans made destitute by drunkards and drunkard-makers; because they do not construct suitable legislative safeguards along the worn and beaten track of human crime and misery that leads from the doors of low saloons to the jail and poor-house.

Resolved, That Catholic total abstainers and advocates of temperance should fearlessly perform their duties as citizens by public protest against laws calculated to foster intemperance.

Resolved, That we denounce saloon keeping as an odious occupation. It is one of ruin to the bright hopes of youth and the peace of old age. The saloon keeper helps to rob childhood of its delights. His poison steals the laugh from the lips of innocence, the bloom from the cheek of manhood. The sound of his liquid poison as it gurgles down the throat of the inebriate echoes through many a desolate household as the hissing of a thousand serpents.

Resolved, That we look with horror upon the apathy of an enlightened people who entrust the reins of authority and of government to men who hold their caucuses around a saloon counter and make their appointments to public offices at the bidding of saloon keepers.

Resolved, That we rely for success on the Sacraments of the church, on the influence and example of pledged abstainers, and on a vigorous use of those educating agencies which mold and direct public sentiment—the press, the platform and pulpit.

Resolved, That in the name of religion and civilization we appeal to the press to publish such facts and truths as will direct public attention to the evil of intemperance and its causes, as necessary for the well-being of society. We recommend the holding of public meetings to discuss temperance principles and the disseminating of temperance literature as essential auxiliaries in educating public sentiment favorable to temperance, and we beseech the clergy, in the name of our holy religion and for the sake of immortal souls, to present the claims of this great cause whenever and wherever occasion may offer.

Resolved, That we strongly recommend the formation of Cadet societies wherever possible, as on youth rests the hope of society, and in their sympathy and hearty co-operation will be found the life and maintenance of the union.

Resolved, That the claims of the Catholic faith are such that all good Catholics should feel their religion demanded they should lead in this temperance movement. The world expects it, humanity urges it, a burdened country pleads for it. Friends, kindred, home and loved ones, God and Heaven, all beckon us onward to the struggle.

Resolved, That the officers of the local societies are urged, between this day and the time of the next General Convention, on July 13, to make a noble and gallant struggle to increase the membership of their societies to much greater proportions. Let there be no local jealousies. Let the best men stand at the helm. The field is big enough for all. Intemperance is still doing its fell work amongst our brethren in race and religion. Let every society take the Demon Alcohol by the throat and shake off his deadly hold on our people. In every parish where there is a T. A. Society, let the fair form of Temperance rise, like the angel of the resurrection, clothed in raiment white as snow, and let its influence grow and expand, widen and develope till the whole community is leavened by it.

SPRINGFIELD.—On the tenth anniversary of the crusade, several of the ministers of Springfield preached temperance sermons, referring especially to that mighty outburst of sentiment which could no longer be suppressed, and which has resulted in the organization of societies, north, south, east and west, to work "for God and home and Native land." Two Sabbaths later, Rev. Z. Taylor of the Christian church, preached one of the grandest temperance sermons ever heard in this city, and for which our workers will ever hold him in grateful remembrance. At the close, and after a fine temperance anthem by the excellent choir, a collection was taken up and handed over to to Mrs. R. H. Beach, chairman of the committee on temperance literature, which will greatly aid in the gratuitious distribution of the same.

On the second Tuesday of January, in accordance with the call coming from Mrs. Hibben, superintendent of evangelistic work, three hours were spent in prayer and praise in our W. T. C. U. rooms, led by the ministers of the different denominations, alternating each half hour. A more precious season of prayer was never enjoyed—God's spirit was manifest, and all went away strengthened for the conflict against Satan in the form of king alcohol. Before leaving, some of the ministers thanked the ladies for inviting them to participate in this special service, as it had proven a means of grace, and served to awaken them to a deeper sense of responsibility in this great question of the day and hour.

Mrs. S. J. Strong, our county president, and one of our most faithful co-laborers, has removed to Hannibal, Mo. This fact is much regretted. We have no workers to spare in this section of country. The good people of her new place of residence need not be assured that our loss is their gain.

Since our series of costume entertainments, queries have come from various states in regard to the manner of getting them up. We can think of no more pleasing or "taking" entertainments, and consequently each succeeding one draws a larger attendance. Five were given here. There is nothing in the advertisements or on the program, to indicate that they are to be on the temperance order, except the initials W. C. T. U. Yet temperance songs and recitations are interwoven, and persons who came to see the seventy-five different characters, in as many varied costumes, get a good many valuable ideas in connection with the different phases of our grand work, in spite of themselves. Thus we, in a measure may perhaps, obey the Scripture injunction which our beloved Miss Willard is constantly emphasizing—"Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." The $310 piano purchased by the society for entertainments, is now all paid for, and a little remains in the treasury from the proceeds for the purchase of literature.

On the 2d, 3d, and 4th of Feb., we expect to have Geo. W. Bain with us; and on the 26th of March, Mrs. Nelly Bayley, the famous chalk talker, to delight and instruct not only the small children, but those of a larger growth. It is also expected that Rev. H. Barney will soon be here for several weeks' service.

The praises of THE UNION SIGNAL are sounded everywhere, and especially the crusade number, of which fifty extra copies were circulated among our ministers and others not taking it. It is hoped that much good will result, and the list of its subscribers increased thereby.

The "collection of hymns and sacred poems by women," is nearly completed, and it is hoped it will be issued and ready for circulation by June or July. Many thanks to the sisterhood who have so kindly and generously sent in original contributions.

MRS. G. C. SMITH.

—Frances Murphy has written to headquarters, 161 LaSalle street, that he is ready to come into the state for work. His terms are twenty-five dollars per day, and entertainment. This will include a meeting during the day, and one at night. Send to headquarters for applications.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mrs. McLaughlin spent Sunday Jan. 20, in Portsmouth, and spoke in three of the principal churches, to large audiences. A meeting for women was held on Monday, and a new union was organized, with 130 members. President, Mrs. C. E. Knight; secretary, Mrs. Dr. Alden. That same day this tireless worker organized a new union at Newmarket, and on Tuesday at Lake Village.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

THE Virden, Ill., W. C. T. U. paid to the state fund $20 instead of $10 as was incorrectly stated in the account of the convention held there in December.

"GOLDEN opinions" are expressed in regard to Mrs. McLaughlin's recent work in Harrisburg, Penn. The crusade anniversary was appropriately observed by the W. C. T. U. in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, and in the afternoon a meeting was held for the children.

THE W. C. T. U. of Phelps, N. Y., celebrated the Decennial with interesting services, in which they were aided greatly by the pastors of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches. A collection of $5.56 was taken, and new interest in the work is awakened.

Mrs. GWYNN, the energetic president of the Florida state union, is engaged in organizing new societies, and reports two, at Sanford and Orlando, new towns. The workers will push the organization work vigorously until February when the state convention meets.

A NEW W. C. T. U. was recently organized at La Veta, Col., by Mrs. Shields. Gov. St. John begins his course of lectures through the state at Greeley, Jan. 28; will go as far south as Trinidad, and west to Gunnison and Leadville. He will give in all about fifteen addresses.

AT Compton, Cal., the temperance women are especially devoting themselves to the circulation of temperance literature, THE UNION SIGNAL and Miss Willard's "Woman and Temperance" among others, believing that education of sentiment is an essential, need of the work.

AT Dansville, Mich., the W. C. T. U. celebrated the crusade anniversary in a beautifully decorated church, by carrying out the national program, adding one of Mary Lowe Dickinson's inspiring poems. They also distributed a hundred copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, together with temperance leaflets.

ANOTHER good thing to be told of Millville, New Jersey, is the late presentation by the W. C. T. U. of the portrait of Mrs. Hayes to the Workingmen's Institute, a gift acknowledged by a highly appreciative letter from the directors of the latter. The temperance women celebrated the crusade with exquisite decorations and beautiful exercises.

IT is said, authoritatively, that the policy which will be recommended at the annual meeting of the Dominion Alliance, to be held in Ottowa, Canada, near the first of February, will be an immediate, simultaneous submission of the Scott Act in all available counties throughout the Dominion with a view to the polling the country on the prohibition question, and if reasonably successful demanding prohibitory legislation pure and simple.

THE Massachusetts W. C. T. U. will hold a quarterly meeting in Wesleyan Hall, Boston, Jan. 30, at which papers will be given by Mrs. Ada C. Bowles on "Scientific Temperance Instruction in Schools," Mrs. L. P. Choate on "Sunday School Temperance Work," Miss L. K. Hawes on "Temperance Literature," Mrs. M. B. de Normandie on "Juvenile Work," Mrs. C. D. Prescott on "The Results of the Maine Prohibitory Law," Miss M. Wadsworth on "The Restrictions of the License Law," and Mrs. A. J. Gordon on "Present Condition of the Prohibitory Work." Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is president.

WORK FOR SOIDIERS AND SAILORS.

How shall we reach them? Have we any precedent? I am glad to bring to the notice of all who are interested in these two most tempted classes, a method that has been adopted in England for winning them to the service of Christ, which has been attended with remarkable success. This plan consists of letter writing, or personal correspondence. A staff of ladies is engaged in the preparation of monthly letters, which are printed for circulation.

"At present, from five to six thousand copies of the 'Monthly Letter' are issued every month, and transmitted to soldiers serving at home and abroad."

This organization known as the Carus—Wilson Soldiers Friend Society, has been instrumental in the conversion of hundreds of men in the British service.

The work for seamen, which has borne such precious fruit, was begun in the same way, by Miss Agnes Weston, whose sympathy and loving consecration to Christ, led her to be the bearer of good tidings through her pen, to those who go down to the sea in ships.

Beginning with one letter to a Christain sailor going from England to India with his regiment, she was urged to write to others, to whom the letter was shown. The demand continued to grow so that it was impossible to write them; the printing therefore became a necessity. In a few years, the circulation has risen from 500 to 4,000 copies monthly.

The boys, too, from one of her Majesty's ships, waited upon Miss Weston, with the request; "Please ma'am do you think that you could write us boys a letter all to ourselves? We don't understand the men's."

This idea was acted upon at once and in a short time 2,000 copies were issued to the joy of the boys.

Temperance reform has especially occupied the attention of this noble woman—so that it is now estimated, there are 10,000 abstainers in the Royal Navy.

Who will join me in a similar effort to rescue our boys and men of the forts and ships? Can we not talk on paper, kindly and persuasively telling them of a more excellent way to pass away their hours of leisure, than dice-throwing and card playing and beer-drinking? Why should not our young ladies take up this as one branch of work in their temperance unions? Many have the pens of ready writers, and love as they say "to scribble."

Will such girls send me a valentine for one of my boys? I propose to send a real loving, Christly letter to be received on St. Valentine's Day, by many a "forlorn, homeless brother, sailing o'er life's troubled main" who, reading, "shall take heart again."

Join me, dear sisters of the temperance unions, young and old all over the land, in this enterprise—send me a written missive—a hymn, a poem, or a friendly line some time during January—and thus consecrate your pens to Christ, for the New Year 1884.

Hoping for many responses,

SARAH A. MCCLEES,
Nat. Supt. of Department.

RELATION OF INTEMPERANCE TO CAPITAL AND LABOR.

To Presidents of State and Local Unions:

I come to you again in the interest of the department of the "Relation of Intemperance to Capital and Labor," to which was added at the last national convention, "Relative Statistics." We earnestly desire you will take up the work of these departments; and while we would suggest a line of work to be followed, we in no wise would be arbitrary, and would say, Do the work as best you can. Our leading thought is to interest employers in the subject of temperance, not only for themselves, but for the best good of those employed.

During three years past, many employers have been visited, and thousands of pages of literature, bearing especially upon the subject of making total abstinence a condition of employment, have been circulated.

The work has been of slow growth, but not without success; and numbers are now considering the desirability of such a law.

Difficulties have attended its prosecution, but who that has gone forth in the name of our Divine Lord, doing the work in a womanly way, has not been blessed? Leaving results with Him, who watches the seed sown until it shall spring up and bear fruit.

We suggest first, that state presidents see that superintendents of this department be speedily appointed, who shall confer with presidents of local unions, in regard to appointing committees.

Second. That employers be called upon, as far as possible, personally, inquiring if it is a law with them to employ only temperance men, leaving with them for consideration, literature especially prepared for this department. Among a number of tracts to be found at Miss Julia Colman's, 72 Bible House, New York, are, "Skilled Workmen," "Words from the Work-shop," "Tracts for Employers," "Safety in Business," and many others, equally adapted to the employer.

Third. If agreeable to the employer, "Tracts and Leaflets" may be left with the employe suggesting the benefit of total abstinence, such as "The Workingman's Experiment." "Buy your own Goose." "Advantages of Temperance." "The Losing Bank" and others.

Fourth. Secure space in daily or weekly newspapers for short articles on the subject.

Fifth. In all your work aim to keep before the mind of employer and employe the advantage of temperance, not only as a monetary and business interest, but the great good accruing to family and individual, reaching out to public trust and responsibility. "Relative Statistics:" All reliable facts and statistics which can be gathered in regard to money invested in the liquor traffic in your state town or city. Amount lost through intoxication. Number of criminal cases tried and sentenced, cost of trying the same, directly or indirectly caused through the use of intoxicants.

Number of persons lodged in jails, almshouses, houses of correction, reformatory schools, brought there through the use of intoxicating drink. Cost of maintaining persons in these institutions. Please keep careful account of all work done so as to make full report to me in time for the next national convention.

A circular letter prepared especially for employers and which will aid in your work will be sent on application to

FATHER HAGAN, at Joliet, Ill: If saloon-keeping was made what it is—odious—our Irish people, talented as they are, when all offices are open to them would obtain higher places in statesmanship, higher places in the commerce and traffic of the nation. For that reason I would have them educated to make saloon-keeping odious, and saloon-drinking odious—something beneath the ambition of an American citizen—a citizen living in such a free, grand, bounteous, noble country. [Applause.] This language may seem severe, but when the truth is to be spoken it may as well be spoken truthfully. There may be one model saloon-keeper—one who does not sell to minors, to drunkards, to a man when he is drunk, nor charge more than market value for the liquors, or adulterate it with vile drugs. Some Diogenes with his lamp may find such a saloon-keeper between the south and the north pole, but I do not know him. [Applause.]

THE late Queen of Madagascar was crowned, with a table beside her on which lay a Bible and the laws of Madagascar. She sat beneath a canopy, on the four sides of which were inscribed the mottos, "Glory to God," "Good will to men," "Peace on earth," and "God be with us."

IT surprises American readers of English papers to see that "the honorable mayor presided" at a temperance meeting and speeches in favor of local option were made by from two to six aldermen!

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

THE PENOGRAPH.—For more than thirty years inventive genius has industriously labored to produce a perfectly automatic fountain pen. Numerous devices, possessing various degrees of merit, have been patented and extensively sold; and most of them have worked splendidly till one or more of their delicate parts gave out and had to be repaired. But all defects hitherto encountered have been remedied in what is termed the Penograph. In the Penograph all small and complicated contrivances are dispensed with. Although the pen appears to be small it will write just as well as the largest. It is capable of producing the finest hair lines as well as heavy shaded strokes. The pen is of solid gold, first quality diamond pointed. With fair usage it will last a lifetime. The case is vulcanized rubber, handsomely finished. In our opinion the Penograph, as illustrated above, is well calculated to supercede all other writing pens and pencils in daily use. Its flow of ink is automatic and free, but never too profuse. It sheds ink when in use and stops when the pen ceases to move. It needs no wiping and no dipping for ink. It is carried in the pocket always ready for use on any kind of paper. It costs no more than is usually charged for a first class gold pen and holder without the fountain. It is fully warranted and may be returned if it fails to meet the expectations of any person who shall read the above. Price $3, postpaid. An extra pen will be given to any subscriber who shall send us $9 for a club of three Penographs. All postpaid.

We offer the above Penograph as a present to any one sending us five new subscribers at $1 75.

AMMUNITION FOR TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM:

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and sufiering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Signal Notes.

PROHIBITION was enacted in the new constitution of Virginia in 1676.

GENERAL LEWIS CASS enacted prohibition for "any camp, fort or garrison of the United States" on November 2, 1832.

A NEW YORK chemist says that he wants nothing more than three pails of water and twenty cents' worth of drugs to make six gallons of just such champagne as fools pay a dollar a pint for.

THE Social Reformer of Sidney, N. S. Wales, advertises the officers of the Local Option League of N. S. W. Two lord bishops, two deans, six other ministers, and some others of high standing, are among its vice presidents, and the central committee of nineteen is headed with five clergymen.

THE good folks of Paisley, Scotland, were busy the other day unveiling a statue of Robert Tannahill, a working weaver of that town, who is said to rank next to Burns as a writer of lyrics. His story, however, was a sad one. People admired his cleverness, sent him numberless invitations to festive gatherings, and too much hospitality led to overdrinking, so that at the comparatively early age of thirty-six his career was closed as that of many another genius has been.

A SENSIBLE offer was recently made to the executive of the Manchester Infirmary, (England) by a gentleman who proposed to hand over the sum of £1,000 for the purpose of an experiment which should fairly test the value of alcohol in medical and surgical cases, furnishing a comparison between the results in two wards, in one of which alcohol should be used, while excluded from the other. If fairly tried such an experiment could not fail to be interesting.

JUDGING from a return recently signed by the commanding officer of an English regiment it would seem likely that abstainers would be in favor with military men. It seems that of the 810 men forming the regiment 291 were abstainers, and in a period of six months 24 of the abstainers were charged as regimental defaulters, and 447 non-abstainers. Of 242 men sent to the hospital 40 only were abstainers, and while 47 were tried by court-martial or imprisoned by the commanding officer one only of the number was a teetotaler. The figures certainly are suggestive.

ALL science is one. One department of human knowledge cannot contradict another in the nature of things. If it could, it would not be genuine science, which is nothing else but a perception of truth in its manifold relations, but science falsely so called. Hence, as we have seen, moral science agrees with hygiene in condemning the use of alcohol as a beverage, because it defiles the body, the temple of God. As long as that law stands on the divine statute book, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," just so long is the highest sanction set to the verdict of human science which pronounces alcoholism the poison of soul and body. So too with political science which has to do with the health of the state. Here the verdict is the same. The state is nothing more than an aggregate of individuals, a collection of families. The same laws obtain here as in the family or the individual. What is injurious or wholesome for the one is no less so for the other. Practical statesmen realizes more and more that political morality and political economy are in no wise different from private morality and personal economy. What corrupts the man, destroys him body and soul, corrupts and destroys the state. And yet how many blots and blemishes remain in our legislation and how much confusion on this point even in the minds of our wisest Christian legislators! No where more so than in reference to the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits. Almost universally this is regarded as a legitimate industry, a fit subject for license as a source of revenue. But license means sanction, and by drawing the means of support from this source the state becomes particeps criminis with the distillery and the dram-shop. She oils her machinery with the blood of the poor inebriate and like the mystic Babylon of St. John traffics in the souls of men. Is the indictment too severe?—T. Romeyn Beck.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE New York correspondent of the Boston Herald says that not more than one-third of the ministers of New York city are total abstainers.

LESS than $2,000,000 are given by America for the world's salvation by means of missions, and yet $600,000000 are paid for the annual national drink, bill.

Temperance Review: We cannot give the full prohibition vote until after the state [Minnesota] canvass. It will be between five and six thousand, more than double any former year.

HON. THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN said: "If men will engage in this disastrous traffic; if they will stoop to degrade their reason and reap the wages of iniquity, let them no longer have the law-book as a pillar, nor quiet conscience with the opiate of a court license."

EX-LIEUTENANT Governor Cumback, of Indiana, says: "The average saloon keeper has no politics. He will be a rampant republican today and a roaring democrat tomorrow, just as he may promote his traffic. His politics may be said to be the unrestrained right to sell a cent's worth of beer for a nickle, and two cents' worth of whisky for a dime. No other question in politics interests him beyond that.

SOMEBODY has been hunting up certain rules of social etiquette set forth a century ago about Catherine II. of Russia for the benefit of her people, and very odd rules not a few of them are. Among other matters ladies were forbidden on any account whatever to get drunk at social gatherings. A little more license was accorded to gentlemen, but they were told that they must not be intoxicated before nine o'clock in the evening. Pleasant little parties they must have been when such regulations had to be laid down and enforced.

CAVE CITY is in the eastern part of Calaveras county. It once contained 1,000 inhabitants, but on the failure of the gravel mines the population diminished as in other mining towns, till at present the "City" consists of a hotel, a saloon, and a haystack. A few of the curiosities of early times still remain to the place. One of these is the graveyard on the hillside above the town. It contains sixteen graves, fifteen of them filled by men who died with their boots on between '50 and '56.

THE Commercial Gazette—doubtless in view of recent atrocities in Cincinnati—laments the increase of brutal crimes, and says:

"The practice of our courts in case of great crimes has strangled the law. The courts have become instrumentalities to protect the guilty. The more horrible the crime, the less likely a conviction. The public have no confidence that a murderer will be hanged by the court. They have no respect for the administration of law. Why should criminals have any fear of it? The only real administration of justice in atrocious crimes is by Judge Lynch. Why should it not execute when the courts have strangled the law?"

THE NEW REMINGTON MANUFACTURING AND FAMILY MACHINES.—The Remington Company have brought out a manufacturing machine which reflects the highest credit upon the concern as builders of sewing mechanism. It is styled the No. 5, and cannot fail to meet with great success, as it embodies features which make it the peer of the very best manufacturing machines produced by any of the rival sewing machine manufacturers. What these features are, sewing machine people will be interested in knowing.

The bed of the machine is level with the surface of the table, the latter being countersunk to receive it.

The arrangement of the mechanism is such that five and a quarter stitches are made to every revolution of the wheel. It is therefore very speedy, and can be run practically at 1,200 stitches per minute.

Decided improvements have been made in the lifter, feed-bar connection, cylindrical snuttle, take-up, and the levers which communicate the motion to the shuttle and feed. It has the plate tension, which has been so much commended on the family machine.

Vibration is reduced to a minimum.

Very great care has been taken in the case-hardening of all the wearing points. For general durability, the Remington Company claim that their No. 5 machine can not be excelled by any sewing machine made by any company whatever. The arm, wheel, stand and treadle are models of strength and durability. The finish of the machine throughout is excellent, worthy in all respects of the name of Remington.

We cordially recommend the Remington No. 5 to the trade and the consumer. It is an excellent machine, and in every way comes up to what is claimed for it.

It may incidentally be mentioned here that the Remington popular Family Machines, which partake largely of the characteristics of the manufacturing machine which we have described, is meeting with a very satisfactory demand, its sales steadily increasing both at home and abroad.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO 6. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 7, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Public Leader (liquor organ of Michigan) publishes in full Dr. Dio Lewis' article on prohibition with approval.

THE executive committee of the national prohibition home protection party has issued a call, signed by the chairman, Gideon T. Stewart of Ohio, for a national convention at Piftsburg, Pa., May 21, 1884, for the purpose of nominating prohibition candidates for president and vice president of the United States.

THE American party managers—Senator Pomeroy at their head, have addressed an open letter to the executive committee of the prohibition party, asking that there may be such united action of the two parties as will result in one nomination for both. The American party has as strong a prohibition plank as the party committed to that cause and while its main effort is directed against secret organizations as contrary to the spirit of American institutions and true liberty, it nevertheless embraces all the reforms that are dear to the hearts of prohibitionists.

THE impersonality of modern journalism causes many a rose "to blush unseen." If its fragrance however shall always fulfill the intended mission as has been the case with one "we wot of" even glowing color and exquisite unfolding may be kept without injustice in the background. For three quarters of a year, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, has been the valued coadjutor in UNION SIGNAL editorial labor. Her retirement from these labors, necessitated by health and home cares, is regretted by none more than the editor who knows how true hearted has been her devotion to this work, how tender her love for it. It is but a tardy justice rendered now when we say that some of the most exquisite bits of editorial and contributed matter which have found their way to our columns have been from this gifted woman's pen, which will still be at the service of the W. C. T. U. and its national organ.

How much the temperance reform owes to "modern improvements!" The steam engine whirls our workers from sea to sea—the electric telegraph makes their engagements—the telephone carries their splendid speeches to the "shut ins"—and now comes the stereopticon and offers to bear the temperance gospel to every creature that walks the streets. In Boston the W. C. T. U. have arranged with an Illuminated Advertising company for the privilege of throwing some two hundred illuminated object lessons by means of the stereopticon on one of the great thoroughfares of the city every Saturday night of the year. The streets in the vicinity are thronged continually during the evening, and groups of young and old stop to see the pictures as they are run through, creating much comment, sowing seeds of truth in the minds of those who never hear a temperance lecture or read a temperance paper. Besides these slides prepared to order, the proprietors have interested themselves and bought sets of slides, "Sewall's Stomach Plates," "The Bottle," and others which they exhibit gratuitously, as their contribution to the cause. One feels inclined to shout at such tidings, "Shine abroad, thou temperance gospel!" and to take a long breath of inspiration and courage.

"TAKE the safe path, for I am following you," is the theme of a paragraph by Henry Ward Beecher as well as the name of a tract by Rev. Charles Garrett. Mr. Beecher says:

> In all your virtues, in all your rectitudes and in all your liberties, you are not to go trampling like an elephant through a chicken yard, crushing everything that comes under your ponderous foot. Remember the men round about you, and see to it that your knowledge and your liberty do not work destruction to them. Suppose, as I have said on another subject, a narrow path which an expert could walk, running along the face of a cliff to a spring. You could go down easily, it is rather a pleasurable excitement to you, and dip water out of the spring and drink it, and turn and come up safely; but it is in the neighborhood of a school of children, and they seeing you do it, think they can do it too. One goes down and tumbles over; another goes down and plunges over. Would you go down such a path as that, knowing that the children would follow you? No matter if it was a spring of medicine, you would not do it.

ON Wednesday of last week Senator Blair asked leave to present to the senate a petition signed by about 4,000 citizens of the District of Columbia, and other petitions signed by large numbers of the citizens of the territories of Washington, Dakota and Idaho, all praying for the enactment by congress of a law prohibiting the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the district and territories.

In presenting these petitions Mr. Blair said that for many years petitions of this character had been coming to both branches of congress without as yet any tangible result. During all these years the agitation had been constantly gaining strength. He looked upon the problem involved as one of the most serious which can engage attention, not alone from the standpoint of the moral reformer, but as well from that of the economist and statesman. It demanded at the hands of congress as profound study as any subject which could come before it. In the remarks a few days ago of the senator from Maine, Mr. Frye, that gentleman had shown how the rules of congress on the subject of liquors in the capitol had been set at naught, and an impression was widely prevalent among the people that the capitol itself had come to be used as a sort of national groggery. If this impression was an error it should be corrected, and, if founded on fact, the fact should be promptly and effectively dealt with. What congress had thought fit to do for the capitol it had no reason for refusing to do for the district in which the capitol was situated. There could be no doubt of the authority of congress in the matter, either in the district or in the territories. Whether prohibition was the best method of dealing with the evils of intemperance or not, it was certain that a large proportion of the most thoughtful and conservative, as well as most liberal minds among the American people, believed it to be the only complete remedy. Mr. Blair quoted statistics to show the favorable effects of prohibition in the states which had adopted it. These petitions, Mr. Blair continued, had come here under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which he looked upon as one of the most powerful agencies for good which the world had yet seen, and as the subject, from its seriousness and importance, was fast forcing itself upon the attention of the American people he hoped it would receive the earnest consideration of congress. Washington, especially as it was the representative city, should also be the model city of the Union, and congress had full power there to deal with any matter affecting the welfare of the people, in which respect the question involved in these petitions was second to none.

He also asked to have printed in connection with his remarks the statement recently made by James A. Troutman of the Kansas Temperance Alliance, the substance of which has been given to our readers. Leave was granted and the paper appeared in full in the congressional record.

THE Evening Star of Washington, speaks of these petitions as fairly "flooding the senate." Every senator had a roll neatly tied with the white ribbon, and altogether they were poured in by the bushel. In this connection it is scarcely necessary to be said that Senator Blair ought to be kept in the United States senate till the prohibition flag floats not only over the District of Columbia and the territories, but over the sovereign states as well. The temperance people of New Hampshire ought to see to it that he is re-elected next June, and surely there are enough of them to accomplish it.

A LESSON ON DRUNKENNESS.*

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING.

"Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contention?" etc. Proverbs xxiii. 29-35.

Intemperance is one of the most frequent of all themes of sermons and addresses, and the various branches of this great subject touch almost every condition of personal, social, political, and religious life. The temptation to it is so universal, its woes are so many and so widely spread, its effects are so extended, that any treatment of the subject seems unsatisfactory which does not include them all. The Bible does consider it in all its phases, and shows that intemperance, with all other sins, springs from a sinfulness which is common to all mankind, and shows also that the true remedy for it, as for all sins, lies in the deliverance divinely provided for the sinfulness which is their root.

But this passage simply describes the drunkard's condition, shows the way in which he becomes a drunkard, and tells how to avoid being a drunkard.

I. The drunkard's condition is described. Woes and sorrows, strifes and anxieties, wounds and diseases, deadened perceptions and a destroyed will mingle in this awful picture. Here is disclosed a general wreck of manhood. "Drunkenness," says a vigorous writer, "is a distemper of the head, a subversion of the senses, a tempest of the tongue, a storm in the body, the shipwreck of virtue, the loss of time, a willful madness, a pleasant devil, a sugared poison, a sweet sin, which he that hath hath not himself, and he that commits it doth not only commit sin, but is himself altogether sin."

But let us separate the description into—

1. Physical evils. Alcohol vitiates the blood, and fills it with poisonous humor, which makes wounds where there has been no external injury, and bloodshot eyes. Dr. Richardson, in his "Diseases of Modern Life," says that the heart which beats one hundred and six times in twenty-four hours when in its natural condition, beats one hundred and thirty-one times in the same period after six ounces of fluid alcohol has been taken. When this increased excitement becomes permanent, because of the continued use of intoxicants, the constant distension of the blood-vessels under this increased pressure causes the flushed face and red eyes. The various membranes in which the brain, muscles, and other organs are enclosed, which furnish to each part the food appropriate to it for building up the body, becomes thickened, shrunk, and inactive. The changes which follow produce gross and enfeebled bodies, diseases of the heart, lungs, and other organs, and a constant waste of physical powers. The appetite which is thus created is itself a disease. A morbid craving is awakened, which is often the beginning of madness. Then follow weakened nerves, disordered functions, blurred vision; the victim continually seeking a remedy in that which causes the disease.

These physical results of intemperance are clearly stated in the Bible, and are illustrated by sad examples before all eyes. Says an eminent physician: "This country is honey-combed all over with the graves of men and women who have died in the prime of their lives, because they thought themselves wiser than God." Nothing is more certain or more evident than these physical consequences of alcoholic drinks.

2. Mental evils. Alcohol directly affects the brain. It is often used for that purpose. It creates sometimes an unnatural brilliancy of intellect. But this brief advantage is purchased at the cost of the mind itself. When it is often repeated, it soon results in a weakened memory, a judgment destroyed, an intellect confused. "Thine eyes shall behold"—literally—"strange things, and thy heart shall utter perverse things." The thoughts pass from under the control of the will. The man becomes unreliable, ceases to be trusted by others, ceases to trust himself. Despair is deepened by the shadows of lost opportunities, and by the sense of this weakness at which the world seems to mock, and which makes the future a dread. Often recklessness follows despair. There is a brief period of degradation, and then a drunkard's grave.

But while such a picture is so common that every one recognizes it, other effects on the mind, more remote, perhaps not less common, certainly not less dreadful, follow habits of drinking that are less conspicuous. Dr. Henry Maudsley once traced back for four generations the history of an idiotic youth, in the asylum at Rome. In the first generation he found the habit of drinking, —the great-grandfather was finally killed in a tavern brawl. In the second, he found hereditary drunkenness, ending in paralysis: in the third, the father of the youth sober by habit, but the victim of delusions and diseased tendencies: in the fourth, stupidity, and the beginning of idiocy at sixteen years. Dr. Howe, of Massachusetts, found that fifty per cent of the idiots he examined were the offspring of intemperate parents.

It is said that alcohol, every year turns two hundred thousand little children into vagabondage and misery,—a pitiful multitude, enshrouded with sorrow from their birth, hurt beyond help before they draw their first breath of pain. So cruel is every father who is a drunkard. Drink destroys not only the mind of the drunkard, but the minds of his offspring.

3. Moral and spiritual evils. Drunkenness inflames the passions, so that they demand satisfaction with a clamor which drowns conscience. It produces indifference to the greatest dangers, insensibility to the warning of conscience or the contempt of men.

It leads to contentions that destroy friendships, and invade the most tender and sacred relations. A young man, drinking in a saloon one night, remarked that he must go home to his wife and baby, when a man in rags and with bloated face staggered up to him and said, pointing to the cemetery just in sight: "I had a wife and baby once, and they lie over there now. Don't stay here if you have some one who loves you at home." There is hardly a village cemetery in the land into which intemperate husbands and fathers have not driven and buried their shattered hopes.

Drunkenness is the great cause of crime. One hundred thousand people are yearly sent to prison in this country because of intoxicating drinks. Chief Justice Davis, of New York, says that, as the result of a long judicial experience, he is convinced that among all the causes of crime "intemperance is the unapproachable chief." Says the London Times: "The use of strong drink produces more idleness, crime, want and misery than all other causes put together." Said Governor Dix, of New York: "Intemperance is the undoubted cause of four-fifths of all the misery in the state." Such testimony no trustworthy person has ever ventured to contradict.

Drunkenness destroys self-control, and thus overthrows the citadel of manhood. Yet while the drunkard curses this enemy, he obeys it with abject slavishness. "When shall I awake?" he says, "I will seek it yet again." In the face of the remembered misery the intense craving of his diseased appetite moves him to seek anew the cause of his degradation. He has played with temptation till he has been caught in its snare. He has sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. He has wilfully sinned till his power to overcome sin has perished. His own iniquities have taken him, and he is bound with the cords of his sins. His defiled conscience, trembling beside the grave of his buried will, still tortures him as he hurries helplessly to his doom,—the most awful that he can imagine. For no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God. By his own sin he has chosen a place with the damned.

This picture is no strange sight. There is hardly a corner in the land where it may not be seen. Several years ago statistics were gathered which showed that one out of every eight New England boys who grew to manhood became a drunkard. Every eighth man, a neighbor and brother of all the others, was thus detailed for a sacrifice to the devil. Let us hope that the proportion is not now so large. But there is hardly a community in which this Sunday school lesson will be taught in which there are not men on whom the seal of the destroyer is already set. Whatever lessons from the Bible are obscure to many, this one concerning the consequences of intoxicating drink must be patent to all.

II. The steps by which men become drunkards. In Solomon's time the answer to the question in which he mentioned the troubles which marred the splendor of his reign, and sought their cause, was found in one word—wine. Alcohol was then used mainly in that form. Today it is used in liquids, fermented and distilled, intensified and diluted in many ways. But usually the appetite for it is first created through its weaker forms,—through wine, beer, and cider, or in decoctions prepared in various ways. In these it is pleasant to the taste, it attractive to the eye, exhilarating in its effects. At first is taken only occasionally, and at the invitation of others. Simple conformity to the customs of the table or of society has led multitudes from the occasional taste of wine to the habitual use of stronger liquors, and then to slavish surrender to an imperious appetite, and to final destruction of body and soul. Its first attractions are seductively inviting. It shows a brilliant color in the cup. It moves itself aright to the taste, goes down smoothly and pleasantly. But its final effects are in sharp and awful contrast with its earlier temptations. "At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."

Literature lends its voice to these enticing temptations. The hand of genius has oft portrayed the enjoyments of good fellowship over the wine-cup, both in picture and story. But the delightful jollity pictured by Dickens and other writers is the first stage, when the wine gives its color to the cup and moves itself aright. The red, bloated scarred face, the bleared eye, swollen veins, staggering body, brutal curses, violence, and outrage of miserable homes is the last stage.

Those who have acted the principal part in this terrible tragedy, from its alluring beginning till near its gloomy close, have also testified from experience to the temptations before which they have themselves helplessly fallen. The steps by which men walk along the first pleasant path of the drunkard's experience, down to the very verge of the bottomless abyss, could hardly be more vividly described than by Charles Lamb, in the warning which he sends back to yet unfallen youth:—

"The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I would cry out to all those who have but set foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth, to whom the flavor of his first wine is delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly-discovered paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is, when a man shall feel himself going down a precipice with open eyes and a passive will, to see his destruction and have no power to stop it, and yet to feel it all the way emanating from himself, to perceive all goodness emptied out of him, and yet not to be able to forget a time when it was otherwise, to bear about the piteous spectacle of his own self-ruin; could he see my fevered eye, feverish with last night's drinking, and feverishly looking forward for this night's repetition of the folly, could he feel the body of the death out of which I cry hourly with feebler outcry to be delivered, it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of his mantling temptation, to make him clash his teeth."

An Eastern fable says that "a king once allowed the devil to kiss him on either shoulder. Immediately two serpents grew from his shoulders. Furious with hunger these serpents attacked his head, and attempted to get at his brains. The king pulled at them and tried to tear them away. He soon saw, with a horror not to be described, that they had become parts of himself, so that in wounding them he was lacerating his own flesh." Those who allow themselves to acquire the habit of drinking make that which they hate a part of themselves.

III. The way to avoid being a drunkard. "Look not on the wine." Let alcohol alone. By Scriptural admonitions, solemn and repeated, by a literature of both history and science, forceful and abundant, by example in the ever-moving, unnumbered army, the waste the pauperism, the crime, and the eternal ruin of immortal souls for whom Christ died which come from intemperance are set before us all. All this comes from an indulgence in alcoholic drink that was moderate in the beginning. No one ever deliberately determined to be a drunkard, or to commit the crimes to which drunkenness has led. But the use of spirituous liquors creates a diseased appetite which, when once it gains the mastery, is strong as death, and insatiate as the grave. Not all who take the first glass of wine become drunkards; but every one who drinks for the excitement which alcohol produces exposes himself needlessly to this awful peril; offers himself to an enemy from which he will be powerless to escape. "Look not on the wine." So simple and certain is the safeguard. Millions have perished, and are perishing who have neglected it.

Perhaps no temptation to drink is more dangerous than that which makes it a sign of good fellowship, which regards the resolute refusal as an evidence of meanness, and praises the companionable and generous youth who risks, for the pleasure of an hour, his father's substance, his mother's heart, and his own immortal soul. But the true prince of good fellows is he who resolutely refuses to enter the open path, at the end of which, however distant, is the cup that biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder; who builds up a character for integrity and self-control; who loves his fellow-men for the divine possibilities that are in them, and who treats each human being with reverence, born of the conviction that each is capable of being like the Son of God.

Total abstinence, then, is the only safe ground to stand upon. But the Christian will do more than hold himself in safety. He loves men for Christ's sake. Here is a great evil which is destroying in vast numbers those for whom Christ died. The Christian must give all the weight of his influence, by example and word and action, as a Christian, a neighbor, and a citizen, against this evil.

Two great principles cover the whole ground,—that our own ideal is to be perfection, and that no one lives to himself alone. But let no one underestimate the power of this temptation for himself. No one, man, woman, or child, is beyond being assailed by it. No one, now free from it, can estimate his ability to resist it when once it has begun its hold on him; for it vitiates the powers of the body, weakens the conscience, destroys the will. God only can deliver from it, and He only can keep us safe from its grasp. Let us every one keep that in mind as we daily pray to be delivered from evil.

WHY DAN DRANK.

BY EMILY CLEMENS PEARSON.

As Captain Holden opened his barn door very early one summer morning, a forlorn young man arose from the hay loft and stammered:

"Got any work for me, Cap'n?"

"You want work? Well, well, we'll see. Go into the house and get breakfast, and when the six mule team comes back you can rub and feed 'em and start off with another load." He well knew Dan's ability, when not under the influence of drink, for he had often employed him.

Dan started for the house, but felt no appetite. His head ached to bursting, and he trembled nervously. As he entered the house he met kind Mrs. Holden, who, seeing his condition, invited him to sit down and she would bring him a cup of strong coffee.

"Thank you kindly, ma'am, I would like a cup of coffee," said Dan.

"Shall I get you something to eat?"

"Thank you, I cannot eat," he replied

"O Dan!" exclaimed the lady, as she took a seat opposite him at the table, "you are killing yourself. Why don't you stop drinking?"

"I know I ought to ma'am. I've wasted thousands of dollars just to paint the drunkard's sign on my face, and to fill me with aches and pains."

"Why don't you turn over a new leaf, and stop at once?"

"I did stop once," said Dan, "and signed the pledge, and didn't drink a drop for four years and six months. Then something happened to discourage me, and I took to drinking worse than ever. I had the delirium tremens and suffered horribly; no tongue can tell how much."

"But how came you to break your pledge?" asked the lady.

"Let me go back and tell about my life. I never have had any home, or anybody to help me. My mother died when I was three years old, and my father when I was four years. I grew up in the stables with the hostlers, and learned to drink when I was a youngster. I don't know what possessed me. Perhaps it was in the blood.

"When I was seventeen years old my uncle died and left me ten thousand dollars. Then I gave up work and spent more than half of it before I took a rest. When I saw Mary McKenzie, I grew sober, for I loved her. She promised to marry me. I was twenty-four, and had a good salary as head hostler in a large livery stable.

"I thought the world of Mary. She was rosy, merry, and smarter than lightning. I could kiss the ground she trod on.

"I said to her one evening as we went to walk:

"'Mary, we'll marry at once, and go to housekeeping.'

"'All right,' said she, blushing with a bright smile.

"Then I said, 'There is $750 which I have drawn from the bank (and I gave her a package), get what housekeeping things we want. The house is ready, No. 10, Park street.'

"'All right,' said she, taking the package, smiling and blushing, 'you're a jewel, Dan.'

"I felt well paid by her loving smile and handsome speech.

"'Tomorrow night,' said I, 'if it is pleasant, we will meet under this window and go and get married.'

"She agreed to this, and I saw her to her boarding house.

"The next night it was misty, but not rainy. I went to the place appointed, but Mary was not there.

"The night after I went, but no Mary came to meet me.

"The next day Pat Sullivan said, 'Who do you think I saw in New York, Dan? I saw your Mary.'

"'You're joking!' said I.

"'I saw her as true as I'm a living man,' said he. 'She'd run off with Con Lawson.'

"I couldn't speak. My head was in a whirl. I felt as if some one had knocked me down.

"Mary false! Then the world was all dark to me. I wanted to die. I went back to drinking to drown my trouble."

"I am very sorry for you, Dan," said Mrs. Holden. "But what a blessing that you did not marry her! It was well that you found out that she was false in time."

"Yes, yes, I know it," replied Dan, "but the poor thing only lived one month after she went away, and I forgave her."

"Let me tell you one thing," said Mrs. Holden, "troubles are not intended to upset us, but to make us patient. If you had gone to God with your trial He would have blessed you and made a strong man of you."

"I suppose He would," said Dan. Mrs. Holden saw with clear perception that when one makes apology for wrong doing one seldom gives an honest excuse, and she said:

"Dan, you give your dreadful trial as an excuse for drinking, but it is not the right excuse. Back of all you loved liquor, and you took to drinking because you loved it. Isn't that so?"

"I'm hit! It's just so," said Dan.

"You are not alone, Dan," said the lady, "in framing an excuse for evil doing. Farmer Jones says he needs liquor to help him in haying time. He loves liquor, and it is always 'haying time' with him."

"Tim Carroll, teamster, gives as his excuse that he is so pestered with rheumatism that he cannot do without it. A false reason; it poisons his blood, stiffens his muscles and sinews. His simple explanation should be, 'I love it.'"

"George Lewis, blacksmith, has found out that his well is foul, and the water does not agree with him, so he drinks cider and brandy or something alcoholic. Mark my words, hard drinkers deceive themselves with pretences. You say you went back to wickedness because you were disappointed in love."

"I own up. If I hadn't loved liquor I'd have left it alone," said Dan.

"Now Dan," said Mrs. Holden, "if you ask God to help you He will surely do it, and you can stop drinking. Will you ask Him?"

"I will," and Dan having finished his coffee, with firm resolve went out to his teaming, praying mentally, "O God, please help me!"

He had more of the courage and bearing of a man than he had had for many a day.

When next Mrs. Holden saw him and asked him how he was getting along he replied:

"I'm all right, ma'am. I haven't touched a drop for a month, and I've had two or three chances a day. I thank you for speaking to me in time. God is kindly helping me."

A year has passed and Dan's good record is going on.

OUR STREET CAR MISSIONARY.

BY MRS. J. F. WILLING.

To reach the people we must go where they are. They will not run after us and beg for the gospel. The tastes of the masses are so perverted, that men will go into any out of the way place to get their beer and whisky, but milk has to be put in at their doors.

Missionaries in India regard the mela as their grand opportunity for preaching the gospel; an immense fair where everybody comes for some heathen observance, or to sell his wares, all moving this way and that, coming and going, hither and thither, congregations as excited and unsettled as bees in swarming time; yet it is the missionary's best chance, for then he gets at the people, and their temporary release from every day drudging makes them the more accessible.

The street car is our mela. The advertising people understand that, and make good use of the opportunity. Men and women sitting in rows or hanging to a strap for a half hour, with nothing else to do, will read the card and make up their minds to go to the entertainment; but, if the notice was thrust before their eyes at any other time, they would be so busy as hardly to give it a glance or a thought.

Two hundred thousand Chicagoans spend from one to two hours in the street cars every day. Business and boarding-houses are crowding family people farther and farther from the center, where rents are cheaper and there is room to stir. Most of those who fill the street cars, morning and evening, work hard early and late. Their one hour of leisure is the one spent on the way to and from business. They may be tired in muscle, but they are hungry in mind. They are Americans from the public school, dull enough on abstract questions, yet sufficiently awake to take light mental food eagerly. Many of them cannot afford even the daily news. That is why they devour the bushels of trashy advertisements that are swinging before the eyes—the devil's bait to a supper of chaff—and worse.

Sweeter than the ripple of rills in spring-time, or the stir of leaves in the fresh green wood, is the rustle of a good, pure paper, placed by our street-car missionary, in in the hands of a row of these needy travelers. They bend over the pages with eyes dull and dim, or keen and eager, and we know that the mightiest thoughts of the grandest people who live, are palpitating along those lines of type, and looking up from the pictures. Souls are being helped to a better life, though never a word is spoken. A paper is slipped into the hand of a young girl, shutting off the dime novel, with its dreams of damnation; or a poor boy who knows already quite too much of the iniquity that flaunts its tawdry rags in his face, and clutches after his weak irresolute hands. Even tramps and paupers may be helped in this way. Some one said of English tramps. "Nobody has heart or hope for them, but John Bright and Charles Spurgeon,"—that was before the salvation army days. Even in this good America they seen to be mortgaged to Satan, with the intention of permitting an early foreclosure. But our street-car missionary has a chance to drop a rope before them. It would pay if only one in ten thousand got hold and clambered upward. As Mrs. Browning has it, we may "put a thought beneath their rags." One infinitely greater than Mrs. Browning gave as the crowning proof of His divinity. "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." When our street-car missionary is at this work, we may be sure He heeds and helps.

This work costs something, to be sure, but it is far more economical to do it, than to neglect to do it. It costs twelve hundred dollars to send one criminal to Joliet, and that is enough to equip and support a year, four such missionaries as this one: and their work may hinder from crime a hundred. Our missionary has no superfluities, and plenty of room for the exercise of faith, but she declares herself quite comfortable always, and I doubt if there is a cheerier soul in any brown-stone front in the city. The self denials, made necessary by the small remuneration, are very dear to her, as they bring her into closer sympathy with Him who, though He was King of kings, and Lord of lords, was not so well housed as His own foxes and birds.

The paper with which our poor street car people are so well pleased, and by which we believe they will be helped, is the Illustrated Temperance Tales, published by Revell, 150 Madison street. The size of its pages, twelve inches by eighteen, saves it from the tract look that is the traditional red rag, to ordinary poor sinners. Its first page is covered by a fine large wood cut, and the other three are filled with excellent stories, bright and well written, all setting forth the misery produced by the crime of crimes.

In her bag, our street-car missionary carries a supply of five cent Testaments. When she has opportunity for conversation, she finds now and then one who desires to know the Lord, but who has not this Word to read. She gives a Testament, and takes the name and number to be reported to the nearest local Bible reader or missionary. Will not every one who sees the import of this work lend a hand with prayer and means to help this cheap, simple, direct method of evangelizing the masses in our great city?

WOMENS'S JEWELS FOR THE W. C. T. U.—A SOUTHERN LADY'S THOUGHT.

Dear Union Signal:—We have a devoted and intelligent ally in Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, of Paris, Texas, the corresponding secretary of our W. C. T. U. in the "Lone Star" state. Today's mail brings me a letter from Mrs. Johnson which certainly has "the ring of the true metal." It comes to me as an inspiration out of a generous southern lady's heart, and thrills my own with emotion. Listen to her words:

Dear Friend:—I noticed in The Union Signal a great many plans suggested by which the money in our National W. C. T. U. treasury might be increased. Let me tell you one of my own—or rather from God's Word, where I think we find a perfect example of freewill offerings. It is in Exodus 35: 22, where the women, "as many as were willing hearted, brought ear rings, rings, tablets and jewels of gold, and offered an offering of gold unto the Lord." Have we not, also, something of this kind which could be given to His service? It is often easier for women to donate some small personal possession than to call on father, brother, or son, for ready money. At my marriage my grandmother gave me a dozen silver cups, and I wish to give one of them to the W. C. T. U. treasury. Suppose we call on our sisters to send up some little article of this kind from each household, and "after a time" have a grand auction. Could it not be done?

Lizzie Johnson.

Now, beloved sisters of the local unions, what do you think of that? If the women of Carthage braided their hair into bow strings for the soldiers who defended their homes, cannot we give of our superfluities to replenish our own army with the sinews of war? I believe the appeal has only to be made and the example set. This is already done in our sister's simple, earnest words. Like every other W. C. T. U. woman she "has Scripture for it." She went first of all "to the Word and to the testimony" and then she wrote me what I have earnestly, lovingly conveyed to you.

For myself I have but little jewelry aside from my watch, the gift of a rich lady at "the Hub." Ear rings I have not, nor could I wear them if I had since I witnessed, in 1870, the "spoiling of the Egyptian" women on the Nile banks by reason of one ring in each convolution of those persecuted members. But "I do remember me that in my youth," when about seventeen years of age, I took a prize offered by the Illinois Agricultural Society for the best essay on "The Embellishment of a Country Home." It was a silver cup. How proud and grateful I was when that prize came to me in my lovely but lonesome "country home," near Janesville, Wisconsin, and how "my four" (father, mother, sister, brother) rejoiced with me over that precious prize. I think I shall never—in this life—know another moment quite so full of fresh, upspringing joy. They are all gone now save mother and me. Today we have consulted over the matter and I hereby give that cherished cup to the National W. C. T. U. So there is our "stock in trade" for the "National W. C. T. U. Jewelry and Souvenir Fund," two silver cups—one from the south, one from the north. I believe there will be many. Send to Esther Pugh at our headquarters, 16 East 14th street, New York, by express.

Let us remember that "If there be first a willing mind it is accepted according to that a (woman) hath, and not according to that (she) hath not."

But all of us have "silver and gold" in trinkets and souvenirs if not in coins. Let us turn them to account for the sacred cause of "God and home and native land."

With ever deepening affection, yours,

Frances E. Willard.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Dear Union Signal.—Among the many good works of the Washington W. C. T. U. nothing interests us more than their work among the soldiers at the arsenal and the Soldiers' Home. At each place a Soldiers' Temperance Union has been organized by the ladies and is working a perfect revolution. These unions are now officered and conducted by the soldiers themselves while the ladies assist them in various ways—mother them, in fact. Mrs. Bowen, Aunt Agnes, as the soldiers call her, is superintendent of this department; she attends all their meetings, as does Mrs. Pope, who leads the singing and plays the organ.

The union at the arsenal meets every Wednesday night, that at the Soldier's Home every Friday night. At the arsenal where there is no chaplain nor Sunday services, the ladies hold a gospel temperance meeting every Sabbath afternoon.

At the arsenal are stationed two or three companies, and these change frequently, so the influence of this union is widespread, being carried to other military posts all over the country. As I looked at these soldiers they seemed to me new recruits; there were many young, boyish faces, from which the home light had not yet faded, real mother boys, over whom any woman's heart would yearn as she thought of the dangers besetting them.

This union was started in March and since that time three hundred and fifty names have been affixed to its roll. Its present membership is about one hundred, and such enthusiasm is seldom seen as is displayed in their meetings. The singing is one of its most inspiring features. Under the able leadership of Mrs. Pope, they have attained wonderful proficiency; they sing mainly gospel songs, and the spirit with which they sing them, pouring out great volumes of praise, is refreshing. The night I was there, being the first meeting of the new year, was largely devoted to thanksgiving that they had gained two victories, going through the holidays and a pay-day without one breaking their pledge. One testified that it was the first sober Christmas he had passed for sixteen years, another that it was his first for seven years.

The Soldiers' Home is one of the most beautiful places in Washington. It comprises six hundred acres, including the land donated by Mr. Corcoran, laid out in beautiful drives, set with choice trees. The buildings and appointments are perfect of their kind, but never, until this time, have I visited it without a feeling of sadness. Here are the veterans of our army, men who have conquered in scores of battles, but many of them have not been able to conquer themselves. Here, with nothing to do, few necessary expenses, thirteen dollars a month pocket money, and beer gardens and saloons pressing close to the very gates of their home. Drunkenness was fearfully common. You could scarcely visit the grounds without witnessing its effects.

The ladies commenced work here last spring, and at first found it very hard work indeed. It was weeks before they could persuade enough to take the pledge and unite to form a society, or supply the officers. Now their union numbers one hundred and fifteen men, and the officers say that the change wrought among the men is simply marvelous. The night I was there the chaplain spoke in the highest terms of the work accomplished by the W. C. T. U. there, and said this work could have been done by no one but Christian women. There is not so much demonstrative enthusiasm in this union as at the Arsenal, but there is a "dead set" earnestness about these old veterans that shows their determination to fight it out on this line if it takes a life time.

Seventh street, the approach to the Home from the city, is lined with saloons, which have lured many old veterans to disgrace. They have a day's leave to visit the city, they cannot reach it without passing these open dens, they have money in their pocket, and cannot resist temptation. They drink, become quarrelsome, and often get into fights, which results in their being sent to the hospital. It used to be, that at times nearly half the cases in the hospital came there through drink. General Sturgess, the commander, has sent a petition to the commissioners asking to have these saloons in the neighborhood of the Home closed. God grant this petition may be heard.

All Washington is in a ferment over the proposed change in city ordinances which shall destroy the local option which the city now has. The W. C. T. U. leads the force to oppose this change, holding great mass meetings each Sunday in Masonic temple, with others in various parts of the city during the week, circulating petitions, appealing to the congressional committee having the matter in charge, and in every way possible striving to bring public sentiment up to the point of demanding right legislation of congress. For here congress rules supreme, it even votes upon the pay of the public school teachers. The laws governing the city are drafted by the district commissioners but must be passed by congress to become valid.

Mary Allen West.

NEWS FROM THE FAR EAST.

Dear Union Signal:—In your last issue, January 10, you refer to the membership of the Band of Hope in England as being one million. As I had the pleasure of attending their annual May meeting, the past year, I thought it might interest you and your readers to hear that according to the secretary's report the membership is now estimated at one million, one hundred and sixty-seven thousand. I also learned that the movement originated in Leeds, thirty-six years since. There are now ten thousand, one hundred and forty-four juvenile temperance societies in England. The annual collection for the Band of Hope and temperance hospital amounted to one thousand one hundred pounds. The meeting was the most enthusiastic that I ever attended. The great hall (Exeter) was filled to overflowing, the choir was composed of five hundred senior members of the Band of Hope. The chair was occupied by Mr. Samuel Morley, M. P., the speakers, Rev. J. P. Chown, Rev. Charles Garrett and the Rev. Canon Wilberforce, who delivered one of the grandest, most eloquent temperance speeches that it was ever my good fortune to listen to.

Their annual meetings corresponding with our conventions, are held in May, and are always spoken of as the May meetings, as that is also when the London season begins, and when everybody is expected to be in London. It seems a most fitting time for Christians to be at work. My sister and I (both W. C. T. U.'s) attended the public meeting of the "British Woman's Temperance Association," also held in Exeter Hall. We were introduced to Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, (and many other earnest temperance workers.) When we first entered the great hall, we felt that we were indeed, "Strangers in a strange land." It was rather depressing, that among the many, we saw not one dear familiar face. The feeling of loneliness was soon dispelled by a very pleasant faced lady approaching; addressing me in a most cordial manner she said, "I am sure that I have seen you before." "I fear that you are mistaken," I replied, "for I am an entire stranger." "From America?" she asked. "Yes, from Canada." "Oh," she said, "are you Mrs. K., my unknown correspondent?" "No," but Mrs. K was at my side, and then we learned that the dear lady was Mrs. Margaret Parker, whose address we had seen in THE UNION SIGNAL, and to whom my sister had written on our arrival in London for the purpose of ascertaining where we should find the temperance sisters of England who call themselves "The British Women's Temperance Association." We made many inquiries, but learned nothing until Mrs. Parker wrote where we should find the secretary, and for the benefit of any sister who may wish to find kindred spirits, "over the sea," we give the address: Mrs. Bradley, 16 Memorial Hall, Farrington street, London, and I hope they will enjoy meeting with them, as we did. We concluded there must be a mystic touch in the hand clasp of the W. C. T. U. or Free Masonry, somewhere, certain it is that we never so realized before "How sweet the tie that binds," as when we sat upon the platform that evening with so many co-workers in the beloved cause. My letter is growing too long, I fear. I will just mention that at our last convention it was resolved to unite the unions (ten in number), under the name of the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Maritime Provinces." Our next annual meeting will be held (D. V.) in September 1884, and as it is a very pleasant season here, sisters from "across the border," will be gladly welcomed.

W. C. T. U. AFFAIRS IN ST. LOUIS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our witty Mrs. Fixen has called Kirkwood the "h'Evanston of St. Louis." This we regard as a great compliment, inasmuch as the most of "The good the true and the beatiful," that we know of Chicago, has come to it through Evanston. That lovely suburb has extended its influence, not only to Chicago, but all the way down to St. Louis, and this will be still more apparent next fall when our N. W. C. T. U. comes among us as a blessed benediction. We are biding our time, knowing that after that event we will not have the Upas like indifference to contend against, which has been worse, far worse for us, than decided opposition and enmity.

By the way there has been a rumor that the American Board is to meet in St. Louis in October. This is a mistake. I have just received from headquarters the assurance that that body meets in Columbus, Ohio, and therefore the ground is clear for a glorious meeting of our W. C. T. U. Let every woman begin to save her dimes, dollars and cents, preparatory to coming together to the feast of tabernacles.

We have begun to spoil the Egyptians—never more apparent than in the influence exerted even in the most fashionable circles, in the exclusion of wines on New Year's Day of '84. It is a very significant straw, showing that when the charmed inner circle succumbs so manifestly to the silent influence, our work is going on, and though Nozah is continually reaching his hand out to steady the ark, fearful that it is not progressing in an orthodox fashion, we who trust, know that the Lord will yet bring it up with songs of rejoicing and gladness.

Our St. Louis county W. C. T. U. has a "local habitation and a name." We have rented a nice room, furnished it comfortably, have a small but good circulating library, and have begun our evangelistic meetings there every Sunday afternoon, giving special instructions to those who do not frequent any church, to attend our "people's meetings." We are endeavoring to secure an organ for the services, and with our pictures on the walls, our blooming plants, pretty curtains, and attractive appearance generally, and the cordial greeting we shall give any one personally we shall make it pleasanter to stop there than to go on to the saloon beyond. When those who had been bidden to the feast came not, the servants were commanded to go out to the highways and hedges and compel men to come, and we wish to use the gentle Christian compulsion that Christ our examplar used. Our legal work is not so flourishing; not one of the forty-five cases presented to the November term of the circuit court for illegal selling under the Downing high license law, was successful. Very many plead guilty, but that did nothing to help in their conviction. They were saved by their friends, our officials.

When will good men learn that the primaries are the places to fight the liquor traffic?

Kirkwood, Mo. SOPHIA L. GRUBB.

A CHALK TALKER'S EXPERIENCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A few days in Indiana gave opportunity for some splendid meetings in Argos, Plymouth and Bourbon. The churches in all three places were crowded and many had to stand. The temperance leaders are holding the fort bravely but they have much up-hill work. The children are very enthusiastic, and some young girls have pledged themselves to work for the Master amongst his little ones. The children came forward, each in turn, and put up the letters of evergreen on a wire, making the "prohibition" motto. They recited their couplets well, and everybody seemed delighted. Came to Quincy Saturday and over a thousand came to the Chalk Talk entertainment. They crowded the aisles and the steps to the outside door and the children sat on the chancel railing and close about my feet. This was all due to the labor of that persevering and enthusiastic worker whom everybody loves, Fannie C. Best. She is the best woman I ever saw together with all the other glorious women in the temperance work, but I do wish dear UNION SIGNAL, you could have heard her do the begging for the occasion. She did it so hopefully and happily that several came and shaking hands with her, put a dollar into her hand. More than that, she went to a livery man and told him that a lady was coming from Chicago to lecture on temperance and asked him if he wouldn't think it an honor to donate one of his best carriages. "Why certainly," said he, "are you going to meet her?" "Yes, we're going to walk." "No you won't," said he, "I will come up for you;" and sure enough he did and she says he looked a great deal happier than if he had charged a dollar. We have heard much about a cheerful giver, but a cheerful beggar in a good cause is a grand thing.

They had reserved seats and they were vacant so long people began several times to press forward to get into them. Finally Mrs. Best said: "These are all reserved seats, I wouldn't sit in one for anything. I wouldn't let our Sunday school children sit in them. They are for the mission school, the poor little waifs who live down by the levees. They are so late you can take them if you wish." But not a person moved. It was a touching sight to see so many, and even old men, standing so as to give the poor little things a chance. I sometimes think it is hard work, away from home in the cold, but somehow when I get back to my "workshop" the hills seemed to have levelled down and I see only the sweet green valley where I tarried for a day with the glad children of "the cold water army," and the picture of those eager up-lifted faces will live in my heart forever.

NELLY BAYLEY.

THE U. S. LIQUOR TAX.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Your correspondent writing from Alabama, Aurilla Furber, need not be alarmed about the laws of the United States interfering with those of her state on the liquor question. The laws of the United States do not undertake to grant a man a license to sell whisky in opposition to the laws of any state. The government may grant the license to sell anywhere but that license does not confer the right to sell in opposition to a state or any local law. The government license is in the nature of a tax imposed for revenue. In order that your readers may know what the law is on that question I quote the following from the revised statutes of the U. S. 2nd edition 1878 page 622, Sec. 3243, towit:

"The payment of any tax imposed by the internal revenue laws for carrying on any trade or business shall no be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any state for carrying on the same within such state, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade or business contrary to the laws of such state or in places prohibited by the municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held to prohibit any state from placing a duty or tax on the same trade or business for state or other purposes."

So you see that your correspondent only needs to see that the local laws of her state are enforced and the United States will have to stand aside, so far as this question is concerned. It is remarkable how widespread the idea is getting to be that the United States has jurisdiction over almost every question, when in point of fact the constitution limits its authority to only a few.

HOW SHALL THE BRAIN BE RESTED.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In your issue of January 24, Dr. Austin pleads for the absence of "care and responsibility," and even of "thought," in the treatment of a cold. I have in mind a lady teacher who has just passed through a "hard cold," which kept her out of school for several days.

Naturally active, with fingers often giving relief to nervousness by the aid of crocheting or knitting, while the brain is also at work, the enforced idleness prescribed by Dr. A. would have been simply torture. Circumstances were such, that she was alone in her room most of the time. How could she keep from thinking, unless by reading that of which she had no special need to think? The question became a serious one when the aching head obliged the stopping of even such an effort, and left the brain free to pursue all sorts of themes, to conjure up possible and impossible contingencies and plans in school work, and, at last, (a most unusual thing for her) to fairly have the blues.

Experience has taught her that in her own case, at least, if forced to tax her brain-power heavily during the evening, it is much better then to "read herself sleepy," with something that she need not try to remember, than to toss and tumble in restless wakefulness, with mind rushing from thought to thought, for two or three hours after retiring.

Will not some of our wise hygienists advise in these cases? It is possible that other brain-workers have similar needs, and have found better remedies.

Yours inquiringly, G.

THE SALOON DEVICE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wonder if the women of the land who have not attended political meetings ever heard of this business trick of saloon keepers. I just found it out and cannot rest until it is told.

When party mass meetings are called in the various counties, the saloon keepers go in, and they are busy weeks beforehand too, and work to have the primaries or meetings for nominations of county officers put off as late as possible in the season. Why? Because they want to have as long a time as possible to reap all the benefits of long and continued "treating" of voters by candidates. I know of one place were the saloonists of the county tried their level best to have the primary put off till August next. Their disgust was evident when it was set for April, instead. If there are half a dozen candidates for each office in the county, and there usually are, and there are three offices to fill, that would make eighteen men spending money in every saloon in the county. If the primary was set for August, the mass meeting being held in January, that would make seven months treating by eighteen men. If the primary is set for April, there are but three months waiting; after the nominations there will be only two men to treat, as a rule, viz., one democrat and one republican, which necessarily cuts off saloon profits. If this matter is doubted, let the women make inquiries, and take items during the mass meetings, and prove the matters herein set forth.

ADA H. KEPLEY.

IN the Irish famine year, nearly $50,000,000 was consumed in liquors by a people who say they cannot pay their rents and debts.

"WHO WILL TAKE CARE OF ME?"

BY FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

"Who will take care of me?" darling, you say?
Lovingly, tenderly watched as you are!
Listen! I give you the answer to-day:
One who is never forgetful or far!

He will take care of you. All through the day
Jesus is near you to keep you from ill;
Walking or resting, at lessons or play,
Jesus is with you and watching you still.

He will take care of you! All through the night
Jesus the Shepherd His little ones keeps;
Darkness to Him is the same as the light—
He never slumbers, and He never sleeps.

He will take care of you all through the year,
Crowning each day with His kindness and love,
Sending you blessings and shielding from fear,
Leading you on to the bright home above.

He will take care of you, yes, to the end.
Nothing can alter His love to His own.
Darling, be glad that you have such a Friend;
He will not leave you one moment alone.

THE FAIRY SISTER.

Sallie stood in the middle of the floor with three little discontented wrinkles in the middle of her forehead.

"I wish I was a fairy god-mother!" she said listlessly, picking up one of Baby Harris's dresses and dropping it again in another wrong place for mother to hunt after.

"What for?" asked Aunt Helen, laughing to think of fourteen-year old Sallie being a fairy god-mother.

"Oh, why, lots of things! Just now I'd wave my wand and this room would be swept and dusted, and Baby Harris would stop his screeching, and the boys would find something else to do besides plaguing him, and I'd have a little peace of my life."

"Why don't you try being a fairy sister?" said Aunt Helen smiling.

"What would I do?" cried Sallie, eagerly. The idea struck her fancy.

"Everything Her Royal Laziness wants a fairy god-mother to do?" laughed Aunt Helen.

Sallie laughed too, with a little blush. She wasn't too stupid to take a broad hint like that. She tucked on her little blue lack-trimmed sweeping-cap, and soon appeared with the broom for her wand. After some vigorous flourishes the floor was clean as a new pin, and Aunt Helen was sneezing with the dust.

Next, Sallie exchanged the broom for another magic wand called the duster, and presto!—all the dust had vanished, the mantle ornaments were speckless, the books stood in orderly rows, the window shades were snapped up to just the right height, and the sunlight, looking in with an approving smile, came and stretched itself contentedly on the rug like a great yellow lap-dog. Aunt Helen looked up and gave her a funny little nod which meant, "So far, so good!" and Sallie took broom and dust-pan into the kitchen, to look for further labors. You never heard such a hubbub as there was out there. Not unless you have three boys and two babies in your family.

"Pity sakes!" cried Sallie, trying to put her fingers in her ears, and so dropping the broom and spilling the dust-pan. In the minute that it took to pick it up she thought of her new character.

"Billy's ben an' gone an' tummeled wight in the f'ow ba'l head first!" said little Paul solemnly, stooping over to look in her face as she bent over the dust-pan, "Spoilted all the f'ow to make bikkits wiv!"

"Ain't!" spluttered Billy in a hollow voice from the bottom of the barrel.

"Ain't! Hear him, Sallie!" cried Johnny, doubling up with laughter at Billy's antics in trying to get out. "P'raps tisn't Billy's legs sticking out, oh no! P'raps it's some other boy's legs; oh yes! Long may they wave!"

Sallie couldn't help laughing, but she went into the pantry and gave the empty flour barrel a little tip that sent Billy out squirming on the floor.

"Wanted to make some paste, that's all," explained Billy sheepishly.

"Let's mix him up in some cold water, then," said teasing Johnny, "I'm sure there's plenty of flour in his hair."

"No such thing," said Sallie, laughing. "Let me brush you, Billy, and then I'll scrape some flour off the boards for your paste. Didn't do any hurt to the 'bikkits,' Puss-cat,' 'cause there wasn't any there."

She comforted him so well that he was soon able to be around and tending to his usual occupation—that of bothering the babies.

"Boys!" cried Sallie, suddenly, "'sposin' there was a fairy should come right in and say she'd do any identical thing you wanted her to—what would you ask her?"

"Cut tags for my kite," answered Billy, promptly.

"Make some 'lasses candy," (from Johnny).

"Put the pockets in my t'owsers so the marbuls will stay," pleaded Paul.

The twins placidly sucked their thumbs for a wonder, as if trying to decide what they did want.

"'Twould need three or four fairies to go around," said Sallie. "I'll do one of the things."

"My kite!" cried Billy.

"Candy!" shouted Johnny.

"Pockets!" piped Paul.

"Draw lots," said Sallie. The trowsers were in luck. Sallie went and begged Aunt Helen for "sheet iron to make pockets out of," and sat down on the bottom stair to work while Paul "clustered around her," as Johnny said.

"I could show you about the kite while I'm basting," said this very obliging fairy sister.

"And couldn't you, spose, tell me how to do the candy?" put in Johnny.

"If mamma's willing, I guess so," said Sallie. "Mama's taking a nap. Ask Aunt Helen."

"Auntie said "Yes, indeed!" so Johnny went to work. He obeyed orders like a soldier, and just as the candy was going to burn, the pockets were done, and Sallie could hop up and "tend to things."

What has my little girl been doing to keep the babies so still the whole afternoon?" asked mamma, coming down from her long sweet nap, with a rested face and shining eyes.

"Just playing," said Sallie, blushing to think she had never played this beautiful game before.

"She did just e-zactly everything anybody wanted her to," cried Johnny and Billy, who were "trying" the candy in sticky cups of cold water. "Played she was a fairy."

"Better'n'at," cried Paul, standing, as Johnny said, three feet "in his pockets." She's a firs'ate, sfeet, fat girl!"

Sallie accepted this compliment "from whence it came." She knew it expresssd unbounded admiration. The fairy sister came so often after that first visit that mamma said she should have to believe in the stories of changelings.

As for Sallie, I heard her saying to Aunt Helen the other day that it isn't worth while to go around wishing for fairy god-mothers, when you can do the things yourself.—The Advance.

DETERMINED TO SUCCEED.

"Eight times three!" said Willie Wilson, impatiently. "Oh, what is the matter with me? Can't I get that right?"

"Come on, Willie!" shouted the boys at the window; "we can't wait; finish your lesson afterward."

"O, yes," said Willie. "'Afterward!' I know all about him; he has cheated me many a time, and I have no faith in him. Nine times four are thirty-six."

"Bother nine times four! It is time we were off, and we shall have to go without you."

"I should like to bother it," said Willie; "it is giving me bother enough. How much is it, anyhow?"

"One hundred and seventy-nine. Now come on this minute, or we shall go without you."

"Look here, Harry Jones," said Willie, looking up a minute from his work; "this is the last example in our lesson. I've got all the others, and I know I shan't have any more time for arithmetic, and I don't mean to stir from this corner till I get this bothering old fellow right. I've gone over him three times now, and it won't come; if I have to do it three hundred times I mean to have it. So there!"

"Bother take the old example, anyhow?" said Harry, in his crossest tone. Come on boys; we can't lose all the fun waiting till midnight for him;" and away every boy went.

"Nine times four are thirty-four," said Willie, patiently: and though, of course, it was not right, and never will be, he worked away just as steadily; and when he found that he was wrong, again, he said, talking to himself, "Now, look here! You think you are going to beat me, don't you? Well, you were never more mistaken in your life. My name is Persevere Wilson. Father said I had earned that name, and that I should have it as long as I deserved it; and I hope you don't think I am going to lose my name and my place in the class just to please you."

Then he began again, slowly, patiently, each figure carefully studied, and at last the example "proved itself," and Willie, with a soft hurrah and a loud yawn, got up from his corner. The last glimmer of twilight was fading. No use to talk of ball playing now; fun was over for that evening.

"I don't care," said Willie, as he went up to bed; "it will be more fun for me than for the others when the roll of examples is called tomorrow."

Sure enough! "Master Willie," said Professor Bennet, looking up over his spectacles, "you are the only member of the class to be marked 'Perfect' today. There was more ball-playing than perseverance by the rest of the class, I fear."—Young Reaper.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I have been on a visit to Iowa that beautiful state where a splendid division of the prevention army fought so bravely on June 27, 1882, for constitutional amendment. You all remember the stories of how the very least soldiers begged for votes and got them, how little girls with their arms clasped around the necks of gainsaying fathers won them over to vote for prohibition and bribed them with love and kisses. You know too, I have no doubt, how much Iowa thinks of these "little soldiers newly mustered in," how this great state provides so many school houses and so much money to build them and to pay school teachers with, that it is almost true that every child in Iowa receives a common school education. It is entirely true that Iowa stands at the very head of the United States class in education. There are fewer people that cannot read nor write in this state than in any other. Then, too, you know last summer when the republicans wanted to win the day and did win it, one of their grand leaders said "What Iowa wants is a school house on every hill top and no saloons in the valley."

After that they used to put a school house on wheels and draw it around from political meeting to political meeting, showing the people what has helped to make Iowa the prosperous state it is, and what they should work for in the future. You may be sure Captain Deborah was glad to take this good man, who is now lieutenant governor, by the hand, and tell him how the children of the prevention army blessed him for standing up for them and looking out for their interests. I don't suppose you all realize now a days that the school house is a sort of armory for the soldiers of our army, but it surely is. It is a drill-ground where you learn the use of weapons, and "go through the motions" of fighting. It is good to remember this when you are "so tired of school" as I heard a boy say only yesterday. Just stop and think a while and see if you can't sing as lustily as ever, "I'm glad I'm in this army," and so plod on through all that helps to make you a good soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ.

GOD SEES ALWAYS.

'Twas evening time and the shadows
Were growing darker and long,
The flowers had closed their petals
And the birds had ceased their song;
When a mother tenderly laid
Her tired boy down to sleep,
And she told him that God would send
His angels, a watch to keep.

And if he should die they would take
His spirit to God above,
To be a bright shining angel
In that beautiful home of love.
"But mother," the little one said,
In a voice of thoughtful tone,
"I should not like God to see me
With my little night-gown on."

Sweet child! in thy innocent love,
Would we were all like thee;
Only remembering ever
That God can always see.
And we should be always watchful,
That He may see naught but is right,
In our thoughts, and words, and actions,
Whether morning, noon, or night.

A FEARFUL INHERITANCE.

BY HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD.

[Concluded from last week.]

Marion had continued her vigilance for months, until completely worn out both physically and mentally she had taken to her bed. She implored her husband to stay with her, which he did conscientiously for a few days. She then implored her mother to keep guard over him, to amuse him—to save him from himself. This Mrs. Mortimer promised faithfully to do, and did attempt for a little while; but she found it dull business, and in an evil hour, half bored to death by his loneliness and isolation, Percy went back to his cups. Of course after the struggle he had had with himself, he did not do this of set purpose. He meant only to take a simple glass of wine as other men did, to raise his spirits a little. He did not propose to go back to the old thralldom of drink—but he was back before he knew it.

His remorse was extreme, his agony almost unendurable, when he saw how nearly he had killed his wife. For in her weakness the blow did indeed seem too much for her to survive. Should her expiation as she had looked upon her struggle for his soul, and then fail; could not the sin of such a marriage then be atoned for by any kind of suffering? Could not a whole life time of self abnegation undo the folly of a moment of weakness? She prayed bitterly, then for death, but prayed in vain. After a time a measure of strength came back to her, and she took up the burden of her life again. She did not give up the battle for the man; as strength came back to her; she renewed her old sway on him. After further frightful struggles he became once more apparently a free man. But a man with intellect deadened, with senses dulled, with will almost effaced, with prospects blighted, holding but the poor miserable remnant of life in his hands.

But Marion began to feel now that she could really hold him as long as her own strength held out, and she grew almost happy. The terrible strain was relaxed a little. She breathed a little freer and the old terror was not quite so great.

"Why Marion, you are almost like yourself of late," Mrs. Mortimer said one morning, looking at the little figure in a dainty morning dress. "You are positively growing young and gay."

Marion put up her lips for a kiss, and whispered something to her mother with a blush, then ran away.

Ah, she grew very happy in those days. The curse seemed to her to be lifted from her life. She sang beautiful old hymns, she prayed constantly, she did every noble and beautiful thing which woman can do, for the poor ones, the sick and the afflicted. She went daily to the children's hospital, carrying flowers and fruits and smiles and blessings. Her life became sacred—a psalm set to the deepest music of which life is capable. The grand Hymn of the Nativity was being lived in the deeps of her soul.

Percy, too, grew very noble and manly in those days. Tender as a woman to her—generous and kind to every unfortunate soul, he showed what fine worth might have been his had he been led aright in youth. By and by the babe came through a path which led very near into the valley of death, for there were hours when all thought she would never come back to the things of time; but she did come back, and found her treasure awaiting her. The tiniest morsel of flesh and blood which was ever called a baby, it seemed, but priceless to the parents' hearts. Marion lay for days in a trance of passionate bliss, hugging her baby to her heart with all the pent-up ardor of her blighted life. She saw in it only the perfection of babyhood. But her mother sometimes looked searchingly at its tiny wrinkled face, and tried in vain to make it stretch out its mites of hands. Then she would leave the room suddenly—and forgetting even her costumes for a moment, would soil a dainty handkerchief with vulgar tears. And the old doctor would thump it on the chest, and run his hand the whole length of the spine, in a manner quite unaccountable to Marion, and look very grave and go his way. After a little Marion would ponder these things in her heart. But it was a long time before she would admit a thought of fear. Then one awful night, when in the silence of midnight she was keeping vigil with the sleeping cherub, the dread thought penetrated to her brain. The baby was not right. Nobody had dared to tell her. God himself whispered it to her as gently as he could in the silence and terror of midnight. The awful shock which Percy's relapse had been to her at the most critical period of her life had affected the child.

At morning they thought her dying. All the powers of her life seemed to have dropped down with a sudden crash. The doctors were puzzled. What had caused this fearful collapse! No one knew. She never breathed a word to mortal ear about her child. There was but one thing to do; she must live. It was impossible to die now. So she rallied and took up the burden once again. But how often the text she had always thought the most dreadful in the whole Bible was with her now. "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children, to the third and fourth generation." Could God be just? Was not the universe a lie?

Like a little white wraith she rose up from her couch and glided about the room in noiseless diligence. No other hands but hers ever touched the baby. With infinite tenderness she handled the little frail body, and tried to live down her terrors. She read the pity in the eyes of all about it, and it deepened her horror almost to madness. Percy was almost as deeply troubled as was she. He had boldly asked of the physician what the trouble was with the child, and had received the awful answer, that over the children of such men as he had been, hung always the possibilities of a dreadful doom. The remorse which filled his heart from that moment to the end of his life was of a kind to excite pity in a heart of stone. That the folly and ignorance of youth should be so visited upon all that was dear to him, seemed immeasurably unjust. He was appalled at his dreadful punishment; more dreadful it seemed to him than any other heart had ever known.

Weeks and months went by. The child gained a little. It seemed it was not to die, as every heart, even the mother's, had wildly prayed. It began to grow, and after a while a little of the light of intelligence dawned in its face. It began to know its mother and cling to her. They began almost to hope. The father and mother and babe lived as much alone as if they had been on a desert island. They took no friend into their grief. Even Mrs. Mortimer, who hated disagreeable things, seldom came to the nursery, and they were glad that it was so.

A year went by, two years, and the child began to toddle about the room. Apparently healthy, and quite strong, but with one fatal mark, the mark of a drunken man, upon him. He walked like a man who was reeling from the effects of drink; his face had the dreadful vacant look of a besotted imbecile. Every action bore the same dreadful stamp.

To the father the torture was simply indescribable. To the mother the anguish even deeper, but bereft of the dreadful element of remorse.

Five dreadful years were passed thus. During that time the real marriage of the parents' hearts took place. They grew unspeakably near to each other, in the imprisonment of their chosen solitude. Every noble trait in each one burst into blossom, to cheer and comfort the other's heart. They studied and read and toiled and wrought together for the good of the world, which had been so blighted for them. A constant stream of helpful benefaction went forth from their home, toward the weak, the ignorant, the fallen. They learned fully the blessing of unselfishness, and gained at least peace for their own souls, if not joy.

At the end of five years the child gave up its unequal contest with the world, and with tears of thankfulness and blessing the parents laid his little body away, and returned to their lonely home.

Upon the very evening of the burial the angel of life with his shining wings followed the messenger of sable pinions, and there was another son born to the house. I will not even whisper of the dread which had hung like a curtain of darkness over their hearts as this event had approached. My true tale has had enough of darkness in it already. But the triumphant shout with which the old doctor laid the new baby in her arms, for his overfull heart could vent its satisfaction in no less demonstrative manner, assured Marion, once for all, that all was right. And with tears of thankfulness, whose sweetness no other heart could ever guess, she lay there and worshiped the child. And Percy weeping upon the shoulder of the doctor, exclaimed between his sobs:

"I did not dare to think we could ever be so blest."

And so came great joy to the long darkened household. The little stranger grew apace, beautiful, bright and strong. They enjoyed every movement of his baby hand. He held a little court every morning, prince baby, and if the whole household did not kiss his tiny hand, in worshipful reverence, it was only because they found his soft face more alluring, or his dimpled neck more seductive. No famous picture of the Virgin and the Child, was ever half so beautiful as Marion and her babe, none ever half so wildly worshiped as were they by Percy Perry, clothed and in his right mind, endeavoring by all loving kindness and thoughtful tenderness, to atone for all the follies of his youth.

He has fought for and won his own release from the thralldom of evil—fortunate indeed will he be, as the great years go on, if Nemesis pursues him no further, and his children shall by righteous and wise training, be able to overcome their fearful inheritance.

The Sunday School Lesson.

Feb. 17. LESSON VII. 1884.

TOPIC: THE CONVERSION OF THE JAILER.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 16: 25-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house. Acts 16: 31.

TIME.—A. D. 52.

PLACE.—Phillippi, in Macedonia.

1. Men can bind and imprison God's workers, but never His work. All instrumentalities are His, and the songs and prayers of Paul and Silas in the prison were perhaps just the instrumentalities God most desired and needed at that time. The beautiful saying of Madam Guyon imprisoned in the castle of Vincennes, will occur to many a faithful teacher: "It sometimes seems to me," she said, "as if I were a little bird whom the Lord had placed in a cage, and that I had nothing now to do but sing." So these bound apostles had now nothing to do but sing and pray, and that was all God had for them to do at this time. It is a great comfort to know this when our hands are bound and when by no effort of our own can we free ourselves from the imprisonment of circumstances.

2. Right here Paul might very easily have yielded in faith and courage. He had come to Macedonia summoned by a dream, on what some would judge to be a fool's errand, and though he had taken a prosperous voyage to be a token of God's approval of his course, still he was now in prison. This to all outward seeming was the end of his pilgrimage and its mission. But Paul and Silas sang. The songs of faith and unfailing trust filled the prison whose walls had never echoed such strains before. Afterward—after the full proof of their ministry had been made, their willingness to suffer for the truth as well as to unfold it—all the powers of nature are laid under tribute to the expression of Divine approval. An earthquake, of whose occurrence about this time there is historic record, shook the walls of the prison, loosened the stones to which the prisoners were bound, and so placed opportunity for escape in their own hands. We call this a miracle, a divine interference with the laws of nature. Is it not more rational to believe that God's highest laws, not yet formulated by earth's poor science, comprehend and contemplate just such apparent disturbances as these for the relief and deliverance of His children. He says to them, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." In this blessed sequence of possession all kingdoms of nature and of grace are subject to the draft of the humblest child of our King.

3 "Create a market for your wares," was the advice of an old Christian warrior to a youthful preacher of the Word. In other words make your religion so full of rich experience that everybody will want it. What could more strongly recommend the new religion that sought followers in Europe than the triumphant, joyful faith of Paul and Silas in affliction? The Roman officer of the jail knew no religion that could make men rejoice in tribulation. Our own Hannah Whitall Smith asks: "When the shepherd wants to induce the frisky lambs to enter the fold does he take them to the pen and show them a lot of poor, sick, ill-fed, ill-conditioned old sheep as a sample of what the fold will do for those it shelters?" If we would recommend our wares we must have wares that recommend themselves. If we are gloomy and sour under sorrow our religion seems very vain to the gainsaying world. If we are enabled to endure as seeing Him that is invisible, rejoicing because seeing, then even our persecutors will want our inspiration.

4. Paul is able not only to suffer for Christ's sake, but he has a magnificent confidence that enables him to demand magnificent concessions from Christ's enemies. "Let them come themselves and fetch us out," he says when the magistrates, trembling because of their own infraction of Roman law, give orders to release the prisoners. God's triumph demands the humiliation of those who have defied Him. Paul will have the trinmph complete for the honor and glory of his Master, and for the encouragement and strengthening of "all them that believe."

Editorial Correspondence.

IOWA'S BRAVE MEN AND WOMEN.

To be taken up in a whirlwind of friendly deeds and transported almost between sunset and sunrise from the editorial chair to the beautiful new capitol at Des Moines, is an experience in itself noteworthy, but which, including as it did, an inside view of the Iowa political situation, becomes a pleasure to be shared with the 30,000 Union Signal readers who watch with eager eyes the fate of prohibition in Iowa—the immediate fate, I should say, for our faith takes no denial of the ultimate triumph.

To be piloted through such an experience by Judith Ellen Foster, in whose masterly thought constitutional prohibition struck deep root and found exhaustless sustenance, and by her good husband whose practical sense of how Iowa's constitutional law should be supplemented by the weapons of statute and penalty, has been gained and strengthened by nearly two hundred prosecutions of the liquor traffic in its varicus forms, was sure guarantee of a direct route to the heart of the situation.

Naturally, the first visit was to the capitol—the fair and splendid building set upon a more than Capitoline Hill, beautifully outlined against the sky, its proportions of that exact comeliness which neither enhances nor diminishes size, and its walls within and without unstained by "jobbery," steals, or — tobacco smoke. Within it is a marvel of substantial and beautiful decorations. Scarcely anywhere this side of old world palaces and houses of state will one see such combinations of marbles, scagliola and onyx as line the interior walls. Scotch granite and agate marble in pillars and panels adorn the two great chambers of legislation, whose furnishings are all in keeping. Not a taint of tobacco odors defile the air in the gallery where we sat looking down on as fine an assembly of legislators as ever made laws. I cannot help remembering as I watch their deliberations that they are in their legislative capacity, the direct outcome of that unique political convention of last June, when the brain and heart of Iowa, as never before in its history, were brought to bear on its sublime destiny.

As the clear voice of the Speaker rings out, Mrs. Foster tells me that he made more prohibition speeches during the campaign than any man in his county. He has brought his motherless children to be with him during the session, and a quaint little Kate Greenaway figure is at his elbow and holds his hand as he rises to put the question. She darts about from desk to desk among the members with a child's free grace and unconsciousness of self—a veritable prophecy in golden hair and Mother Hubbard attire.

In the senate Lieut. Gov. Manning fills the president's seat with honor and ability. There is a sort of "school-house-on-every-hill-top" air about him; a gracious poise and bearing that comes of gentle birth and favoring conditions in life. Directly below us is Senator Donnan, chairman of the republican central committee who, at the opening of the session, was on his feet to introduce the prohibitory bill as soon as the rattle of the gavel had subsided and has indissolubly linked his name in the upper house to the good faith of the republican party.

There is a clear majority for the bill in this chamber, which gives an air of quiet satisfaction to the members, contrasting somewhat strongly with the nervous tension of the house where the bill's fate has hung, ever since the opening on two men, both of whom have been ill, and one of them who has since died, was deep down in the valley of the shadow at the time of my visit. Of what heroic stuff he was made was evidenced by his strong desire to live as much for his vote's and his party's sake as for home and friends. His plea to be taken on a litter to the state house whenever the prohibition battle closed in was touching indeed, and even in his mental wanderings the uppermost thought was duty. He remarked a few days since to a friend who had called to see him: "I'm going home today—but you'll bring me back when it comes to the vote, won't you, Cap? I want to vote once more for the home."

Poor fellow! and yet not poor if so be that life's first duty was as dear to him as its last—he has perhaps "slain more in his death than in his life." His constituency which gave him a majority of 450, will not forget the dead hero by electing a traitor to the cause he loved.

A call upon Governor Sherman in his pleasant but temporary quarters evidenced in propria persona what I knew before and yet was happy in the reassurance, that he is as strong a prohibitionist as any member of the W. C. T. U. Very brotherly he is, too, with the faithful workers who have never failed in their faith or devotion through all the trying vicissitudes of legislation and judicial pronunciamentos. I could have no doubt after this conversation that he will throw himself like a true and loyal soldier into any breach that may open in the prohibition fortifications.

Very brotherly, too, are the state officials. It was Treasurer Conger's pleasant home that was opened in the evening to a reception given by the two Des Moines Unions to the state officers, Mrs. Aldrich and Mrs. Maxfield, and to Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, national superintendent of legislation and petitions. It was Secretary of State Hull who in very gracious and entertaining fashion presented the long file of legislators to these W. C. T. U. dignataries, among whom the editor of The Union Signal was kindly reckoned. The reception was a beautiful affair. Everything that social custom sanctions and provides was duly observed, even to the white-gloved colored waiters in the refreshment room. The charming hostess, Mrs. Conger, and her allies of the W. C. T. U. had decorated the parlors with smilax, flowers, and ever green mottoes till they seemed a fair garden of loveliness. On every lip and in every corner the one theme of pleasant talk was prohibition.

Nor was it in these social surroundings the partisan question that it is in legislative halls. A prominent democrat with whom I had a half hour's pleasant chat, spoke assuringly of the passage of the bill, adding however, "My fear is that it cannot be enforced. Will you women come to the front and help us to enforce it?" What could I reply but "Yes, if you give us the ballot with which to elect law enforcers"? "Well, I'll vote for that every time," said he, and in this conclusion I am satisfied he has many co-thinkers on both sides of the party line. In fact, there seems little doubt that this legislature will ratify the amendment passed at the session of two years ago, striking the word "male" from the section of the constitution regarding electors. If this shall be the case, a strong sentiment favors a quick campaign and a vote by the people on the ever memorable 27th of June, notwithstanding the fact that the date falls this year on a Friday. "The Lord didn't name the days," says a devoutly bright woman.

Early in the morning came earnest, faithful Mrs. Callanan with her carriage to take me to the Benedict Home. First came a pleasant call upon her husband, my father's friend and pupil, whose ample fortune has gone largely into educational bequests—Callanan College in Des Moines and Cazenovia Seminary in New York, for instance; then a rapid ride through the frosty morning up on the bluffs overlooking both river and city to the home-like refuge founded by the Iowa W. C. T. U. for unfortunate women. Here are eleven inmates, all well cared for and several of them rejoicing in new found life and newly laid foundations of character. In addition to this good work which was born in the tender heart of Lavinia Benedict, a Quakeress of most persistent faith and works, the Iowa W. C. T. U. are this winter asking the legislature to found a state reformatory for all classes of criminal women, and while I was inspecting the Home, Mrs. Foster was eighteen miles away meeting with the directors of the girl's reform school, in this interest. The Scientific Temperance Instruction bill is another "iron" of the W. C. T. U. in the hot forge of this year's legislation and it is in no danger of being forgotten, but in much hope of passing. Still another is the effort to so change the code of criminal laws as to create and maintain by law an equal standard of purity for men and women.

A drive to Mrs. Callanan's palatial home, a delightful hour at lunch, and I was whirled back again to the Aborn House from which in short order, Mrs. Foster, returned from Mitchelville, bore me away to the old state house to look in upon the supreme court and to mentally photograph the men who have the efficiency of the Iowa amendment in their responsible keeping. We had a glimpse too of the new editor and proprietor of the Capital—as strong and true for prohibition, woman's work and ballot as his predecessors, which is saying all that need be said. Mrs. Florence Miller keeps his W. C. T. U. columns bright and sensible. Mrs. Maxfield, the state secretary, works to keep them full, and Mrs. Aldrich, an embodiment of spiritual energy and quick-witted device, presides with equity over the just relations of state and national organs. Blessings on the women of Iowa—rank and file! Blessings have indeed come to them. More are in store. God honors ever those who make large drafts upon Him.

A call upon the Des Moines Register, or more properly Mr. Clarkson, who, if I mistake not, is the Des Moines Register after all, and upon Bishop and Mrs. Hurst in the library of their pleasant home, wound up a day's doings that will be long remembered. The good Bishop though surrounded by his books and permeated with their lore, is no monastic scholar. His sympathies are as wide as humanity itself, and his thoughts have evidently been much upon the prohibition question in Iowa. Conclusions as radical as Governor Sherman's have been with him the result of careful study as well as natural tendency. He is a warm suffragist also and beats no ecclesiastical or political bushes in saying so.

Rev. E. K. Young, the pastor of the First M. E. church in Des Moines, who made one of our pleasant party, is of like faith and works. He was one of the heroes of Amendment Day two years ago, when, facing a terrible surgical ordeal whose postponement might mean death itself, he delayed till in an almost miraculous triumph over weakness, he reached the polls and deposited his vote for Iowa's freedom, then laid quietly down to abide the test of skillful knife and needle. Of such material are Iowa's prohibitionists made. In view of all he had seen and suffered I did not wonder at his question, "Can you, when you have seen what the republican party will do for prohibition, advocate a third party for its overthrow?"

Certainly not in Iowa—nor wherever brave and honest men will come to the front, and ignoring the empty issues that are rapidly losing their ability to even "rattle" the hosts to a rallying point, will retire tricky leaders and tricky methods, and re-consecrate the party once glorious with moral ideas, to its high behest and blessed privilege. But in the states where trusts are betrayed, where petitions are scorned, where, as Miss West says, "legislators forget that their mothers were women," where heart-break and agony are paved into legal highways over which a party rides triumphant—then and there "turn we to the Gentiles." M. B. W.

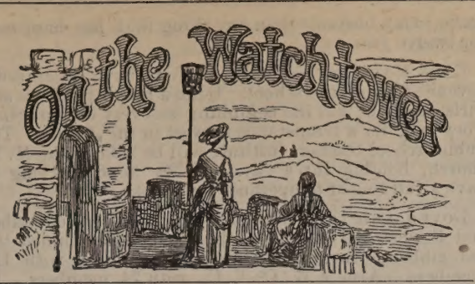
A SERIES of twenty prohibition conferences addressed by Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Lathrop, George W. Bain, Governor St. John and others, will commence on March 2.



If W. C. T. U. women will keep on distinguishing themselves how can I forbear mentioning the fact? This I say by way of meeting the hypercritical. Not only as evangelists but as musicians, the roll of honor shows their names. This time it is Mrs Clinton Smith, our hymn-book compiler, singer of her own sweet songs, and now the author of a sonata which the critics call a fine piece of composition.

"Around King Arthur's table came brave, stalwart men;" so wrote my talented friend, Maria W. Jones, for last week's UNION SIGNAL. But the brave men suffered a "sea change" at the hands of the printers, "into something rich and strange;" "Brown, stalwart men," was their "positively last appearance" which is something new to me. I did not know that the African slave trade existed in King Arthur's time.

Miss Paine of Salt Lake City, has a Band of Hope that will soon number 100 members.

New York state is fairly "buzzing" with scientific temperance. Mrs. Hunt is as ubiquitous as anybody has any right to be in the flesh, and as laborious as W. C. T. U. demands make everybody. She speaks before the eighteenth quarterly convention of Dutchess county W. C. T. U. on Feb. 12 and 13.

* * * * *

By the way, I met two New York ladies the other day, one from Bethlehem and one from Coxsackie. Though not members of the W. C. T. U., as yet, (I hope that genial society will capture them on their return), they promised co-operation with the state society in this work of securing scientific temperance teaching in public schools.

* * * * *

In a letter to the Boston Transcript Mrs. Clara T. Leonard discusses what I should call the wrong side of the suffrage question. Her objections are not very relevant, according to my thinking, because based mainly on the "taxation without representation" theory, in which I confess I never found any very reliable sustenance.

* * * * *

But I must point a moral over against her objection to putting the ballot in the hands of the foreign women because as she says they would vote against temperance legislation as an infringement of their liberties. Wherever these foreign women have been tested in any general way, they have been found as true, if not truer to prohibition than the American woman. Mother-love is not German or Irish, Scandinavian or American, it is human.

Our chalk talker, Mrs. Bayley, flits here and there with the precision of a bee and its industry also. Now it is western New York, thence to Iowa and Kansas, back to Indianapolis and Springfield, and next only the children know where. Where the lambs call, the rhyming sheperdess is sure to follow.

A letter from Rev. James W. Webb, full of good work and good cheer says:

We are so sorry that Capt. Wood is put out of the editorship of The Rescue. But the old soldier is indomitable, and is issuing a temperance paper still

* * * * * *

Miss Henrietta Moore, one of the National W. C. T. U. organizers, is busy at the south where she finds the people most kind and cordial, and they find her practical sensible, genial and eloquent. She says, "I have been just showered with loving words and loving deeds." She attended the Alabama W. C. T. U. convention and unites with Mrs. Chapin in pronouncing it a fine success.

A good minister sends THE UNION SIGNAL a poem on our national crime—the liquor traffic, which embodies a fearful suggestion—

As a nation this awful charge is true
The figures truth will tell,
For a thousand dollars revenue
We send a soul to hell.

Governor St. John is speaking in Colorado, under W. C. T. U. auspices. Mrs. Shields is indefatigable as state president. Under her instruction many of the unions have entered on a course of study in hygiene and heredity.

* * * * *

Speaking of Colorado, reminds me that my old young friend, Dr. Kate Bushnell has charge of the W. C. T. U. in Denver, and report says it is flourishing accordingly.

* * * * *

A correspondent writes me suggestively to ask if there is a W. C. T. U. or a Y. W. C. T. U. in South Minneapolis, the part of that fast growing city where so many men stay in over crowded boarding-houses, away from their homes and see no friendly open place but the saloons.

* * * * *

A certain "Madge" in London Truth makes desperate fun of the recipe for mince pie, which a good temperance woman furnished THE UNION SIGNAL, something like a year ago. Listen to her, and then labor with her, good women and good cooks:

What can the "earnest temperance woman" mean by calling such a frightful mess a "mince pie?" "The liquor the beef was boiled in?" Horrible! Molasses and coffee! Unspeakable!

* * * * *

Mrs. Leavitt is doing a vast amount of good work on the Pacific coast, but in most too quiet a fashion. Why does she not let THE UNION SIGNAL have the results of her itinerancy? The papers have her half way over seas—no badness intended—on her way to the Sandwich Islands and even Japan and Hong Kong—but she is still in San Francisco in spite of them all.

* * * * *

The Retailer, a liquor organ of New York city, laughs on the outside of its sleeve at the espousal of high license doctrines by some well meaning temperance men.

In Ohio it is wicked to sell beer unless a man pays two hundred dollars to benefit parties who do not sell. What a wonderful intellect it must have required to solve so important a problem and find the exact amount required to make the selling of intoxicants an upright and honest business; what an immense amount of drunkenness this two hundred dollars will stop, or rather cover up, so that temperance fanatics cannot see it; what an excellent poultice a few greenbacks make applied to the eyes of fanatical demagogues, and how it will soothe their horror stricken consciences!

* * * * *

Chicago politicians and city law administrators in the shape of mayor and councilmen, must have a soothing sense of duty done when the daily papers are compelled to warn young women to "come and go to and from school and shops in as large crowds as possible," in order to escape the fate of poor Amelia Olson, who was murdered a few steps from her own door a few nights ago, and by whom, even Chicago police cannot find out.

A Rockford temperance man expresses himself thus about the high license delusion:

It is an argument from the bottomless pit, sugarcoated for church members to swallow easily.

The Wisconsin association of Congregationalists, has resolved

This body is fully committed to the entire destruction of the liquor traffic as the ultimate end of the temperance reform. As Christain churches we cannot in this reform accept as our goal a license law of any kind.

* * * * *

Dr. Rush, the secretary of the National Wine and Spirit Dealers Association, and the "brains" of the movement to secure help for the liquor traffic in congress, admits that there is very little hope of securing any relief from the present congress.

The Earl of Shaftesbury said not long since in the house of Lords, that if the great districts of England crowded with the working classes could be polled, it would be found that seven-tenths of the men and all of the women cried in the name of God to give them Sunday closing legislation.

* * * * *

Miss Williard spoke to an audience of 1,200 people at her home in Evanston, on Sunday night last. The meeting was under the auspices of the Citizens League, which promises this year to rid this prohibition town of the "saloon on wheels."

* * * * *

Who that has within ten years attended a national convention of the W. C. T. U. does not remember the sweet and saintly face of "Mother Hill?" Who does not remember her gentle insistence of reminder when the trysting hour of prayer—had rolled around? She has passed on into "the glory that shall be revealed." Even now it fills her expansive spirit, and who can mourn?

Edward Weston is tramping away on his 5000 mile walk for total abstinence, giving temperance addresses of evenings. At last accounts, two weeks ago, he had completed his 50th stage making 2500 miles.

News From the Field.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Boonton.—The earnest temperance and religious women of this place, beginning with the families of the pastors, have rented what was once the bar of a pool room, of a former tavern and converted it, then sanctified it by a thorough cleansing with water. They papered and ornamented the wall and completed the work by opening it as a free reading room for all young men, providing papers, magazines and books which were liberally given by the citizens.

A loan library is also among its attractions, this though small at present, will be increased as the funds come. Owing to the growing temperance sentiment of the people, in a very great degree, and partially at least, to the good influence of the W. C. T. U. as an instrumentality, the municipal election of last spring resulted in a victory for no license, and consequently Boonton has had no saloons or public drinking-places this year. A very different result from that of the previous year, as then there were twenty-one places licensed for the sale of intoxicants.

Port Republic.—Has not a licensed tavern in her vicinity, and the community has been controlled by strict temperance principles, but if a certain man, whom some say is a good citizen, is allowed much longer to corrupt our youth with his manufactured wine, we fear our young men will be seen on our streets intoxicated. Look out for home made wines!

Mrs. Downs our state president addressed the New Jersey Alliance on the work of temperance women throughout the state. In the evening session Mrs. Downs called the attention of the ladies present to the importance of attending to the prisons and station houses and looking after women arrested for drinking. She said that a large number of wives had been restored to their husbands, and girls who had been led astray had been restored to parents or provided with situations where they could lead honorable lives and earn their living. She stated that the W. C. T. U. has 3,500 members in New Jersey, and is constantly increasing. Rev. Mr. Morris spoke in complimentary terms of the W. C. T. U. and the good it had done, after which the meeting was brought to a close.

Asbury Park.—One of the saddest cases that has ever occurred in Monmouth county was the death of a gentleman in Asbury Park, for several years a popular conductor on the New Jersey Central railroad. He has fallen a victim to the liquor traffic, which sweeps away each day 200 of our citizens. He is cut off in his prime by this great crime which is yet in most of the land protected by law.

Mr. James A. Bradley, gives every "New Year day," a free lunch and variety entertainment, in Educational Hall for the purpose of keeping the young people from visiting the near by-towns in search of liquor. The entertainment begins early in the morning and continues till late at night, with short intermissions for dinner and supper. Mr. Bradley is to be commended for his good deeds. This year the audience contained a large number of the better class of people. Nothing of an immoral nature is permitted on the stage.

Oceanie.—Lies between Red Bank and Seabright. The whole neck of land is known as Rumson Neck. The name is derived from the fact that it was sold by the natives for a barrel of rum. The place had its beginning in the rum traffic. It is however being transformed into a beautiful park. As a rule the place is temperate, as is seen by a quick circulation of a remonstrance when another license was sought, and the applicant failed to get the license. We hold temperance meetings and hope to banish the curse from our midst.

Haddonfield.—On Friday evening of this week, a public meeting will be held in the Methodist Episcopal church to take steps toward the organization of a branch of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Downs and Mrs. Ellis are expected to address the meeting, and it is hoped that a good, strong, efficient organization may be formed. We have plenty of material; good earnest, Christian women, who are deeply interested in the work, and who, if they can be brought together, will do efficient work for God and temperance.

Newark.—Good news comes to us from Newark. Another W. C. T. U. has been formed, and this time among the colored friends, so Mount Holly no longer stands alone. They met on Monday evening at No. 12 Beaver street, at the rooms of the W. C. T. U., and after organization by the county vice president, Mrs. Denman (through Mrs. Bourne), God graciously set his seal of approbation upon the work by giving them three penitents, who rose for prayers and signed the pledge.

Allentown is being greatly stirred through the labors of Mrs. F. H. Carr and others. There has been no such awakening in forty years. The highest compliment to the character of the work was given by the tavern-keeper, who said, if I knew Mrs. C. I would call and request her to leave the place for she has done more harm to my business than any thing that has happened for twelve years.

Cape May City.—The W. C. T. U. have organized a juvenile temperance school. Quite a number of boys and girls came out and the beginning was very encouraging. They look for a temperance harvest in the future. The public school teachers institute will be held in the M. E. church, holding three days. They hope ere long to have a full line of temperance text books.

Dover and Chester.—During the labors of Mabee and English 500 had taken the pledge and donned the red ribbon. A reform club was organized with 125 members. Also a W. C. T. U. with 74 members. In Dover gospel temperance meetings are largely attended. We are looking after the boys and girls and hope to save many from intemperance.

Bordentown W. C. T. Union has very comfortable rooms on Union street, with a reading room attached. At a meeting held last week, Mrs. President Downs addressed the people on the all absorbing question, total abstinence. The ladies of this union are wide awake.

Chataue.—This is the first news from Chateau, named by the descendants of the Puritans. A public meeting held on Sabbath morning in the Presbyterian pulpit, and at the Methodist church in the evening. Subject, the responsibility of the churches in the temperance work.

May's Landing.—Court convened this week and three licenses were granted on the first day. The petitions were strongly backed by men of unblemished character, and some were Christian men. Is it Christian-like to put ones seal on this instrument of death at this age of the world?

Williamstown.—The pastors of this place are preparing to give a prominent place to temperance during the week of prayer by a special mass meeting.

The Woodstown Register has opened its columns to the W. C. T. U. of that place. A committee has been appointed to take charge of this department.

Linwood.—A glorious work is in progress here.

MISSOURI.

FOURTH DISTRICT CONVENTION W. C. T. U. AT BURLINGTON JUNCTION.

This convention was held January 16 and 17. There were six unions represented. Mrs. S. N. Peck read an excellent essay on Our Future Men and Women. Appointment of committees and reports of delegates followed. At the evening session the address of welcome in behalf of the citizens, by Judge W. J. Nelson.

An address of welcome in behalf of the Burlington Junction W. C. T. U. by Mrs. L. S. Dodds, president. Response in behalf of the delegates, by Mrs. Hoffman, president of the state union. Mrs. Hoffman then gave a grand temperance lecture, after which tobacco and alcohol pledges were presented, which were signed by a number of persons.

Thursday morning, after opening exercises, discussion of various subjects of interest to the W. C. T. U. followed. The resignation of Mrs. Cochran, the district president, was next received, and Mrs. Downey, of Mound City, elected in her stead.

At the afternoon session the Burlington Junction Band of Hope, in regalia and bearing beautiful banners, marched in. After singing by the children, Mrs Hoffman gave such a talk as the little ones enjoy, and cannot forget.

Reports of committee were next in order. The committee on plans of work reported the following:

Resolved, That we earnestly seek a deeper consecration in our work, remembering that it is not by might nor by power, but the Spirit of the Lord of Hosts that we must conquer.

Resolved, That we have given too little attention to organization; that hereafter we will seek to form a union in each school district.

Resolved, That to reach the confidence and convince the people, we must put before them arguments, facts, and statistics, and that we will earnestly seek to increase the circulation of temperance literature.

Resolved, That we make more earnest efforts to increase the circulation of The Union Signal, believeing that it is the most efficient aid we can have in our work.

Resolved, That as the press is the most powerful factor in moulding public opinion, we earnestly desire every local union to appoint a press superintendent, that the local papers may keep this subject constantly before the public.

Resolved, That we condemn the licensing of the criminal traffic of alcohol, and that we will seek to bring all lawful pressure against the sale of it without license.

Resolved, That as frequent reports and discussions are helpful to our work, we will endeavor to have a convention in each county of our district during the coming year.

Resolved, That it is woman's first duty to protect her home, and that as this protection has not been secured by the present qualified voter, it becomes her duty to seek the ballot to this end.

Then followed resolutions of thanks to the different organizations and friends who had assisted in the convention.

At the evening session the I. O. G. T. were present in a body, and Miss Minnie Gregory, W. C. T., gave a fine address on behalf of the order.

Prof. Bryant also gave an address upon the origin and work of the I. O. G. T., and their fraternal relations with the W. C. T. U. Music by Prof. Durham's quartette.

Address by Edwin W. Fraser. Mrs. Hoffman then followed with an able address upon the work and ability of women, past and present. Closed by singing temperance doxology. This closed the convention.

We trust each one went out from it with stronger faith and broader views, and a more earnest purpose to give of her best unto this work. The thanks of the convention are especially due to the young ladies for the beautiful manner in which the church was decorated.

Corresponding Secretary, Angie T. Wilson.

MARYLAND.

JOTTINGS BY MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

The death angel has hovered over our Maryland homes and taken from among us those whose great gain to us is loss.

During the services of Memorial Day, the stormy Sabbath day when in the church where ten years ago we first assembled, our members sang the Crusade Hymn, a sorrowing band in a town not far away were standing by a new-made grave. The solemn "Dust to dust," was spoken over the stilled form of one of our state vice presidents, Mrs. Gen. G. H. Nye, of Laurel. We miss from among us one worthy of all love and honor, a woman of high social position, rare culture, a great, loving heart, and devoted to the cause of temperance. Long and sadly will she be missed by the dear circle in her beautiful home, by the social circle of which she was one of the brightest ornaments, by the poor, and by the little children of the Band of Hope; for to know her was to love her.

"Passed, not lost, gone, not forgot!" her name will be kept in our remembrance with all that is pure, lovely and of good report.

Today we mourn another broken link, Mrs. Thos. Hepburn, a tender, loving friend, a consecrated Christian, who worked so faithfully in West Virginia with Jennie Smith, is not, for God has taken her. The busy hands are folded, and the seal of peace is on the stilled face. "For so He giveth His beloved sleep." The workers put aside "the pilgrim's staff and shoon," but thank God the work goes on.

They who are left lonely pause for a tribute leaf and tear, then take up the broken threads from their hands, and join them anew in loving faith and memory.

They who remain draw nearer to Him who has called some from among us. Catching, as it were, a gleam of shining wings, an echo of the songs of those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb—with souls uplifted, hearts full of earnest, purpose, and busy hands, the Maryland W. C. T. U. take up the work that is still given them to do.

I sit here in the twilight and think of those whose feet shall never more grow weary, of those missing from our midst, and of Auretta Hoyt, who, years ago, spoke kind welcome to "my Maryland," and as the shadows deepen I look beyond with tender yearning and glad thought that some day for us will come

> The saddest, happiest time of all
> We court, and yet half shun,
> When our Heavenly Father will break the thread
> And say, that our work is done.

IOWA.

SIXTH DISTRICT.

For two years I have been corresponding with Miss Lucia Kimball, hoping to secure her services, as lecturer, in this part of Iowa, but unavoidable circumstances have prevented her coming until the 13th of this month. Her first meeting in this district was in Grinnell, where she had large audiences as long as she could remain, and so much pleased were the ministers and college faculty with her that they urged her to hold a series of meetings, believing it would result in great good to the students. On account of the revival meetings so generally in progress, I had much difficulty in making engagements for her, but I want to say, as it may be a help to others, that wherever she went under such circumstances it was found not only not to be a hindrance to the revival work, but a great help.

In some places where she joined with ministers in holding protracted meetings, the work of the Lord was carried on with power, and souls long fettered with sin came out into the glorious liberty of Christian life.

Bringing the light of gospel truths to the rescue of the poor inebriate is meeting the needs of his weakness. Whilst we take from him the cup that kills soul and body, we must by every possible means urge him to "take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord."

Last Sunday Miss Kimball was in Oskaloosa. At three o'clock in the afternoon was the children's meeting, and though we had secured one of the largest churches in the place, it was soon filled to overflowing. The children were so closely seated that many of them must have been uncomfortable, yet they were so interested that perfect quiet and order were maintained. Whilst she is broad in her reformatory views, yet she shows her preference for her special work, that of training the children to fill the temperance ranks.

Her Bible readings were clear and instructive, and not wresting the Scriptures with fanciful interpretations which might not bear the test of careful examination.

At half past seven in the evening the house was again crowded. Her address was logical and convincing, so that some holding the most conservative views on temperance expressed their high appreciation of her presentation of facts.

MARSHALLTOWN.—Surely Iowa will not be found in the back ground in reporting memorial day. I have been expecting to see so many reports as to crowd THE UNION SIGNAL for the next year. I have learned of some grand meetings in our own district, and am proud that the dear women did so well. I have hesitated to write you because I thought so many others would send in better accounts. We were well pleased with our success and a good impression was left on the community. Nearly all the ministers preached sermons in the morning in commemoration of the day. In the evening our W. C. T. U. had special service in the Presbyterian church, our president, Mrs. Woods, presiding. The crusade hymns were sang and the crusade psalm read by the president. Rev. Mr. Day offered prayer. An excellent address was given by Mrs. M. P. Scheeler of our union, the subject being, the crusade, the National, state, district, county and local W. C. T. U. Our local union has raised and expended over twelve hundred dollars, and none of it obtained by lotteries. Our senator and representative were in the audience, and many others who had not known much of our work. All were well pleased and surprised at the numerous lines of work belonging to the W. C. T. U. Our collection for state and National was good. Our union was well represented at the reception in Des Moines, and was never in better condition. The petitions have been circulated in great numbers, and already we begin to hope for a full harvest in prohibition and reform.

DAKOTA.

Central Dakota has had the services of Capt. Van Etten since October. Temperance people here agree that he is a most valuable helper in the good cause.

At the close of one of his lectures in Brookings, the sum of $200 was raised by the citizens as a fund with which to prosecute saloon keepers found selling without a license. The chief violator of the law was soon in jail, the counts on his indictments coming faster than the bondsmen. Finding no other way out, he agreed to stop if they would cease to prosecute.

At Lake Preston, in the famous "no license" county of Kingsbury, a man lately undertook to sell beer, ostensibly. An indignation meeting of the citizens, and another were of no avail. In spite of their protests he could sell beer and he would, and if they found him violating any law they might punish him. Evidence of violation was soon obtained, and the keeper of "The Blind Pig" resort was summarily ejected from the village.

At Iroquois, on the western boundary of Kingsbury county, public sentiment has become strong enough to banish the violators of the no license law and break up their business.

At DeSmet a saloon keeper, then in jail for violation of the law, sent word to the Captain not to be too hard on him and he would quit the business.

At Pierre, a stronghold of the liquor interest, the Captain has delivered four temperance lectures, and one on his experience in the war, "From Ellsworth to Lincoln."

Mrs. Van Etten accompanies her husband and assists him in singing a great variety of good music.

CONNECTICUT.

MOODUS.—On the first Thursday of Nov. 1883, I attended my first union meeting in Moodus. The ladies present enjoyed a social talk, one and another telling of cheering reports from here and there, till at last one lady said: "What is the matter with Connecticut? You all tell about every state in the Union but Connecticut, I would like to know what Connecticut is doing?" So would I. I know that some of our most earnest workers are in this state, but why not make themselves heard through the official organ of the W. C. T. U? Perhaps they are waiting for one of her adopted daughters to open the way. I am not going to try to report for the state. Middlesex county has a stirring, active, vice president, in the person of Mrs. J. N. Chapman, of Deep River, and if there were nine more women in the county as consecrated as she, I think every school district in the state would set up for a beacon light, "Uncompromising prohibition of the liquor traffic here." Middletown union, of which I first became a member, is doing a good work in at least three of the departments,—Juvenile work, Press work and Temperance literature. There are other departments well filled, but work in these is the most noticeable. Perhaps some member now residing there may be induced to send fuller report after reading this. We are told to "provoke one another to love and to good works," and good reports create greater zeal and interest. Our union in Moodus is only a few months old, has but few members, and they are scattered. Meetings are held only once a month, not often enough to keed the fire briskly burning. However we are not quite discouraged, nor really idle. Our local paper says the W. C. T. U. distributed four hundred and fifty copies of the crusade number of THE UNION SIGNAL. They also secured a favorable answer from the school board when they petitioned for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. They were just congratulating themselves when a democratic member, just elected to the board, asked permission to reconsider the matter. It was granted, the vote was retaken, and for some reason we have a whole year to consider why the first vote was overruled and why we cannot have scientific temperance instruction in the schools of the town of East Haddam this year. They have introduced temperance lessons in the three Protestant churches. Were to organize a Band of Hope last Sunday. Have had some good lectures and intend to have more. So much for our union. Now I want to chat a little about what I see in the columns of our paper.

First comes those "rural districts," and I find in that a repetition of my question in a letter to a friend, "How shall we most effectually stir up the country places?" Some localities hardly know the sound of prohibition, and are content to go on voting the same ticket their fathers did without seeing any necessity for a change, and ignorantly, let us hope, helping make links in the chain with which the rum party is binding our nation. I look a little further and find my floating ideas "in a nutshell." Five of the western states are going to have "temperance conferences." Several meetings addressed by some of our very best speakers. Now that will be grand for cities, but how can that plan be utilized to suit our country places and pockets? If people are not interested in a matter, they are not likely to give liberally for any project, least of all for this where they can call up so many unreasonable reasons why they should not. Then there is the work among the lumbermen; it is grand. I can remember as a child with what wonder I looked upon the crowds of men who passed my home on their way for a winter in the lumber woods, and wondering what they did Sundays, when they could not work nor go to church. Thank heaven, something besides card-playing, drinking and loose reading is being sent them now. And Miss Casseday's work. Surely the stars in her crown of rejoicing will be very bright, for not every one in full health can do what she upon her sick bed is doing for "God and home, and native land."

Is not that a cheering report from New York state, that the prohibitory amendment is likely to be submitted to the people this year? What will the people do with it? is the uppermost thought with me now.

Yours cordially, LOTTIE MILLEN.

CANADA.

Mr. W. J. Spicer, superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, has issued the following circular to the employes of the road:

I would ask you to consider very seriously the advisability of joining our temperance movement for the year 1884. In my circular, December, 1880, I said "there were a good many reasons specially applicable to railway employes for abstaining from the use of intoxicating drink."

You have the lives of the public and the safety of persons and property entrusted to your care, requiring at all times the utmost possible caution and vigilance in the performance of your duty. Again, railway employes from their liability to night work, irregular hours, exposure to all kinds of weather, and from the foolish and expensive custom of "treating," are exposed to much danger and many temptations. Even passengers have gone so far as to offer, and in fact urge, conductors and brakesmen, when on duty, to take drink, and have been the cause of trainmen's dismissal from the service. I am sorry to say that I have had to deal summarily with such cases as have come to my knowledge. I only wish I could deal as severely with the perhaps good-natured but most thoughtless and inconsiderate passengers.

Men subjected to such temptations, at any time, are safe only as total abstainers. The "one glass more" often has the effect of making a man careless, sleepy, and indifferent to danger, if not worse, at a time when he most needs to have all his senses clear and wide awake for his own and others' safety.

I have only to refer you to the Offence Circulars to satisfy you that I am speaking in the best interests of every employe of every grade, and in the interest of the company and the public, in urging you to become total abstainers for the new year 1884.

Is not this a grand movement? Surely Mr. Spicer deserves the thanks of the public, and the warm encomiums of the press, which he is receiving for his noble stand in this matter.

The W. C. T. Unions are petitioning the school commissioners to authorize the use of Dr. Richardson's "Temperance Lesson Book," and are using personal influence with the teachers.

Miss Greenwood, of Brooklyn, N. Y., addressed our Dominion Temperance Alliance, together with Prof. Foster and others at the annual meeting Jan. 25.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ALLEGHENY.—Every line of work that we take up, is successful, and we do a little of nearly everything, lunch room, with reading room and hall for meetings attached. We have employed a cultivated, Christian woman, superior in every respect, who devotes her whole time to reform work, a member of the state board of public charities. She has every facility for visiting and corresponding with prisoners and her work has brought forth most encouraging results. We expect shortly to open lodging rooms, a long felt need.

We are not "troubled or discouraged" but we always want more money, and feel that our experience is like Ezekiel's in 33rd chapter, verses 30 to 33. We keep up delightful and spiritual weekly meetings for our own workers, and of course gospel meetings for reform work, but are not given to novelties or sensations, try to hold up Christ and there are always some needy souls to listen. We are just now having printed and distributed in the pews of our church cards of invitation with leaflets. Also sending packages of literature to our physicians, and also to the students of our three theological seminaries, on unfermented wine. Some of them do not get the right teaching, according to our ideas.

We raise money by membership, subscription, and employment office. (Lunch room sustains itself, but nothing more.) This is the "off" year for legislature, but we are making efforts for constitutional amendment and compulsory temperance education law.

We have a kitchen garden teacher who devotes her whole time to classes in our rooms, orphan asylums, etc. —always teaching catechism in connection—Band of Hope and sewing school. More helpers here, is our continual cry.

We are just beginning monthly meetings of our county union. I am doing my best to work them up, and hope for good results.

FRANCES L. SWIFT.

MISSOURI.

CAMERON.—Mrs. Clara Hoffman was with us the 19th and 20th of January. The whole town was moved by her Christian and logical eloquence. She touched hearts no other speaker on temperance has ever reached. One reason was, she came "In the name of the Lord" as did David when he went forth to battle with Goliath. Never has any one left the strong impressions for good in this town, as Mrs. Hoffman.

Many are asking when she can return, and say if she could labor one week in Cameron, great would be the reaping for God and temperance. Our union is steadily progressing, and daily becoming the power and beauty of true consecration to God and the work.

Our Y. W. C. T. U. comes to the front stronger than ever with aspirations and plans for future good.—R.L S.

ILLINOIS

BELVIDERE.—Am at work with the W. C. T. U. and the M. E. church. Organized a Reform Club on the basis of our Rockford Club, (in which I was grandly helped by several of our Rockford boys), numbering over fifty men. All the officers have been converted since their election, and over one hundred persons have been blessedly saved, of all classes. Work going on yet. I went before it was really a sure thing that I was able to work, but have been upheld of the Holy Spirit.

S. M. I. H.

COLCHESTER.—Mrs. Lucy Simpson, of Detroit, Mich. has just closed a profitable week's work in our town—Colchester—a whisky town numbering near two thousand inhabitants with four saloons and two drug stores.

Much bitterness exists in the whisky circles at the earnest, plain and profitable words of Mrs. Simpson, and at the bold stand of our handful of temperance workers. About two hundred and fifty signed the pledge and tied on the "knot of ribband blue."

Our Good Templars Glee Club furnished excellent temperance songs that sounded warnings and pleadings in the ears of the crowded audiences that each night came to hear.

At the close of the last lecture (on Friday evening) Mrs. Simpson organized a W. C. T. U. of the following officers and members: President, Mrs. S. D. Mills: a vice president from each church: Methodist, Mrs. Rev. A. C. Calkins; Christian, Mrs. Amanda Stevens; recording secretary, Miss C. M. Roberts; corresponding secretary, Miss May Wier; treasurer, Mrs. Delia Underhill. The trustees of the Good Templars' lodge very kindly have offered their lodge room for the use of the ladies as their place of meeting and headquarters.

As temperance workers we are weak—surrounded by a beer-loving class of English miners—yet we find—and as omens of good to come—that the people are gradually awakening to the alarming results of the liquor traffic, and we are anxiously praying and working for "no license" at the spring elections.

Yours for prohibition, A. C. CALKINS,
Pastor M. E. Church.

PROSPECT PARK.—Last Saturday, per agreement Miss A. J. Carothers, lady principal of Wheaton college, Mrs. Prof. Lumry and myself, went to the Park and organized a union. This I believe to be one of the direct results of our last county convention held here but a few weeks ago, at which time some new and interesting features of the work were presented and action taken by convention. The following are the officers: Mrs. Mattie McChesney, president; Norah Wagner, and Jennie Miner, vice presidents; Miss Emma O'Brien, recording secretary; Miss Anna Boyd, corresponding secretary; Miss Rose Weidman, treasurer. All of Prospect Park, Du Page county.

A little over one year ago, there was one union only in this county, now there are five, all but the last working faithfully and earnestly for the cause and the Master.

I would love to see the list of unions increased, to such an extent, that instead of one state meeting, we would be obliged to hold two to accommodate the workers.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster, of Iowa, have been our guests and last evening, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, in her own brilliant way, delightfully entertained a large audience in this town. She made prohibition very plain. At the close of her two hours' lecture, from that part of the crowd which stood during the entire evening, came the voices, "Go on, go on." And she did go on, but it was on the 10 p. m. train, for her engagement the next day in Des Moines, Iowa, cheered on by many a "God speed." Prayers and blessings from many Christian hearts of this place will follow this dear woman through days of work and weariness. MRS. M. L. STRATTON.

CENTRAL W. C. T. U. OF CHICAGO.

The regular monthly meeting of the Central W. C. T. U. was held January 31, at the headquarters of the union, room 36, No. 161 LaSalle street. The attendance was large. The spirit of the cause inhabited the rooms. The exercises were opened by Mrs. Stroud Smith of Liverpool, an able Bible-reader and expounder. Mrs. Smith will pursue the plan, already inaugurated with the approval and support of the union, of giving these Bible-readings every Thursday morning.

In the regular order of business there ensued the presentation of the various reports that show concretely and with a certain numerical exactness what the union is doing and what is constantly demanded of it. These reports embrace the proceedings of two months in the labors of the Central Union.

Miss Helen Hood, corresponding and office secretary, reported fifteen signatures to the pledge. The treasurer showed receipts to date, $627.85; expenditures, $622.68. Mrs. President T. B. Carse sketched the work recently accomplished and to come. She announced that the presidents of five medical colleges had accepted the offer of the Central Union of a prize of $25 to that student in each institution writing the best essay on the physiological action of alcohol.

On appeal of Mrs. Sue M. D. Fry, of Bloomington, a a committee—Mrs. Carse—had been appointed to receive subscriptions for the Emma Bond fund. Mrs. Carse took occasion to emphasize the noble character of the charity and the awful nature of the unavenged outrage.

Mrs. Charles E. Shipman had been appointed chairman of a committee to establish a cooking school at Bethesda Mission.

The president of the union had been empowered to take the necessary steps toward incorporating the C. W. C. T. U., in order that it might hold property. In this way the union is preparing to erect a building of its own some time next year. An endeavor will be made to secure a fund of $250,000. Capitalists are being and will be visited and asked to subscribe $20,000, $30,000, or $50,000, which, secured by the property on which this mortgage will be paid off each year, will yield them an income of 3 per cent on their subscribed investment.

The system of maintaining matrons at the police stations had been inspected, to the great surprise and satisfaction of the visitors, by Mrs. Sneed, Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Harris, all of St. Louis. A committee had been appointed to consider the advisability of establishing a midnight mission on Fourth avenue.

Mrs. Hobbs reported the character and number of the offenses committed by women coming under the supervision of Mrs. S. L. J. Littell at the Harrison street police station. In the months of December and January 607 women had been arrested, of whom 146 were colored. The arrests in December were 354; in January 253.

Of the women arrested in December, 57 were under 20 years, and 215 between 20 and 30; in January 42 were under 20, and 156 between 20 and 30. During the entire year 3,766 women had been arrested at this one station. Mrs. Littell by her labors was thoroughly exhausted. She also was spending her entire income, apart from what was barely needful for her necessities, in behalf of the prisoners under her charge. Reports of other matrons were submitted.

Reports on the hospital and Bethel Home were rendered respectively by Mrs. D. J. True and Mrs. Haines. Mrs. Branch reporting for the industrial home, said that the need of teachers was very urgent. Miss L. E. Kimball, speaking of the cause in Iowa, characterized Iowa's legislators as men and not machines.

Mrs. Hagans gave an encouraging report of the work of the Bethesda Gospel Temperance and Medical Union, at No. 129 Fourth avenue, which was opened Nov. 13.

The ladies of the union having waited for Miss Frances E. Willard to address them, were rewarded for their loyal interest in anything the President of the National Union has to say. In the tenderest way she spoke of her original identification with the temperance cause ten years ago, and of the banner character of the Chicago and Illinois unions. She concluded, moisture in her own eyes, moisture in almost every eye in the room, by telling how she happened some two years before to be asked to speak one day with an unfortunate inmate of a Harrison street station cell. The poor creature had been sadly degraded by drink, an appetite for which a physicians' prescription had developed. She was a school teacher, of fine southern family. She was in a sad plight that day. Through the bars of the cell Miss Willard had thrust her dainty handkerchief to dry the unhappy woman's tears. But there came reform, and salvation, and self help, and a noble respectability out of it all.

When Miss Willard finished speaking her attention was called to a fine looking, nicely dressed lady sitting near who was weeping grateful, and who would say unhappy tears? It was she who was moaning that day in the degradation, hopelessness and misery of that station house cell. Like Mrs. Carse Miss Willard endorsed the project of aiding in contributing to the Emma Bond fund.

TWELFTH DISTRICT.

The executive committee of the 12th district held a meeting at Barry on the 16th, which was well attended, delightful and profitable. The full payment of the share of UNION SIGNAL stock, subscribed at Alton, was ordered, and thus the injunction, "Owe no man," (especially THE UNION SIGNAL) "anything" was obeyed, to my relief, as this is a cardinal point in my creed. Under the excellent leadership and "strong faith" of our financial secretary, Mrs. E. E. Read, of Richfield, we are making progress in our finances, in accordance with our new plan, unions generally accepting their assessments with willing promptness. The first one to report (all honor to the same) delighting and surprising us almost before our return from state convention was the Y. W. C. T. U. of Winchester, through its earnest efficient president, Miss Maggie Huston, saying, "We accept our assessment, are raising the money, and await instructions as to its disposal." Thus are they the banner union, and she a teacher whose pupils receive instruction in all things needful to their wellbeing and future good citizenship. Richfield, though a very little city, comes grandly up as the first W. C. T. U. to send in its quota to the state treasurer. But no wonder, since it is the secretary's home, and, also, that of a laboring man who called at her house and asked to be allowed to help the women to raise the money, which might be $2000 in place of $1000 if they so willed. Her husband, too, gives self denying, substantial aid, even to the span of gray ponies, which "are at your service ladies," led Mrs. Read and myself to undertake an extended trip, which footed up to a hundred miles, bringing us to various places where the iron horse goeth not, resulting in re-organizing of Stones Prairie and Hull, and the organizing of Beverly, Kingston (Fairweather) and Liberty, and visiting several other unions. All of these are engaged in juvenile and UNION SIGNAL work, and our hearts are encouraged to go forward in the hope of a glorious harvest somewhere in the good time coming. Mrs. E. P. Baldwin, of Perry, is the treasurer of this district. IRENE H. SMITH.

COLUMBUS.—Please chronicle the advent of the youngest member of the W. C. T. U. sisterhood of the 12th district on January 28, at Columbus, Adams county with Mrs. S. B. Stenbeck, as president; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. F. Peet; recording secretary, Miss Anna Norris; treasurer, Miss Fannie Flagg; superintendent of young woman's work and temperance literature, Mrs. Ruth McNeall. This union is particularly happy in its officers, combining youth and age. Its president, one of Ohio's daughters, fresh from the battlefield, a veritable "Mrs. Cherryble." The corresponding secretary, an original Ohio crusader, a life long temperance woman, now nearly eighty-seven years of age, still active and enthusiastic. It starts out grandly with fifteen active and six honorary members, and a community which welcomes it to its midst, notwithstanding the presence of some cider barrels, here and there, whose shadow we trust and believe, will, from henceforth, grow "beautifully less."

ELGIN.—During the first year of our existence as a W. C. T. U. we have successfully established a coffee house, a wide awake Band of Hope, an industrial school, and a night school. Our president has combined all the necessary qualities for success, and under her judicious management we have succeeded in establishing all the enterprises undertaken. A committee of ladies have personally visited all our saloons, and invited whoever they found there, to attend our meetings.

ALABAMA.

THE STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

I left Tuscaloosa this morning, where I have been attending the joint conventions of the Alabama State Alliance and the state convention of the W. C. T. U. The temperance organization of ladies, in Tuscaloosa, was not a W. C. T. U. They had somehow or other gotten the idea we were too advanced for them, so they called themselves the Woman's Home Union, and took for their motto, "The home is woman's sphere." They had selected for their officers the very best women in the state and formulated a beautiful constitution and were hard at work.

My hostess, a South Carolina friend, the sister of our governor was secretary, and as we sat together on the evening of my arrival, arranging the motto "For God, and home, and native land," she said, "this is in honor of you, and your union." It cut me to the heart, and I felt that we women of the south who had suffered together, could not have any divided interests now in this battle with the terrible foe threatening the homes of our own south-land and I knew there was no reason why we should not rally under one banner.

As soon as the convention met they requested me to act as president, and I made the first business of the meeting a discussion of our differences, with a view to uniting. We had considerable discussion, but upon my assurance that the rules of the W. C. T. U. were not arbitrary, that each state union managed its own work in just the way it decided best, and that we were not required to adopt any advanced views, and would not do it if we were, unless convinced ourselves it was absolutely necessary in order to save our homes and loved ones, and then we would go as far as any women on earth. Convinced of this they tied on the white ribbon and were no longer stepsisters.

At the close of the meeting I took our pledge into the audience and every lady in the well filled chapel joined the W. C. T. U.

The State Alliance was here in session and requested a committee from the W. C. T. U. to meet a committee from their body to decide upon the ways and means best to insure prohibition. I had the honor of serving on that committee.

One of the resolutions determined upon was a petition to the legislature to allow the tax payers, and freeholders and their wives, and daughters of proper age to say by signature whether they will have saloons in their midst or not. This is a long step in the right direction and if gained will close the rum shops of Alabama.

Mrs. H. W. Smith cannot come to the south now, and she is very wise, for we have had no such weather in one hundred and thirty-five years. I should have been very sorry for her to have been with me last night. I am trying to get to the Georgia convention in time, and I paced the sleety rail road track one hour, at midnight to catch a freight or accommodation train, and yet here I am, and the Georgia convention going on. No connections are made. This is not the proper season for conventions. S. F. CHAPIN.

NEBRASKA.

LINCOLN.—Not having seen any reports in THE UNION SIGNAL of late of W. C. T. U. work in Nebraska I will say that our union at Lincoln is doing most excellent work and our weekly meetings are increasing in interest and attendance. We hold a public meeting once a month. Crusade day was celebrated by a mass meeting at the opera house. At the back of the stage upon which were seated members of the union, the pastors of the city, and the presidents of the Y. M. C. A. and Red Ribbon club, swung a beautiful banner with inscription, "Love; W. C. T. U. for God, Home and Native Land." "Crusade, 1873–1883."

Mrs. H. N. Hardy, our former state president, read the history of the crusade, which was interesting throughout, after which the pastors made various and appropriate remarks on the temperance work. One pastor said, "The Spartan women told their sons to return with their shields or upon them; and this is the spirit which is actuating the women of theland in this temperance work." We hope a day is not far distant when Nebraska can say with Kansas, "Prohibition has carried." And now as we stand at the beginning of the new year, if God should give it to us, let us resolve in God-given strength that the annals of 1884 shall record a year of greater progress than any heretofore known since 1873 when crusade bells rang out the doom of the atrocious traffic in alcoholic drinks. MRS. C. M. LEIGHTON, Sec.

NEWS IN A NUT-SHELL.

THE Woman's Christain Temperance Union at St. John, N. B., has 180 members, and a Wide Awake Club of 50 girls and 80 boys; it also operates a promising coffee room.

A CONSTITUTIONAL amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic was introduced into the New York legislature by Rev. W. H. Olin, a gray-haired Methodist minister from Binghamton.

LAMAR, Barton county Mo., is enjoying a grand temperance revival. Geo. Woodford spent a week with them ending Jan. 16. He was followed by Mr. Joe Critchfield. About six hundred have signed the pledge, "many of them, men who have indulged their appetites too often and too long."

THE Y. W. C. T. U. of Wilmington, Delaware, is doing good work. A flourishing society was recently organized among the colored women. The Wilmington W. C. T. U. holds a prayer meeting every Tuesday afternoon, and the unions throughout the state are working with the determination of persevering until victory is gained.

MRS. L. B. BARRETT, secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Boston, Mass., reports that the license receipts in Boston this year were nearly $30,000 more than last, showing that the drink system is fostered and grows under license laws. It required $50,000 more to support paupers and criminals than last year. The women are working for constitutional prohibition.

THROUGH the efforts of a consecrated W. C. T. U. woman, Mrs. Lowry, Sedgwick county, Kansas, has a union in nearly every township, with two unions in several townships. As a direct result of this work of organization, and the fund of $10,000 subscribed for prosecution, the saloon keepers seem to have all skipped. One fellow re-opened but he was immediately arrested and put under heavy bonds.

"THE temperance cause is stronger today in Alabama than ever before. Our people are thoroughly aroused on the subject and will not stop short of absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic liquors in the state. Many of our most influential men are espousing the temperance cause, and the day is near at hand when no good man will be found to oppose it. Our women are all on our side, and we are 'marching on to victory.'"

EX-GOV. BLACKBURN says in the New York Sun: "I think prohibition can be carried in Kentucky. We have the local option law in half the towns. The votes of the colored people are for whisky. I abhor whisky. I think I am the only man who ever held the position of chief magistrate of any state or territory in this country, who never took a drink of any kind of spirituous liquor, never bet a cent, or touched a card. I am proud of my record in this respect."

NOVA SCOTIA is practically a prohibition province. Eleven counties have adopted the Scott act by vote of the people, and the twelfth county is preparing to do so. Much difficulty has been experienced in some places in strictly enforcing the law, but it is hoped that the system of inspection which will prevail when the Dominion license law goes into operation—if it ever does so—will assist in carrying out the provisions of the Scott act more fully.

ON the 24th ult., the bill for the establishment of a civil government for the territory of Alaska was before the senate. The bill contained a clause prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors. Senator Plumb favored the restriction, affirming that most of the difficulty of keeping order there, had been the result of whisky. A motion of Mr. Ingalls was agreed to, excepting from the prohibitory clause, liquors needed for medicinal or scientific purposes, and in this form the clause was adopted. This commits the general government, so far, to the principle of prohibition.

REPORTS to the internal revenue bureau shows increased activity in Illinois distilling circles. In that state 17 distilleries were in operation November 1, making 103,000 gallons per day, against 90,000 gallons daily on the same date last year. Twice as much whisky is made in Illinois as in any other state.

"THE life of Christianity," said Luther, "consists of possessive pronouns." It is one thing to say, "Christ is a Savior;" it is quite another thing to say, "He is my Savior and my Lord." The devil can say the first; the true Christian alone can say the second.—J. C. Ryle.

A BRAHMIN moved, and an Englishman seconded, the motion, at a meeting last month of the senate of the Bombay (India) university, that hereafter the pronoun "he" and its derivatives should be deemed to denote either sex. The motion was carried without a division. It will throw open the learned professions to women in the western presidency of India.

ONE night, in the early days of this city, a party of men were winding up a spree in a saloon, when one of the members dashed the liquor from his glass and said: "I dash it away forever!" From this incident the Dashaway Society was formed, and it did incalculable good till certain schemers conceived the idea of acquiring for their own benefit the property, which has become valuable.—San Francisco Evening Post.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

THE PENOGRAPH.—For more than thirty years inventive genius has industriously labored to produce a perfectly automatic fountain pen. Numerous devices, possessing various degrees of merit, have been patented and extensively sold; and most of them have worked splendidly till one or more of their delicate parts gave out and had to be repaired. But all defects hitherto encountered have been remedied in what is termed the Penograph. In the Penograph all small and complicated contrivances are dispensed with. Although the pen appears to be small it will write just as well as the largest. It is capable of producing the finest hair lines as well as heavy shaded strokes. The pen is of solid gold, first quality diamond pointed. With fair usage it will last a lifetime. The case is vulcanized rubber, handsomely finished. In our opinion the Penograph, as illustrated above, is well calculated to supercede all other writing pens and pencils in daily use. Its flow of ink is automatic and free, but never too profuse. It sheds ink when in use and stops when the pen ceases to move. It needs no wiping and no dipping for ink. It is carried in the pocket always ready for use on any kind of paper. It costs no more than is usually charged for a first class gold pen and holder without the fountain. It is fully warranted and may be returned if it fails to meet the expectations of any person who shall read the above. Price $3, postpaid. An extra pen will be given to any subscriber who shall send us $9 for a club of three Penographs. All postpaid.

We offer the above Penograph as a present to any one sending us five new subscribers at $1 75.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Signal Notes.

THE jail of Randolph county, Mississippi, is empty. Not a drop of intoxicating liquor has been sold in the county for over a year.

THE Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey, in session at Orange last month, declared in favor of prohibition by a vote of 174 to 87.

THE British army in India boasts of 11,000 abstainers from intoxicating drinks, who are admitted to be better soldiers than their comrades who drink.

IT is shown by the returns from 70 out of 88 counties in Ohio that the Scott law has secured a revenue of $1,500,000, and closed 12 per cent of the saloons.

A LIQUOR firm in Massachusetts, in a note at the foot of a private circular, says: "All packages sent from our store to ministers are labelled 'Canned peaches.'"

BLACKSTONE says: "Common law requires that a man should not use his property to the injury of another, and the consent of the party injured is no mitigation of the offence."

THE National American, St. Louis, says "the fight in the next legislature will be between high license and prohibition, and the brewers and dram-sellers will be on the side of high license."

JUDGE FRAZIER has sentenced twelve saloon keepers to fines aggregating $4.400, and to imprisonment in the county jail for a total of 400 days, for violation of the "Scott laws." There are seventy cases yet to be tried.

MRS. J. C. STONE, of Milwaukee, says: If the policemen were as blind to the dog law as they are to the liquor law, you might have a dog as large as an elephant, with a church bell on it, and no policeman would see it.

JOHN WILLIAMS, the martyr missionary of the Pacific Island said: "I dread the arrival of an American ship, for though she may have more missionaries in her cabin, she brings in her hold the death waters of damnation."

BUT a few years ago there was no temperance organization in China. Now a temperance hotel is advertised in Hong Kong, and at Shanghai there is a lodge of Good Templars, and a good able temperance paper published weekly, called the Temperance Union.

THE communities in the United States which use the most whisky will be found to be those that use the most lager-beer, ale and wine. The Anglo-Saxon parents who teach their boys to use lager-beer, ale and wine as a beverage will sooner or later find their boys have passed beyond the instructions.

AN old negro at Weldon, North Carolina, at a recent lecture said: "When I sees a man going home with a gallon of whisky and half a pound of meat, dat's temperance lecture enuff for me, and I sees it ebery day! I knows that ebery ting in his home is on de same scale—gallon of misery to ebery half-pound of comfort.

PEOPLE are not generally aware that the egg product of the United States stands second in value only to corn and wheat, and very often surpasses the latter. During the last fiscal year, for instance, the corn crop was worth $480,643,400, the wheat crop $484,675,779, and the egg crop $475,682,889. The hen, in her relation to our domestic economy, is thus entitled to more respect than has commonly been paid to her.

GENERAL SIR F. WILLIAMS (the hero of Kars), says: I am indebted to a gracious Providence for preservation in very unhealthy climates; but I am satisfied that a resolution, early formed and steadily persevered in, never to take spirituous liquors, has been a means of my escaping diseases by which multitudes have fallen around me. Had not the Turkish army of Kars been literally "a cold water army," I am persuaded they never would have performed the achievements which crowned them with glory.

PROFESSER VERGA, in a paper read before the Lombardy Institute of Science, said that serious dangers threaten the Italian people on account of their recent large substitution of alcohol as beverage. He told a story of a distiller who died insane from alcoholism, yet had never drank a drop of liquor. He had been so largely exposed to the fumes of impure alcohol while "strengthening" poor wines that his system had absorbed enough of it to poison him.

Miscellaneous Selections.

MRS. LOUISA G. MURDOCK, of Columbus Junction, Louisa county, Iowa, was elected county superintendent of schools, at the recent election, by a majority of 494 over her gentleman opponent, the present superintendent.

IN a political speech at Nottingham, England, recently the Hon. S. Morley, member of parliament, declared that the chief evil against which parliament is in duty bound to protect the English people is the liquor traffic. He called upon rich people to form a better acquaintance with the poor and thus put themselves in a position to know about the habits of the latter and to help them in overcoming temptation.

A NOVEL PLEDGE.—Professor Andre sends us the following translation of a notice that appeared in a Hungarian paper a short time ago:—"By desire of my wife I publicly declare that I will never again enter a public house, wine shop, or any other place where intoxicating drinks are sold, and I hereby request that none of my friends or acquaintances will ever tempt me to enter such a place. And I further give notice that should I ever be found in such a house I will forfeit the sum of fifty florins (£5) to the funds of the Arader Orphanage. (Signed) ERNST TERNAY ARAB July 1, 1863."—Montreal Witness.

LYNCHBURG (Va.) Advance: We learned a few days ago, for the first time, how Gov. Cameron came by the sprained ankle which confined him so closely in Washington during the heat of the canvass, when Mahone wanted him so much in Virginia. He fell from the stand on which he was speaking at Pamplin's Depot, Appomattox county, because he was too much intoxicated to keep his equilibrium. On the same occasion, when presented with a bouquet, he responded by grasping the flowers, and, holding them up, in a maudlin way said: "I love all the gals." He is our governor.

MASON LONG is one of the temperance preachers of the West. He travels through Indiana and Ohio in a wagon drawn by a span of handsome horses, like tooth-powder venders, and is accompanied by four singing students, two from Oberlin and two from Delaware college. At night the wagon is lighted up with torches, and he harangues the listening multitudes in the open air after the singing has brought them together. He tells them that six years ago he was a drunken reprobate, but a little girl persuaded him to sign the pledge, and since then he has been a happy man. Mr. Long is further described as a man of no special advantages, save perhaps in the matter of sheer lung-power, and yet through his earnestness he interests large audiences, and serves the cause well. His method of "reaching the masses" is certainly worth considering, and a credit to the head and heart that conceived it.—N. Y. Witness.

GEORGIA had an interesting campaign on the liquor question during the past week in the five leading counties. The wholesale liquor-dealers, whose business is being badly broken up by continued restrictions upon their trade, sent out agents with barrels of whisky to influence the voters. In Taylor county Cooper King, a drummer of a Macon wholesale house, after buying twenty-five votes with twenty-five drinks, was arrested and is held under twenty-five warrants. The county was carried by the whisky men. In Meriwether a little fight was made, resulting in a victory for whisky. In Floyd prohibition was also defeated. Campbell county, however, voted prohibition and so did Cattoosa county. Actual prohibition now prevails in over one-half of the state. In the election to come the wholesale whisky men at Atlanta, Macon, Augusta and Savannah will enter with vim, furnishing all the liquor needed free. Free whisky absolutely controls the negro vote. In Worth county, where prohibition now prevails, merchants have resorted to the subterfuge of selling brandy-peaches. The grand jury now in session has taken hold of the matter, and the merchants are begging for a chance to reform.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

North-Western Dining Cars,

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route, AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equipped roads.

Better than Gold.

So easily is a cold taken that not infrequently one is at a loss to tell when or how it has originated, and is prone to expect it will go HEALTH as lightly as it came. Perhaps it may go easily, if helped a little; but every cold that comes is liable to stay. It may happen just at a IS time when, from other causes, the normal strength of resistance in the system has been lowered. A little inattention or delay may give it a dangerous BETTER hold. Let it once become firmly seated, and the work of dislodgment will be very difficult. The simple Coryza, or cold in the head, may THAN develop into a Catarrh, and is indeed exceedingly likely so to do. That such is the case is evidenced by the fact that seven persons out of every GOLD. nine, in the Atlantic and Middle States, have catarrh in a severe form. Or, if it does not take that turn, the little cough that is at first but an annoyance, is almost certain to become dry, hard, racking and constantly recurrent, worrying in waking hours, banishing sleep, and momentarily weakening the patient. The larynx, vocal cords, and tonsils, become inflamed. The inflammation extends into the bronchial tubes. "Laryngitis" and "Bronchitis" AYER'S are the easiest words that the doctor, called in about that time, will use. The trouble goes on working down the CHERRY bronchial tubes to the lungs, ultimately threatening Pulmonary Consumption. Or, perhaps, the malady assumes the quickly fatal phase of Pneumo- PECTORAL nia. Just about as unwise a thing as an ordinarily sensible person can do, is to neglect a "little" PRESERVES cold or cough and give chance to develop in any of these. And when it comes to the treatment of children, neglect is often fatality. All HEALTH. the dangers to be feared from colds and coughs may be averted, in the very outset, by the administration of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a medicine ineffably beneficent, which allays the coughing, soothes to refreshing rest, and brings back health.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO 7. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 14, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

By order of the President, a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U. will be held in Indianapolis, at the Headquarters of the Indiana W. C. T. U., on Wednesday, Feb. 20th, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Mary A. Woodbridge,
Rec. Sec. National W. C. T. U.

The Prohibitory Union is a new incorporated society whose headquarters are in New York city, and whose object is to secure national prohibition. It is open to both men and women of legal age.

A glad hosanna reaches us from the northern Pacific coast. Olympia, Washington territory, has now a Good Templar for mayor, and a majority of its city council for no license. This is the first fruit of woman's ballot in that territory.

An attack has lately been made upon the Pacific Bank, San Francisco, of which Dr. R. H. McDonald is president, which gives evidence of being inspired by the liquor interests of that city. The fact that the bank pays good dividends, and that none of its stock can be had in the market, and that its profits are increasing year by year, will go farther to secure depositors than any statement of the opposition, which seems to be founded on the active participation of the bank president in the temperance reform.

We have high authority corroborating the statement that the American Express Company has decided to dismiss any and every employe using intoxicating liquors. This is a purely business arrangement. A great corporation serving the public as a conveyer of goods finds that its service is impaired by any toleration of drinking habits among its employes. When will the greater corportations, the city, the state, the nation, learn the same truth?

A suggestion comes to us. The Union Signal gladly passes it on. It is this. "Since one of the greatest obstacles in the way of of enforcing state or local, restrictive or prohibitory laws, is the federal license, men do not hesitate to evade, defy or fight, state and municipal laws who would on no account incur the penalty of the federal law for violation of revenue regulations. Could we not petition congress to enact a law that federal licences shall be issued only to parties who have first conformed to the state and local, or municipal laws, of the place for which the license is sought. Very few could venture openly to oppose so moderate and reasonable a petition. Such a bill, presented to congress, could be accompanied by almost numberless signatures and might succeed where more radical measures would fail."

The Toledo Blade is leading a crusade on beer, that bids fair to engage the thought of the country. This journal has published, in one or two weekly issues, lengthy interviews with a dozen physicians of repute and standing in the community, regarding the deleterious effect of beer drinking. In every case the testimony is strongly condemnatory of the "favorite beverage" as producing diseases of the liver and kidneys especially, and in all cases, lowering the vital forces to such a point that disease has little to do in sweeping its beer drinking victims out of the world. One physican claims that in his own practice and observation he has found that forty-nine out of every fifty cases of Bright's disease of the kidneys, are the cases of beer-drinkers.

Add to the testimony of these professional men the attitude of insurance companies toward the beer drinker as a life risk, and we have a plain, unsentimental, cold-blooded verdict that may well startle the average drinker of ten or twelve glasses per diem.

The doctor says that beer drinking produces disease and shortens life. The insurance company corroborates the statement and adds this item, viz., that it is not safe to insure those who are in any way engaged in the manufacture and distribution of beer.

A new work, highly spoken of in England, by Dr. Norman Kerr and others, is Mr. Axel Gustaffson's "The Foundation of Death, a Study of the Drink Question." His teachings are said to be thoroughly in accord with the latest discoveries in science, and a wide influence is predicted for the book, on both sides of the Atlantic. As to alcohol arresting waste, Mr. Gustaffson says:

"Health requires a proper balance between want and supply, and anything disturbing this balance produces disease; and retarded oxidation, which disturbs both of the processes which make the health-balance, can be nothing but disease."

The testimony of pathology adds to, instead of detracting from this statement. A striking confirmation of the disease producing power of alcohol is found in Turkey where the common people drink nothing stronger than water, and gout is unknown, while those of the wealthier classes who drink like Christians have also gout and dropsy like Christians.

Speaking of Dr. Norman Kerr, reminds us that he has most thoroughly as well as indignantly answered the captious attack of Dr. Howard Crosby and the New York Independent upon those publications of the National Temperance Society which bear the mark of his authorship. We shall give his article in full next week, as published in the Temperance Record of London.

Light is breaking in on many dark places. A ray, pure and serene, has beamed on the British public concerning the greater financial efficiency of total abstinence benefit societies than of those composed of teetotalers and moderate drinkers. It is discovered that while Odd Fellows (a mixed society) have about twenty-eight per cent. of their members on the sick list, the Rechabites, teetotalers all, have only sixteen per cent. in a like condition. Also that the average duration of illness per member among Odd Fellows is ten and a half days per annum, while the Rechabites average only a fraction over six days per member. In other words, total abstinence decreases the total sick about thirty-three per cent. In view of these facts, why is it that the teetotalers of this and other countries are willing to be weighed down with the moderate drinking of their fellows. It is unsound, as financial policy, so to be, and is not we are sure a case properly found under the Scriptural injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens."

The saloonists of Little Rock, Arkansas alarmed at the rapidly growing petition to the court to prohibit their business, met recently and passed the following resolution:

Whereas, the temperance agitation which makes our city insecure for the present, and which is fermented solely by women, to whose livlihood we all contribute, as we stand in daily business relations with their male relatives, we think it right for us to turn the spit around, and take away all traffic in the future from the business men whose wives or daughters have helped to fill out these teetotaler's lists.

In order to a full understanding of this action it should be generally known that by the three mile law of Arkansas, on petition of a majority of the inhabitants (male and female) of any school district, the courts are obliged to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks within three miles of a school house or any institution of learning. On the strength of this provision, the women of the state have circulated petitions to such good purpose that three-fourths of the state is under prohibitory law, and now Little Rock is being vigorously canvassed by the W. C. T. U. in the hope of "delivering the city." That the efforts are not without hope and prospect of success is demonstrated by this timorous, and at the same time vengeful attitude of the liquor dealers

WHAT WOULD LIFE BE MISSING?

BY MRS. MARTHA WINTERMUTE.

Though whirled by cruel eddies
And borne by currents strong,
What would my life be missing
To madly drift along;
To close my tear-dimmed vision,
And bend my locks of gray,
And pass the high calm haven
Unseen at close of day.

Through the snow peak and the snow shroud
In icy fetters meet,
Above, to hide the gold cloud;
Beneath, to chain the feet:
And through the rifts may glimmer
Cold constellations pale,
And showery frosts may shimmer
To load the weary sail.

Yet what would life be missing
To miss the angel hand,
That beckons o'er the water,
And beckons o'er the land,
To bays of sylvan beauty,
And isles of summer gleam,
And seas of tranquil glory
Beyond earth's brighest dream.

For, like the wing of spirit
White floating on the sky,
In the azure of the haven
Yon snowy sail descry;
The frost a spanning rainbow,
The golden sun revealed;
The frozen stars, are vanished;
The icy bars unsealed.

The snow peak, and the snow shroud
Viewed on their sun-lit slope,
Flash morning's gold and crimson,
Of youth's eternal hope;
Sail, for the high calm haven
With eyes and brow elate,
For what would life be missing
To miss the harbor gate?

SHALL WE LICENSE THE DRAM SHOPS?

BY PROF. GEO. E. FOSTER, M. P.

I. What license means.

It is important that in the first place we should get a clear perception of all that is meant by the word license.

The underlying idea is that of permission or allowance. A hackman's license, for instance, permits him to engage in the business of cab-driving, a marriage license permits two persons to be legally united in wedlock, and a liquor license permits a person to sell intoxicating liquors.

This permission or allowance always carries with it the idea of right. When a parent or teacher permits a child to do a certain thing, the child instinctively feels that the thing itself is right and not wrong. Similarly, when when the law licenses or permits anything to be done, it teaches that what it permits is correct in principle and expedient in practice. Again, the authority which permits a thing to be done will and must protect and support the person it permits against all that would annoy or harrass him. If one permits his boys to go a-fishing, he must protect them to the extent of his power against all who prevent or interfere with their sport. So when the law licenses or permits any business to be carried on it is bound to protect the person licensed. The license of permission is generally coupled with certain conditions which the person must obey, and penalties are attached to the violations of these conditions. When, therefore, a community or a country issues licenses it does three things:

1. It calls the dram shop into existence and permits its work.

2. It declares that the dram shop is correct in principle and expedient in practice.

3. It pledges its authority to the protection of the dram shop, in its congenial and permitted work.

II. What it is we license. Before a community calls an institution into existence, declares it right, and pledges protection to it, the people should carefully consider what are its aims and effects.

1. It provides nothing useful. No fabrics to wear, no foods to sustain the body, no implements of labor, no books to inform the mind, no article of comfort for the home, nothing that adorns civilization, elevates society, or adds a single impulse of good to the community, can be found on its shelves or within its four walls. If every dram shop in Canada were to be burned tomorrow, Canada would not lose a single iota in all that goes to clothe, feed, develop, and beautify her millions.

2. It encourages idleness. A dram shop immediately reduces "loafing" to a fine art. It is a convenient place to "drop into." Some of the "boys" are always on hand. There is constantly something to hear or see. Games for the idle hour are ever ready. Drinks are forthcoming at any moment, and stories and songs fill in the intervals. All are invited and welcome to stay. And thus the dram shop is continually turning the active and industrious into the idle and shiftless. Thus it is a standing peril to the children in its neighborhood.

3. It is a school for tippling. The principal object of the dram shop is to get sober people to tipple, and tipplers to drink to excess. It exists for no other purpose,—if it succeeds in doing this its gains increase; if it fails, it starves and dies. Unless it is able to turn sober children into drinking men and women, it must cease with the present generation. So its aim is to debauch each generation of children. It greedily eyes the school and homes, and sets itself to trap the innocent. The "stand" is chosen in the most public resorts, the temptations are made as alluring as possible, the bar-keeper is selected with this point in view, the host puts on his blandest manner—all to gain custom, that is to induce sober people to tipple and tipplers to drink more and more. In no other way can they reap their harvest of gain.

4. It breeds disorder, vice, poverty and crime. We would scarcely ever hear of a brawl or fight if it were not for the dram shops. When people are cool, collected and masters of themselves, there is almost perfect peace and quiet. But the dram shop changes all these conditions. It collects in heated rooms all sorts of characters, the vicious and the innocent. It frenzies them with strong drink, launches them into the wildest disorder and the bloodiest quarrels. Nine-tenths of all the crimes against good order, decency and the person, are the traceable outcome of the dram shops. There, idleness breeds mischief, the vicious corrupt the innocent, the vulgar, indecent and blasphemous gradually poison purity, wages are squandered, self-respect is lost, passions are inflamed and the seeds of crime sown broadly. No words can portray the mischiefs and miseries that brood and breed in the dram shops of our country. If malicious ingenuity had racked its brain for a thousand years, it could have devised no more thorough and efficient agency of corruption than are these.

5. It antagonizes every influence of home and school and church. The dram shop rivals the home, and in innumerable instances robs it of loved ones, breaks it up and ruins it irretrievably. There is no community cursed with a dram shop but can point to one or more ruined homes as monuments of its terrible and deadly antagonism.

The dram shop nullifies the work of the school. It renders parents indifferent to the education of their children, it brings poverty and rags, and so keeps little ones from the schools, or it drives them out on the streets to beg and to steal. A large percentage of the children of our country are grown up in utter or comparative ignorance because of such hindering and corrupting influences.

The dram shop blocks the path of the church. The Christian church spends millions of dollars today in the field of foreign missions, sends out hundreds of missionaries, and makes thousands of converts each year. But for every one convert she makes in other lands, the dram shops destroy full one hundred souls in Christian countries. And here among our pulpits and by the very side of our preachers it is safe to say that the dram shops lead as many downward as the churches lead upward. We are asked then to license an institution which:

Provides nothing useful or beautiful; causes and encourages idleness; teaches tippling and drunkenness; breeds disorder, vice, poverty, and crime; antagonizes our homes, schools and churches. Can we, dare we call such institutions into existence, set them up in our midst, sanction their work, and protect them in it? Are the interests of our homes, our society, our children and our neighbors to be sacrificed to such a demand? And for whose interests? That one in five hundred may become a dram seller and make a lazy living at the expense of all we hold dear; that the other four hundred and ninety-nine may bear the burden and suffer the misery.

III. What the voter does by licensing it. Christian voter, before you cast your ballot for the dram shops, please think that by your licensing it:

1. You compromise with wrong. Suppose a man comes to you and says, "Sir, you have a nice boy growing up there, I will pay you one hundred dollars if you will give me the liberty to teach him to tipple and drink. I will not compel him, but simply use attractive display and persuasion on him."

You indignantly repel the awful proposition. But a friend standing near says, "You might as well take the the one hundred dollars; if you refuse, he will get your boy in some secret and illicit way, and teach him to drink. Your boy will learn to drink all the same, and you will have the one hundred dollars." And yet you repel with perfect abhorrence the suggestion that you should allow anyone, for a money consideration, to attempt the ruin of your boy. But when a man goes to your corporation and says, "I will give you one hundred dollars if you will allow me to teach as many of the boys in your county or city as I can allure to tipple and drink," what do you say?

In the first case the man wishes to try his arts upon one boy, and that one yours; in the second he proposes to try his arts upon all the boys, yours included. It would have been infamous for you to have accepted his money and delivered your boy over to his seductions: is it not all the more infamous for you to vote to take the money and deliver all the boys of the corporation over to his wiles? You would not compromise with wrong when the proposition for private corruption was made; a thousand times less should you do so, when it is proposed to attempt a wholesale and public corruption.

2. You go into partnership with the traffic. When you license the dram shop you practically say: "Give us a portion of your gains, and you keep the remainder." You thus become the silent partner, and are paid for your silence. The dram shop ruins your neighbor's son; you can say nothing, you will get your percentage of profits made out of its ruin. The dram shop destroys a happy home, and mother and children sit weeping and heart-broken in its ashes. You must be quiet, for in your pocket clinks a portion of the silver into which that happy home was pitilessly transmuted. And when at the end of the year the dram seller counts up the gains—while outside you behold the ruin, the vice, the misery and the sorrow which have been wrought, he invites you in and with almost demonaic leer says to you, "I know it looks ugly out there, but I have the gains and here's your share sir. We're partners you know." Can you partnership the traffic?

3. You lend it respectability and sanction. The liquor traffic without license is a vagabond, a bankrupt, an outlaw. It slinks about with the brand of Cain on its brow —whoever finds it may slay it.

The very moment you license it, it is entitled to claim full citizenship; it lifts its head boldly on your best streets; it is recognized as full brother to every useful and legitimate business; it wears the full flowing garments of respectable sanction, and leans for support on your schools, your churches and your laws. When it struck a blow before it was done furtively and in constant dread of punishment; now it bares the sword in full view of all, and slays right and left. It enlarges the borders of its garment, and with all the prestige of city and state authority launches out into its congenial work.

To all appeals and remonstrances it can then triumphantly reply, "I have the people and the law at my back, sir, and my business is as good as any other." Every voter who casts his ballot for license practically throws his own mantle of character and respectability about the traffic and endorses its work.

4. You arm it for its work. The dram shop is ready in essence. There is the man who wants to sell. There is the place completely fitted up where he wishes to sell. There are the liquors in bottle and keg which he is ready to sell. But the door is barred, bottle is undisturbed, the man is waiting and no work of demoralization has commenced, and it will not commence until you and the other voters order it. Legally and virtually the machinery of destruction is motionless until you give the word. That word is the license power. Withhold it and all is well; give it, and immediately the evil work begins. Do you not see how you—the voters—give potency and activity to the dram shop? You arm it. You erect a citadel for it out of which it issues to the constant attack. You place the law and police behind it, and no matter how many it slays and destroys no vengeance can overtake it.

Without license all is different. It then has no abiding and secure place. It haunts the alleys and dark ways. Wherever it shows its hand, the law descends upon it. If it injures, the injured one can demand and obtain redress. It is hunted by the minions of the law and has the registered condemnation of the people hung over against it—a continually impending sentence.

5. You become responsible for what it does. When the unlicensed dram shop plies its illicit trade and works its evil, the whole weight and responsibility falls upon the head of the law breaker. Him the law holds guilty in the sight of heaven.

When you license it, you—the voters—share the responsibility for all the ruin that is wrought. Has it rifled a home? You made it possible, and as the just eye of God looks down upon the desolate hearth, and listens to the cry of the lone ones for vengeance, He sees the poor overtempted appetite-ridden one at whose feet lies part of the guilt; He sees the dram seller behind the bar who pitilessly fed the passion for drink which finally burned out all love and duty; and He sees behind all, the men who placed the dram seller in the position to cause this ruin, and He holds them responsible. They had a part in the desolation of that home, and will He not make requisition at their hands?

Arise quickly, O Christian voter, and come out from this awful partnership, which throws upon your soul part guilt for every broken heart, every saddened home, every wrecked life, which, but for the dram shop you placed in their way, might have been singing for joy, brightened with sunniest hope, and filled full of refining influence.

A WORD TO CHRISTIAN VOTERS.

BY MRS. CLARA HOLBROOK SMITH.

Taking up on the morning of January 11, Friday of the week of prayer, the topic for the day, which ran as follows:

"Prayer for nations, for legislators, that statutes may be conformed to divine law, for rulers that they may conscientiously administer government, for peace and conciliation between nations, and for popular integrity in the duties of citizens." My heart felt heavy as I read. I could see the necessity for organization as a means of safety to party, but I could not see how those who named the name of Christ could so blindly follow the lead of those who knew not the Divine Ruler. The longer I dwelt upon the thought the more I felt impelled to cry out to my indifferent brothers.

Writing the following, I submitted it to my pastor to read for me in the union meeting, if he thought best, and there should come a "long pause:"

In Webster's definition of "politics," the last clause reads: "The augmentation of its (the nation's) strength and resources, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, with the preservation and improvement of their morals." A part of this nation have forgotten that without a pure, wise, strong, faithful government, nothing can prosper. They permit 200,000 schools of vice, sanction and protect them by law, and they outnumber our schools and churches ten to one. They attempt to regulate them, and build jails and prisons to accommodate their victims, then point to the revenue derived from them. Is this an augmentation of a nation's strength and resources? Is this a preservation and improvement of their morals? How far are we Christians responsible for the purity of our government? Have we done our individual best in prayer and work for the right man in office? Have we thought it our Christian duty to be present at all primary meetings and help choose a pure incorruptible man to represent us in the next higher convention, or have we sat with folded hands quieting our conscience with "Oh, it is all cut and dried; the best I can do is to vote for the best man given us." Can we honestly tonight pray God to bless our lawmakers that they may "conform to divine law," when we, through disinclination to stand out against the majority of our party, have meekly deposited a vote for a man we know never thinks of divine law? How then are we going to petition God tonight on the very first theme given for our consideration and prayer? We censure our boys at school for not standing out for the right, even if they have to stand alone; then meekly follow our party while having prayed "for popular integrity in the duty of citizens."

Oh my brothers in Christ, let prayer and works go together. Let us plead mightily this night for an awakened conscience in this nation, and then, in the next primary convention, stand out, if need be alone, for a God fearing man to represent us. If we do not, the day will surely come when this glorious country of which we boast will be overturned by vice and violence.

After the reading, another pastor made some stirring remarks on the contents of my paper, and my pastor rose again, saying, he always attended the primary meetings and called for the uplifted hands of all voters present who made it a point to do the same. Oh my brothers, from where I sat I did not see one lifted hand, and from his sad exhortation which followed, I know there could not have been many.

Did you, my Christian brothers over the land, meet with God's people on the 11th of January, and by voice or heart pray to a God who cannot be deceived, "that statutes may be conformed to divine law" and "for popular integrity in the duties of citizens"? Have you faith in prayer? Faith without works is dead.

What will you do with the next primary meeting?

SENSIBLE QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The following frank note is a sample of several, and by the editor's request I will try to reply to its queries:

When the secretary of the W. C. T. U. of this place was making out a report of the proceedings of the woman's crusade movement, one of our good brothers asked her why we sent the money to the National W. C. T. U. "Why do you not keep it at home?" etc. He also asked, "What do they do with the money?" She said she did not know. Well, I attempted to show expenses, but they did not know about it. Will you in some issue of THE UNION SIGNAL give a definite list of items of expense of the N. W. C. T. U., and oblige an earnest advocate of the cause?

Are there any salaried officers? Does the expense of rooms used as headquarters come from the National fund?

Do they distribute temperance literature with a part of the funds? If so, how? through whom? when and where? They contend here that literature is distributed only through local unions and individual workers.

Does each officer defray her own expenses and the expense of a secretary or any aid she may require?

REPLIES.

1. Why were the local unions asked as a part of their decennial "thank offering" to send money to the National?

Because the National W. C. T. U. has no visible (or invisible) means of support save the five cents per member annually due from all women who join local unions but by no means universally paid. Because, also, it cultivates the National feeling, elevates the outlook, enlarges the sympathies to give something to the great National Union, the mother of us all.

2. Are there any salaried officers of the National W. C. T. U.?

There never were salaried officers until, in 1879, we began to pay the mild sum of $800 per year to our corresponding secretary. Up to that date we had no official "headquarters," but we opened an office in Bible House that year, and this secretary, being kept constantly busy there, had this $800 assigned to cover her current expenses, which it did not do. At the last annual meeting the salary was raised to $1,000 per year, but $1,200 is the least that should be paid. This salary is paid from the five cents membership assessment. No other officer receives, or ever has received one penny of salary. The stationery and postage bills of the five "general officers," president, corresponding secretary, recording secretary, assistant recording secretary and treasurer, are paid, also their traveling expenses to and from the annual meeting. My own postage bill is about $200 per year, and if Miss Gordon and I write the letters without making the least charge, it seems appropriate that the society should pay the postage. The same rule holds as to the writing done by the other officers. Making out the annual minutes, correcting proof, etc., (all done gratuitously by Mrs. Woodbridge) is an immense task and a most thankless one. Keeping the accounts, with Miss Pugh's minute accuracy, is no small undertaking. If ours were a society composed of men their work would be "charged up" beyond a peradventure, and the reason we are not as a National Union bankrupt today is because of the work gratuitously done. We are rich in women competent to difficult tasks and worthy of high trusts, but we are poor in "this world's goods." The average total income of the National W. C. T. U. for the first five years of its history was eight hundred dollars a year!

3. Is the rent of the National office at New York paid from the treasury of the National W. C. T. U.?

Most certainly; also the expenses of clerk hire, expressage, besides printing of annual minutes, documents and instructions to local unions, which are sent broadcast over the nation. A great deal of telegraphing must be done from headquarters to arrange for the great summer meetings, messages to conventions, sending of news that can wait no slower method of transmission, etc. The National officers pay their own telegraph bills—which are not a small item when it is known that the five general officers live in five distinct cities, and each in a different state—with the exception of Mrs. Woodbridge in Cleveland and Miss Pugh in Cincinnati.

4. Is temperance literature distributed with a part of the funds? If so, how? through whom? when and where?

In the foregoing statement as to office expenses, this question has been largely anticipated. Bundles of literature, containing the annual minutes, a large pamphlet of over two hundred pages; forms of constitution; reports of the thirty-three National superintendents, etc., are constantly going by bushels from National headquarters in New York and the president's office in Evanston. The National Minutes are sent free of charge to all the newly organized states and territories and at cost price to the older unions. Hektograph letters, printed postals and other cheap methods of communication are constantly employed and for all this the National W. C. T. U. depends upon the precarious "dues" (five cents per member) and the generosity of friends. Noble and true men are helping us, and women too. If this were not done we should be helplessly crippled in our work.

For instance, a banker of my acquaintance who has always been coming to the rescue in times of crisis, let me have one hundred dollars without a scrap of paper, telling me to "return it when I could." Our energetic and capable Mrs. Shields, of Colorado, took that money to help out the splendid trip by which she "brought in" three territories with territorial and local organization and important local unions in time for our tenth anniversary. Half of that money I have replaced from my own purse, the rest I shall soon be able to send from the same source. But dear friends of temperance "these things ought not so to be." By regularity in sending dues (quarterly) to state treasurers (who forward the five cents per member to the National W. C. T. U.) by an annual free will offering from each local union, by gifts from the rich and bequests from the departing, our grand gospel work ought to rise to the plane of financial strength and dignity which will correlate with its standing in the hearts of the people and the favor of heaven. May God and good Christians speed that day!

DISTRICT SCHOOL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS

The Congregationalist gives the following sensible directions for waking up the "rural districts."

"One excellent way to promote both neighborhood sociality, and the cause of temperance, this winter, in many of our country towns, would be to have, once a month, a social temperance meeting in each district school house. Choose nights when there is nearly or quite a full moon. Take pains to invite every family to be present. If there are any who live remote, and who are especially poor or recluse, and for any reason unlikely to be there, see that they are specially invited. Have a rousing good fire. Let each family carry their own candles or lamps, so that it shall be cheerful within. A few apples, and a peck or two of shagbarks would interest the boys and girls.

"Then spend an hour, or so, besides all socialities, in temperance discussion, and manage it so that all shall somehow have a share. Let some of the boys and girls 'speak' temperance 'pieces'; perhaps, some night, a set dialogue. Let some of the most stirring appeals to sobriety, and some of the most withering denunciations of the sin and folly of drunkenness, be recited.

"Debate the question whether it is ever right for a man in health to use intoxicating liquors as a beverage. Request some of the 'oldest inhabitants' to recount the scenes of their youth, and tell how at huskings and raisings, and even at ordinations, men were 'treated' so that some of them would stagger home drunk.

"And, by all means, get some wise-headed and true-hearted man, who has a good memory, a considerable knowledge of facts, and fair ability to write or speak them, to go over the records of that part of the town with which they are all most familiar, as related to the use of ardent spirits by the people. He must do it kindly and in a pitying spirit; but, if he can bring to their remembrance how many houses have stuffed their windows with old hats, and how many farms which they know have changed hands because their owners looked too often through the bottom of a tumbler; how many have fallen into drunkards' graves; how many forlorn and neglected children have made appeal to town charity because of the curse which has fallen upon them in some way from alcohol; it can hardly be that great good shall not be done.

"A town thoroughly treated with district school meetings in this way this winter will not vote for license next election. Still better, its young men will stand a fair chance to be saved from rowdyism, and trained to an honest and noble manhood. The whole community will be invigorated both intellectually and morally, by a course of treatment which is so simple and feasible as to be within reach of all."

Correspondence.

OUR ENGLISH LETTER.

Dear Union Signal:—For the past two years the question has been before the Women's Union C. E. T. S. What can be done for barmaids? But we did not see our way to anything until we ascertained that the Young Woman's Christian Association employed a young lady, Miss Gough as visitor to them. I wrote to her. She responded most kindly. My committee called a conference of workers here who promised help at a meeting. Our good vice president, Lady Brabazon, most kindly lent her house, and on January 10. we had afternoon and evening meetings. At the former the attendance was poor though much better in the evening. Earnest addresses were given by several ladies while others helped with sacred songs; tea and coffee and conversation gave a social character to the meeting which all seemed to enjoy. Other ladies offered their drawing rooms for similar meetings, and we have called another conference here on Thursday next to consider how best to carry on the work.

As Mr. Coleridge Kennard, M. P., has undertaken to introduce a bill into parliament for the repeal of grocer's and shopkeeper's spirit licenses, we shall be busy now getting up a large women's petition in support of it.

We have lately had some very good drawing room meetings, the last being at the beautiful residence of Mrs. Charles Buxton. Her late husband's utterances on intemperance are well known.

Dr. Edmunds, in his third lecture to ladies which took place at 7 Vicarage Gate, Kensington, by the kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, said that the growth in altitude and breadth having been completed and the structures of the body having been consolidated the period of womanhood had arrived in which all the powers of the constitution were free for the purposes of active life. In this period the repair of the bodily structures, the maintenance of temperature and the work done by the body now constituted the sole sources of demand for food. The use of milk and of those breadstuffs containing building materials for the frame become of less importance. At this time obesity would develop itself if the appetite were unduly indulged and exercise not maintained. The question of marriage is now one of vital importance, and upon the decision which is arrived at depends the whole future of woman's life. Frequently Dr. Edmunds said he had been consulted as to whether a man who drinks freely, and has been occasionally intemperate, is a safe man to marry under promise of reform. Under no circumstances would he advise such a risk unless an ample period of probation in total abstinence had shown the man to be thoroughly emancipated from this fatal propensity. Not only in this respect did young ladies need warning but also with regard to the great importance of sound physical health, good moral antecedents, and a family history which would bear scrutinizing. In the general education of both sexes the lecturer deplored the absence of instruction on these fundamental points. As a mere matter of pecuniary prudence it was customary for the man to insure his life before marriage, and in many cases Dr. Edmunds had known ladies to be saved from disastrous marriages by the mere accident of the office physician rejecting lives so proposed for insurance. In this way a tendency to consumption or other fatal disease has been casually revealed. This indirect result of life insurance examination is of great practical value.

Speaking of motherhood Dr. Edmunds said that at this period the conditions of new growth had again to be provided for. Unless an ample quantity of bone forming material was taken by the mother, her teeth would become soft and rapidly decay, her tissues would revert to a spongy and unconsolidated condition, the health in every way would suffer, and the child's frame would be imperfectly organized. At this time no food was of greater value than the oatmeal, the milk. and the other food already recommended for the rapid growth of adolesence. The use of alcohol at this time was often injudiciously pressed upon the young mother. A sense of weakness and faintness was often experienced, and for these sensations the use of alcohol was a seemingly pleasant relief. Nothing however was more mischievous. In cases where the sense of weakness and faintness was considerable, it arose either from inherent weakness of constitution, from inadequate or improper food, or from over exhaustion by too great activity in domestic or social life. With regard to nursing Dr. Edmunds advised all mothers to nurse their children for nine to twelve months, and that best results in the matter of nursing for both mother and child would be obtained by the diet and regimen already referred to. In case of the mother's milk being inadequate the remedy to supply it is cow's milk and water, instead of stimulating the mother to produce more milk than she can afford. The sleepiness so often observed in infants fed by a mother relying upon alcohol is in reality a form of intoxication communicated through the mother's milk.

Dr. Edmund's fourth lecture to ladies was given on Saturday, December 1, at 7 Vicarage Gate, to a crowded audience. Describing as the climacteric that period in woman's life when the physical energies of the mental life yet remain, he said that some considerable care was often needed to adjust the bodily health under the altering conditions of life. The exhaustive incident of motherhood being now escaped from, there was a decided tendency to corpulency if the pleasures of the table were indulged in; any redundant food now taken had a tendency to accumulate in the body and produce heaviness rather than energy. Obesity at this period of life was the ruin of many constitutions. Redundant fat was in no way auxilary to the physical or mental powers, but a mere load which exhausted the body in porterage and lived upon the juices of the body as a mere parasitic growth. In case of a tendency to corpulency at this period what was needed was a restricted diet rather than an unduly active life; undue activity in the body when the energies were waning, while at the same time a great load of fat had to be carried about, and when the fat was encumbering the vital organs was a grave mistake, and often the cause of heart failure and other serious diseases. Sometimes the nutritive organs rather broke down at this period, and an altogether different set of ailments arose. Here the cause was imperfect nutrition. Defects in masticatory power here needed the aid of the dentist. Special attention to diet became necessary to keep up our nutrition, and a resolute effort must be made to keep down the activities of the body in the part that the tailing muscular energies might require. Life now became reflective rather than initiative. In the assistance given to younger people much of the best pleasures of this life would often be found. Dealing with the use of alcoholic beverages, Dr. Edmunds said that in persons inclined to corpulency they always hasten decay and degeneration of the tissues, and if taken as a medicine they should only be used upon really medical occasions, and their use carefully restricted. For the flatulent spasms which often troubled patients with failing or fatty heart, Dr. Edmunds recommends a cupful of hot ginger tea; if that did not relieve a teaspoonful of sal volatile in water, and that but rarely was alcohol required. If imperfect nutrition, and unusual debility was due to defective teeth, supplementary teeth were of vast service, while the use of red flesh meat too freely was often the cause of dyspepsia in the later period of life. Here a reversion rather to milk, soft breadstuffs and fat bacon often set a patient up astonishingly. Rheumatism was more aided by a perfectly dry house and flannel clothing than by medicinals, and the immense advantage of early hours and regular life became every day more apparent as life declined. In a plan of life this period ought to be made one in which rest and comfort could be studied, and as age crept on this useful life became one in which like the tired laborer going to bed after a full and fair day's work, so absolute rest painlessly supervened as the end of life.

I am dear Union Signal, yours faithfully,

Wilhelmina F. Haslam,
Secretary Woman's Union C. E. T. S.

TWO ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS.

Dear Union Signal;—Two essential conditions remain to be attained by the W. C. T. U. of the United States before it can become self supporting from its legitimate pecuniary resources, its intelligence universal and its spiritual power the leaven of national life.

These are, the perfection of the plan of organization, commencing with the National and systematically ultimating through state, congressional district, county and township in the local or school district union, and such incorporation of the National as will confer legal executive power upon each grade and every union as a chapter or auxiliary of the parent society.

This ideal system of moral work with its democratic methods of government, its self developing manner of growth, its inherent possibilities for political action, animated as it is with a creedless Christianity as its life principle, will overcome evil as sunlight abates darkness, remove poverty by the hand of educative industries, restrain crime by the execution of just laws, and make ready conditions for concerted action when justice is done by allowing woman the ballot.

The significant fact of the W. C. T. U. building upon the political subdivisions of the country has never been properly estimated. It is not an accident but an essential part of the spiritual plan for woman's enfranchisement. When the time comes for women to vote, the machinery is laid with its feet planted upon the Rock of Ages, its head illumined by the intelligence of the schools and its hands made ready by familiarity with political methods, to drop the consecrated enlightened ballot which will resurrect American politics, place incorruptible officers in places of power and trust and make actual a governmnet of the people and for the people. To this end as well as the intangible ones of moral, intellectual and social good let the system of W. C. T. U. work be established in uniformity throughout the states.

The work given by Divine Power to the W. C. T. U. not only involves the extermination of the saloon and den of infamy, but all forms of alcoholic stimulation and every phase of licentiousness and the injustice of disfranchising one-half the citizens of America.

The possibilities for fraternal helpfulness through thorough organization and this method of incorporation cannot be estimated. Suppose a feature of its operation: An offender against the law in one locality who has power to awaken local fear of the incendiary's torch or the assassin's knife, could be environed by detectives, lawyers and even courts from another locality, thus removing the greatest of all obstacles to the prosecution of the illegal traffic, fear of personal revenge.

One of the immutable laws as enunciated by Christ to the faithful servant, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things," applies here with great directness. Through the enforcement of the prohibitory laws already upon the statute books of the different states, some of which are much better than none, this principle would be made operative and would do more in the formation of wholesome public sentiment than the same amount of psychological force spent in entreaties for something better while leaving the present statutes dead upon the books. Let the W. C. T. U. be "faithful over the few" laws which it can through incorporate power enforce, and as a law of growth more and better legislation will follow. The dram shops and dens of soul barter will speedily learn that the "Rock of Ages women" have suspended the Damocles sword of law above their heads which they have the power and willingness to wield.

Let the women of the world learn that the Lord has given them a command to enforce the statutes which men have enacted concerning the regulation of appetites and passions, as well as to set in motion through faith and prayer the spiritual laws which underlie conviction of conscience, conversion of mind and salvation of soul. No move that this body of workers could make would convince men more clearly of the willingness of women to vote and help make laws than the spectacle of the enforcement by them of the laws which men have enacted but lack the moral power to make operative.

To the National Union as to a parent the cry is Help! help! The help which can come only through incorporation and a uniform plan of organization for every state, congressional district, county, township, and local or school district union in the United States.

To help in effecting this a constitution, comprehensive yet simple, is necessary. With such an instrument the difficulties which now beset the work of organization, the report system, petitions and finances would be largely removed. This accomplished the W. C. T. U. will become harmonious with the genius of democratic forms of government, and wherever introduced will carry with it the seeds of republican institutions in which inhere equal political rights to all its citizens, and an aggressive Christianity that will not cease its operations until all nations are free in the liberty which comes through obedience to the spiritual law of love.

Let the W. C. T. U. pray, prosecute and petition with fidelity and the next ten years will witness revolutions in public sentiment, upheavals in legislation, intensities in religious conviction equalled in our national history only by the patriotic fervor which animated human hearts during the war of the Revolution.

OUR FIRST LOVE LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am going to write you a genuine love letter, and you needn't keep it a secret between you and me; or, as is more often the case with love letters only confide what I say to the "one dear friend of your heart," but when I tell you of my love, the inability to live without you, the blessings your presence brings to my soul every weekly visit, I am willing the whole world should know it.

Thursday is one of my red letter days because 'tis your day, my precious UNION SIGNAL. How can I ever thank you for the words of cheer and comfort, the "news from the field," the notes upon the "watch tower," the sweet stories to the children, the snatches of song, hymn and verse. How can you find out so much wherewith to feast your loved ones upon? It is beyond my brain to conceive. Why, , every word you bring from week to week, is treasured as gold, from first to last, not word escapes me. The only pang your visits bring is because I know there are so many dear sisters as yet unacquainted with you, or perhaps have only a calling acquaintance, and I am so sorry for them, because their loss is so heavy. And then, oh! how I wish the gold and silver from the richest mine belonged to me, and I would willingly pay your traveling expenses into every home in the land. Am I a generous lover? Not after the usual stamp perhaps, but that is because my beloved is of so much higher type than the average! Now perhaps after I have so lovingly written you will permit me to ask for a bit of advice from you. What means would you advise in order to rouse our dear sisters in the W. C. T. U. to the pressing need of a financial basis in our work, that success attend our efforts? What words can be used to influence them into giving of their money in this one branch of our Master's work? When that old monster, Satan, wants to carry on any particular business he never lacks the wherewithal. Why does the dear Lord's treasury so often groan with emptiness and the good work become fettered because of lack of money? This is a matter which has troubled me vastly for a long time, and of late since so many of our Illinois districts have assumed what we call our financial basis, i. e. promised to raise within a year, a given amount to be used for district and state work, thereby hoping to advance the blessed cause in which our hearts are so interested, how would it do, dear UNION SIGNAL, to ask each sister to take the one question "How much ought I to give this year toward the advancement of our work as a W. C. T. U.?" with her into her closet, and not come out from thence until the matter is decided between God and herself? Think you there would be heard so many saying "Can't afford it!"

There is no one so poor but she can give something, be it ever so little, and "every little helps." Now where is the trouble? Don't think I am complaining, dear. I'm only terribly troubled over this matter. I pity those who withhold their gifts unto the Lord, and bring leanness into their own souls. How I wish you would, in some of your winsome talks, sometime set forth in rosy hued letters the blessedness of being in partnership with the Lord in this great work, and how, the larger amount of capital we invest in this grand enterprise the greater will be our dividends, both in this life and in the blessed life beyond. Oh! think of the many, many children, the dear precious children, to be trained in the knowledge of the effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the human system so that they may shun the evil and choose the good way. How shall we teach them, effectually, without books, charts, maps? And too we must secure for this, pleasant rooms, made attractive, so they will be willing to leave their play and attend unto these things.

Again, my mind reaches out after those of our sisters and brothers whose homes are in the country, miles away from church and school, with little society, save the inmates of their own household, perhaps struggling to gain a livelihood, and at the same time pay off the debt on the farm; who are pining for good reading matter, religious or secular. Except as this same evil one who always has his pockets full of money, sends broadcast his vile stories of lies and murders, they seldom receive word from the world outside. Think too, that these same brothers are voters, and often from want of knowledge or from false instruction cast their votes for men whose only aim is to destroy if possible both the voter and his children, that their own coffers may be filled. The work grows upon me daily, and while there is great cause for thankfulness and encouragment to press onward, yet there are times when my heart grows heavy and I almost lose courage, because so many loiter by the way, and allow their zeal to languish, and thus hinder the work.

Very imperfectly have I made known to you dear UNION SIGNAL my needs at this time, but you are so wise and good I believe you can out of this blundering mass define somewhat the meaning, and in due time I shall expect to hear words of yours which shall stir the very dullest of our sisterhood into lively action upon this one great need of our work, i. e., consecrated money giving to the work, the money the dear Lord has lent us. What shall be the account of our stewardship when asked if we have done what we could?

There are a thousand and one other matters of which my mind is full, to talk with you about. Perhaps already you are weary of my tongue (pen), but I cannot forbear to allude to our grand national convention at Detroit, although many weeks have passed since. I'm living in those delightful days yet! Oh! how my heart goes out toward those noble women, who stand in the front ranks of this great army! God bless them every one! But dear UNION SIGNAL, after all perhaps among the most pleasing memories of that convention was the hour when so many friends pledged themselves to your own precious self, over eight hundred new found friends! I felt like giving the old war time three cheers, with the "Hip hip hurrah!" One dear old lady who sat near me, and probably noted my beaming countenance said in reply to my question if she was your friend, "Yes, deary, and I couldn't live without my UNION SIGNAL, any more than without my Bible, or I shouldn't want to." Delightful woman, true blue. Speaking of conventions, what a change the past few years notes in convention going! And I am so glad, for they are great educators especially in our great work. You know I dote on conventions, in fact some call them my "hobby." Well so be it, this one thing I know, conventions have been of vastly more benefit to me than any other one thing; and so long as I can see, or hear, or walk, or ride, so long shall I attend conventions of our W. C. T. U.

THE THANK-OFFERINGS OF MEMORIAL DAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL: — As the collections are still coming in, and I hear of more on the way, it does not seem advisable to send a detailed report for publication; but all are interested to know the highest amounts given: Massachusetts State Union, $153.78; San Jose, Cal., $50; Maryland State Union, $50; Laramie City, Wy. Ter., $30; Madison, Wis., $40; Minneapolis, $33.72; Yonkers, N.Y., $50; Kirkwood, Mo., $35; Millville, N.J., $35.80; Galva, Ill., $35.40.

As soon as the "counties yet to come in" are heard from, a detailed report can be prepared.

As I received the little notes containing the smaller amounts I read between the lines how in many instances these represent large sums, in faith, and labor, and patience, in perfected arrangements, and, alas, in disappointments, for in a large territory most thickly dotted with unions the weather was never so inclement. But the intentions and efforts of these meetings are bottled up with the incense of the prayers as yet unanswered, and of these mention will be made when the final records are opened. There is a pathos in these small sums which only those who wrought can feel, and they are of the "littles" which make the "mickle"; they count wonderfully high, too, in the books kept above.

The aggregate of the collections will place the National treasury on a securer, broader basis than it has ever before known; and the National treasurer desires to return thanks that the liberality of W. C. T. Unions has made this possible. Yours, for the cause,

ESTHER PUGH.

"OUT OF THE MOUTHS OE BABES."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Not long since a good sister of the W. C. T. U. was visiting at a beautiful home in one of our cities, where some brandy peaches were passed at the tea-table. A little boy of the family watched her closely, and when he saw her decline them, a bright smile illumined his face, and leaning confidentially upon her lap he said, "Oh, I know why you didn't take the peaches! It's because there's brandy in them, and it will help make us like to drink brandy and then we might get to be drunkards."

"I can't think where the child learned such nonsense!" said the lady of the house, apologetically.

"Oh, I'll tell you," said the little fellow, "I learned it at Sunday school; my teacher told me all about it, and I'm never, never going to eat any brandy peaches. Don't you see mamma, the lady don't eat them, and I'm so glad she's temperance too."

And the little fellow crept close to his friend with a new air of fraternity, while the embarrassed mother left her own peaches untasted.

"Ah," thought the W. C. T. U. worker, "there's a temperance missionary in this house, whose influence can scarcely be counted."

Oh, dear sisters, let us send out these little missionaries from every Sunday school armed with definite and clear instruction on these points where our insiduous enemy is creeping in among the lambs of the flock.

THE CORNSTALK'S LESSON.

One single grain of corn took root
Beside the garden walk;
"O, let it stay," said little May,
"I want it for my stalk."

And there it grew, until the leaves
Waved in the summer light;
All day it rocked the baby ear,
And wrapped it warm at night.

And then the yellow corn silk came—
A skein of silken thread;
It was as pretty as the hair
Upon the baby's head.

Alas! one time, in idle mood,
May pulled the silk away,
And then forgot her treasured stalk
For many a summer day.

At last she said, "I'm sure my corn
Is ripe enough to eat;
In even rows the kernels lie,
All white, and juicy sweet."

Ah me! they all were black and dry,
Were withered long ago;
"What was the naughty corn about,"
She said, "to cheat me so?"

She did not guess the silken threads
Were slender pipes to lead
The food the tasseled blossom shook,
To each small kernel's need.

The work her foolish fingers wrought
Was shorter than a breath;
Yet every milky kernel then
Began to starve to death!

So list, my little children, all,
This simple lesson heed;
That many a grief and sin has come
From one small thoughtless deed.

"BENDING THE TWIG."

BY A. N. EVERETT.

I took a seat in my favorite corner in the horse-car, one Sunday afternoon, and looked about, as was my wont, for some entertaining or diverting type to watch during the half-hour's ride to the city. Presently I noticed a bright-eyed, pleasant-faced boy of seven or eight, standing next the conductor, with the comfortable air a boy has when he first arrives at the manly dignity of riding on the platform instead of sitting demurely by his mother's side, after the manner of his little sister. I like to watch boys and I find they are seldom conscious of my habit, being too much interested in their own affairs. This one was eagerly examining the conductor's punch and asking questions in regular boy-fashion, which the elder man was pleasantly answering, when all at once I noticed a change in the boy's face. He scowled and shook his head vigorously at some one inside the car.

"Charlie," a thin, sharp voice, coming from half-way down the opposite side; "Charlie, come in here, off the platform; come in directly, I say!"

My sympathies were with Charlie immediately; the conductor was taking good care of him, and I knew he hated the stuffy car as well as I. Nevertheless, I was sorry to see the scowl and disobedient nod of his head.

"You'd better come," said the voice again, "or your father will hear about you! It's the last time you will go to Boston with me for one while. Boys are such a trial!" the last remark addressed to the lady next her.

Charlie still lingered outside, eyeing his mother, all his serenity and enjoyment evidently gone, when a sweet-faced young lady sitting next me leaned past, and, with a low excuse to me spoke a few words to the boy. His face flushed, then a quick smile broke over it, and in a few minutes he turned and entered the car, touching his hat awkwardly but pleasantly to the young lady, who smiled back at him brightly. She said a few words more as he passed by. I caught a "Thank you" at the end of the sentence, and the boy went on to his mother.

The lady looked across the car and nodded to my neighbor with the remark; "I only wish my boy was half as much afraid of me as he is of you. I don't see how you teachers manage it."

A hot blush swept over my neighbor's cheek at these words, and she turned her face toward my window to escape the gaze of the other passengers.

"I ain't afraid of her," said the boy stoutly, with a scornful emphasis on the "afraid," and then went down to the other end and stood looking out of the window of the closed door. Soon the mother and child left the car, and then I turned to my neighbor and asked if she would object to telling we what she said to the child that made him yield so quickly and pleasantly, "For," I added smiling, "I do not believe he is at all afraid of you, though I suspect you are a teacher."

"No," she said with a laugh, "I do not think any of my scholars are afraid of me. I only reminded Charlie that he was forgetting a promise we all made to each other this morning about being polite and respectful to older people. We are to tell one another our mistakes next Saturday; that was what made him blush and then laugh?"

"Why did you thank him when he came in?"

"For doing so quickly what I asked."

"Do you generally thank your scholars for minding you?"

Almost always. I do very little commanding. I find a pleasant 'I do not wish you to do that,' or 'That is not right,' sufficient in most cases."

"I should not think it would answer with children as young as this Charlie."

"Why, he is nearly eight! One cannot begin too soon; children are as sensitive to impressions of good as of evil, and being natural imitators, will speedily acquire gentle and polite manners if constantly surrounded by them."

I caught the secret then. What one has in one's self one can often inspire in others. This fair-faced girl was a courteous, pure-souled woman; it was that which gave her the hold over her scholars. Children are instinctive haters of sham; what you are not yourself you cannot make of them.

"About your Saturday talks," I continued. "Is it not shooting rather over the heads of such young children to talk to them on courtesy, respect for the older, and such things?"

"You would not think so to see the interest they show. I begin with the very youngest; teach them politeness, first to each other and then to me. It soon spreads. If a boy must lift his hat to me,—if he does not I shall not bow to him,—he soon gets in the habit of lifting it to others. If gentle courtesy to me and her playmates is as much a part of a girl's daily duty (and I hold it is) as are her lessons, it will become a habit with her. Our Saturday talks are very simple; I tell some stories, show up some faults, confess some mistakes of my own, and teach them to do the same. The children in my room do learn gentle ways, if they are not prodigies in arithmetic."

"I congratulate them," said I. I would like to come to a Saturday talk;" and inwardly promising myself the pleasure, I thought, as I stepped off the car, "How seldom in public one sees that simple grace of manner which comes from true kindness! Would that there were more teachers who,—though the amenities of their position are few,—could still by example more than by precept, inculcate the simple principles of true politeness.—The Present Age.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I dare say you have often heard Chicago called "that wicked city"—and perhaps you have heard of one part of this city which is wickeder than all the rest. This is known as "The Black Hole" and it is right in the central part of Chicago, where the great business wagons roll along—where the cable cars whiz by—where the steam cars from various parts of the world meet. Everybody who goes from the South Side residences to the down town places of business, passes this Black Hole more or less nearly every day of his life, where it is almost as black as night with sin—only it does not look so. The same blue sky bends over it, the same sun shines upon it, the same gentle beautiful snow falls down in its depths. But that is because God is good to all, and "only man is vile." If you could look deep into the faces of some of the people that you meet on those terrible streets so that you could actually see their hearts, there is where you would find the blackness of the Black Hole of Chicago. Even the faces of the little children have a hard and bitter and sorrowful cast. And no wonder. At home and on the street they hear nothing but blasphemy and vileness, they see nothing but sin.

But right in the very heart of this great centre of iniquity, the W. C. T. U. has opened a mission house. It is called the Bethesda Mission. There a good Christian physician lets the poor people come to him every afternoon for free medicine and other good doctors come to help him in his care for the sick. There is a free kindergarten there also which has its school sessionns every morning of the week except Saturday, when an industrial school for girls and boys takes its place.

Saturday afternoon there is the Band of Hope meeting and on Sunday both preaching service and Sunday school. O how eager the children are to get to these schools and meetings. They will come hours beforehand, if allowed, so as to stand around the warm fire in a bright pleasant room where are pictures on the walls, and everything is cheerful and homelike. I went into the Industrial School the other morning to see what the boys and girls were doing, what work, I mean. Of course the girls were sewing, nearly all making aprons for themselves, under the direction and superintendence of four or five ladies. But the boys—what were they up to? Well, they were drawing pictures. One boy had as good a picture of a house with a ladder up against it as I ever saw anywhere. The ladder stood out away from base of the building just as a ladder should which isn't going to fall the next minute, and leaned up against it at the top so securely that I thought I should almost be willing to climb it myself and trust my poor bones to its steadiness. I wondered where he could have learned so much—but he said he'd "never learned nuthin." He just drew you see out of his head, and the fact is, his head is an artist's head. I don't know that he will make an artist even if some great painter should take him in training, but there is a something which God has given him which, for want of any better word, we call a "talent," and God wants him to use it somehow, somewhere for Him. And I was so glad that this school with these good Christian teachers had opened its doors to this poor little fellow, and had given him a glimpse of what he could do, and of the gifts which a kind Heavenly Father had bestowed upon him. This and all such means are a part of our Prevention Army work, and I want you as little soldiers of the army to pray that this new recruit may become one of the loyal and true ones who make up the noble company which like John Brown's soul, is "marching on."

Captain Deborah.

CLOSED FOR INVOICE.

BY J. A. U.

A saloon man in our city being crowded by some point of law closed his doors and hung in the window the announcement "Closed for invoice."

"Closed for invoice." Yes, let the "invoice" be heard.
And carefully heed every sentence and word;
Bend the ear close to listen, as if for thy life,
And be deaf for the time to the tempter's loud strife.

'Twill warn you with fervor to close the saloon,
And save to your brothers the God-given boon
Of honor and health, and home of delight
The cup that you give him will poorly requite.

The voice will entreat for the mothers and wives,
For the dear little children whose innocent lives
Now tremble with terror or blush deep with shame
Because papa drinks, and you are to blame.

The "invoice" will say in words pleading and low,
"For this work you are doing there is woe, only woe."
Heed the "invoice," my brother, and close the saloon;
Let the blessing of God, not His curse be thy boon.

WOMAN'S POWER.

BY META E. B. THORNE.

"Who did sin, this man or his parents?" is the question which presents itself to the mind, on glancing over the record of shocking crimes, committed by those, probably, in whom perverted appetite or warped intellect have developed inherent propensities to evil.

Look over this calendar filled to overflowing by the busy flashings of the chained lightnings. How the shuddering mind revolts from the sickening details, how the bare outline overwhelms one with horror, under whose weight one almost sinks down, crying "What hope for the world? Evil reigns supreme!"

Yet the sad story of the dominion of sin, should but incite the mind, and arouse the energies to effort for the arrest of the terrible tide, in which one may have the glorious consciousness of being "co-worker with God."

"Right is right, since God is God,
And right the day will win.
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

But whither shall these energies be directed? Where shall this great task be begun?

A needless query is it not, oh wives and mothers! How can the stream be pure when the source is corrupt? And is it not ours "to sit at the waters' birth," to keep the fountain sweet and pure?

Read again the sad record. See how A and B and C noble and accomplished, but victims of dyspepsia, become insane and committed terrible crimes.

How D and E, handsome and intelligent, but crazed with wine, have slain with reckless hand, beloved wife or precious child.

Read there how M or N, highly connected, talented, and of unblemished reputation, has yielded to temptation, has forged his friend's name, or has embezzled the funds intrusted to him.

Again learn how X, Y or Z, with mind unseated by great grief or dire calamity, has committed suicide.

But a thousand alphabets would scarce suffice to contain the list. Yet even the wayfarer may learn some lessons.

Perhaps a fond and indulgent but unwise mother, fostered the diseased taste of A, B, and C, although thereby the whole digestive apparatus must be injured, its delicate mechanism deranged; until after long suffering, the entire physical nature is disorganized, and the mind, the reason no longer holding the reins, like maddened steeds broken loose from control, the passions hurl all to swift destruction.

So D and E have abandoned the sceptre to appetite, under whose empire no crime is too flagrant for commission. Yet might not wise counsel and careful culture in childhood have strengthened the will power to withstand usurping passion, and held him a submissive slave? Who shall say that a due knowledge and observance of the laws of health might not in all of these cases, have prevented the awful catastrophe? What more certainly in the province of the mother than this "theory and practice?"

It may be that M. and N. early learned to regard poverty as a curse, while wealth, no matter how obtained, seemed the greatest blessing. Or were there some dependent on them, who by selfish clamor and protest against "the ills they knew," have driven into mad folly, and brought upon all, ills greater far than any before conceived? O, for greater wisdom regarding these important matters, on the part of mothers and wives!

Alas for X. Y. and Z! For them there is no earthly help. Did a loving mother early teach of the Omnipotent Ruler, the loving Friend who "doeth all things well?" Did she point to the source of all comfort, the only real consolation when sorrow assails? Did she show by precept and example, how grief and calamity meekly borne, may strengthen the soul, and prepare for coming joy?

And the long catalogue of dire disasters chronicled by the daily press,—how large a proportion of these might have been averted, if some one, (that mysterious "some one" who always "blunders," who is ever at fault,) had only learned care and unselfishness—dearest offspring of charity.

Mighty the power of woman! Not alone upon the rostrum or exerted through the press,—though here already become one of the most potent elements,—but in the quiet nooks of home, where almost unseen of mortal eye, she wields an influence "silent and resistless as the light."

Do you not readily remember such an one? Whose face,—pale and plain perhaps,—seemed encircled with a radiant aureole, whose gentle smile of sympathy and word of counsel cheered and inspired to noble endeavor or calm endurance; whose toilworn hand rested, like heaven's benediction on the head bowed with grief or shame; whose soft footfall brought new life to the bedside of the desponding invalid; new faith and courage to the homes of poverty and woe; whose own unselfish patience and heroism in the midst of want and trial have sustained a tempted husband in defying Satan's hosts.

O, yes, there is an army, grand though invisible, thus working with God, but the cry goes forth for "more more! Give us more workers, more true mothers!"

Let us fling off the chains of fashion, of ease, of selfishness, and donning our armor respond to the call.

We need not enter the grand arena, where the eyes of the world look on, but may do royal service in byways and tangled wilds, where lurks many a sharp shooter of the enemy to take us and our loved ones unawares.

Yet not wholly unseen nor single-handed do we fight. From above look down countless eyes, and at our side stands One whose invincible shield and keen sword is "for us." Then "who shall be against us?"

OUR COOK BOOK AGAIN.

A southern friend sends the following:

Another substitute for cider, etc., in mince pies, is the syrup of sweet pickles. For flavoring custards, sauces, etc. The yellow rind of lemons and oranges, chipped off with a sharp knife, or the vanilla bean cut in small pieces, and boiled a moment in a small quantity of milk, or water, is delicious flavoring.

Still another writes:

I am very glad that you are getting up a prospective cook book, will send you a miniature one that we got out several years since to meet the then pressing demand. It contains some long tested and valuable recipes which are good and economical. A lady remarked that one especial recipe in it, was worth the price of the book.

And yet another has already sent a quaint little temperance cook book of many years ago, which will yield many recipes for delicious dishes, all to appear in our W. C. T. U. cook book to which we trust every W. C. T. U. worker and member will at once contribute from her choicest collection.

CONSERVATISM.

BY LOIS.

We had listened to a very interesting and instructive sermon from the text, "What do ye more than others?" and had passed into the Sabbath school room for our morning lessons. Seating myself beside an elderly and very active member of the church, I remarked, "We had a very excellent sermon this morning." She replied in the affirmative, and I ventured to repeat the text, and asked, "What do we do more than non-professors for mankind? What is this church, or any other church here, doing for the cause of temperance?" She replied haughtily:

"Oh, that is your hobby!"

"Well, setting aside hobby, do you not think it is a subject that should attract the attention of every one?"

"That is just as you look at it."

"Well," said I, "there is but one way to look at the subject."

"Then if you think so it is your duty to work there, but I think differently," and she sailed across the room to attend to something that called her attention. My eyes followed her in pity, to think that one who was so anxious to work out her own salvation, should be so blind to the true import of the gospel.

"For all the low is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

If there is any class of people whom our Heavenly Father pities more than another, it is that class of Christians who have been brought into our churches through ancestral custom, but have never been "born again," and will never experience the quickening of the Spirit, because of their self righteousness. And this is one cause of the lethargized condition of many of our churches today. Another is the conservative attitude of many church organizations toward reforms while in their incipiency, and the indifference manifested by professing Christians creates much of the apathy existing among non-professors.

The garron "hobby" did not daunt me in the least, and I only longed for a chance to tell my friend I was proud to be the possessor of so noble a steed, one that had so many times sped over royal highways loaded with the trophies of a victory won.

FEB. 21. LESSON VIII. 1884.

TOPIC: THESSALONIANS AND BEREANS.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 17: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so."

TIME.—A. D. 52.

PLACES.—Thessalonica and Berea.

1. "As his manner was" Paul everywhere went first to the Jews. They were his natural audience. His heart turned to them and yearned over them. They were his brethren. He had been foremost among them in defense of the faith committed to the fathers. He had faith that as he had been brought to know the truth so might they. They were more familiar with all the collaterals of his theme, the "must needs be" of Scripture fullfilment, than were the Greeks of Asia Minor, and naturally might be supposed to follow his reasoning to the desired conclusions.

But "brethren" are not always natural allies. Our Savior said that the truth would set households at variance, simply because not all would believe. "Brethren" opposed to the truth are often its worst foes. All through the Scriptures are instances of this sort. Eyes unwilling to see and ears unwilling to hear are only outward manifestations of the heart's unwillingness to believe. May God preserve us all, in all our work, from the ignoble attitude of the Thessalonian Jews!

2. Unreadiness to believe the truth always works demoralization of character. The truth shall make you free in Christ. The opposition to truth shall put you in bondage to Satan. The unwilling Jews are no sooner confirmed in their unbelief than Satan enters into them and they violated their own laws and assaulted the embassador of Christ.

Exactly the same course was pursued by Paul at Berea. Coming thither the apostles went into the synagogue and taught as at Thessalonica. But here was readiness of mind. Here was nobility of soul and a faith in truth so high and strong that it was seen at once that nothing can be done "against the truth."

3. What is the first action of the "ready mind?" Some people are accused of being too ready to believe new doctrine and are often really led into error by this means.

The "ready mind" is not however of this fashion. It is not the superstitious mind, believing on appearances or superficial reasoning. Nor is it indeed the mind to rest exclusively on any human testimony. "To the law and the testimony" is its watchword. Test all wares at the fountain of truth. Truth is harmonious and if the new doctrinal candidate is worthy, let be seen that it is in perfect harmony with the truths we already hold and have proven. Therefore the "ready mind" of the Bereans searched the Scriptures to see if these things preached by Paul and his companions were true.

4. Not merely read the Scriptures but searched them. Too many of us feel that our duty is done at family prayers, or by the quiet chapter-reading in our own rooms. Our Father's message to us is like that of the dying husbandman who gave direction to his sons standing by his bedside to dig in his field for the treasures that were hidden there for them. They digged for treasures of gold and the earth "laughed with a harvest" that exceeded all their hopes. So if we would find our Father's treasures hidden in the great field of His Word we must dig, and the result will be that our entire nature will grow and blossom out under such tillage.

Then they "searched daily." It takes system and regularity to be real growing Christians. You can no more thrive spiritually on an occasional thorough reading of God's directions for "walking after the Spirit," than you can thrive physically on an occasional "square meal." We are to feed on the Word, and that means to sit down at the Lord's table as regularly as at our own.

HE understands liberty aright who makes his own depend upon that of others. True liberty does not permit the enfranchisement of one's self through the enslavement of some one else.

THE habitual use of fermented liquors, to an extent far short of what is necessary to produce intoxication, injures the body and dimishes mental power.—Sir Henry Thompson.

PEOPLE OF ONE IDEA.

A witty person has said of them "They are not lovely in their lives, and only in death are they divided." In what then, does their unloveliness appear.

Loveliness of life and character are of ever increasing value as civilization civilizes and Christianity reveals to men its blessed possibilities. We cannot afford to cultivate unlovely traits either as individuals or as classes in society. The greatest foe to a lovely disposition of mind and heart is selfishness. Cultivate this sadly human trait and you have a very one-idea-d individual or people, and very unlovely persons withal. Strange to say, however, it is not the man unduly filled with himself, unwarrantably bent on enhancing his own fortunes or fulfilling his own behests, who is generally rated as the man of one idea. Men who do well by themselves, who put money in their purses, who build stately mansions and live in them, are the level-headed, the substantial, cool and clever citizens of whom all men speak well. These are they to whom philanthropists go for counsel, to whom literary and educational circles bow down, and with whom trusting widows and orphans leave their mites and savings.

On the other hand, we have the so-called man of one idea, utterly reckless of self aggrandizment, blind to personal interests and fortune, living in penury often, and always in a home of insecure financial conditions, bent on a thought, a plan, a system of ideas which few endorse or love, which many distrust or hate—but which is nevertheless in his own opinion the one thing needful to the best fulfillment of humanity's high destiny.

He is generally, nay always, sanguine, for naught but eternal hope could sustain so dreary a career. He is frequently, vastly more so than his antitype, a cheerful man. This cheerfulness comes doubtless of his hopefulness and of his faith in his idea. Linked to his feebleness, he sees the chariots of God drive on to victory. No turn of affairs but evolves a new cause for thankfulness and praise. No phase of effort against him but reveals the struggle of the ages—Michael contending with and overcoming Satan. This is the lovely side of his character.

His unloveliness seems to consist in his undue emphasis of the one idea. Dominating as it does his own purpose and action, he unconsciously insists that it shall so govern all lives. Contributing so directly, and so largely as he supposes, to the world's reign of peace, he would have the farmer leave his plow, the manufacturer stop his loom, the lawyer desert the forum, and even the preacher shape his gospel to suit the phrases and phases of his reform, all to compass the end which he alone sees clearly and apprehends fully. Driving on to victory in his own triumphal car, he very often grazes dangerously near the slower vehicles of ancient usage, rides down better built road-craft and crosses at menacing angles the track of steady teamsters on whom the world relies for progress. "Fool," "fanatic," are the epithets that load the air around his swift coursing, but often and often, when the half-way house is reached, his panting steeds are found not so vastly ahead of the staid roadsters coming up behind, showing that either his bluster was greater than his actual progress, or what is more likely, that his nimbleness has spurred to legitimate activity, the lazy nags grown used to their drivers.

And now after all, is the man of one idea so bad a fellow as he is painted?

Is he not the man lost sight of perhaps when all the world reaches his goal, but to whom the the tardy generations build monuments., and of whom poets sing, and for whose posthumous fame "twenty cities" clamor wherein he living begged his bread?

Is he not the man historians honor as those "who lighted up and led their age," and before whom centennial assemblages bow down, as age after age glides into the past?

Columbus with his "New World Idea," Luther with his Justification by Faith, Galileo muttering in chains "It does move notwithstanding," Cobden moving to the people's relief with even the people daunting him, Garrison dragged through Boston streets and Phillips egged and mobbed for human freedom—all these and more "of whom the world was not worthy,"—what were they but the blazing examples of the force, the wisdom, the gospel of one idea?

And yet of them as of the worthies of old, let it be written and understood "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

Two mothers in our Israel have fallen! "Mother Hill" of New Jersey was known and beloved wherever our national conventions have been held as well as in her own appreciative state. She has been a notable figure in all our sessions, save those of our latest, at Detroit, and always she was the faithful time keeper for the noon hour of prayer. "Her clock always struck the hour of twelve" says one who knew her intimately, and that noon hour in Mother Hill's closet was a time of prevailing with God. The W. C. T. U. of Newark N. J., was formed under her leadership and was one of the original founders of the state society. When she entered the work she was a woman of seventy, remarkable for physical vigor, mental activity, executive force, a relentless foe to rum, hindered by no obstacle, fired with a zeal and tireless energy no effort could abate, and withal of such good judgment, combined with an unalterable trust in her Savior, that when she came to the front she led this union on from victory to victory, never retreating, always advancing—until today hundreds of homes where once the serpent of the still lay coiled, rise up and call Mother Hill blessed.

A sweet and peaceful ending of another saintly life was the death of Mrs. Letitia Allis, of Skaneateles, N. Y., the mother of Mrs. Fanny J. Barnes, our national superintendent of young woman's work. Miss Willard in "Woman and Temperance" describes this lovely woman as one "who has the Gospel in her looks," and none who have seen the beautiful face with its framing of soft silver hair and Friend's cap, will abate the description. A long period of suffering, borne with the patience of hope and the confidence of faith preceded her going to that home from which she shall go no more out, and where the inhabitants never say "I am sick." As these dear mothers leave us, the writer's heart is full, thinking of one as dear and sweet, still languishing for the air of heaven which only shall make her well.

UNTIL the year 1860, the sales of wines and liquors in England was confined to wine and spirit merchants and publicans. In that year, in arranging a commercial treaty with France, Mr. Gladstone thought it would be a great boon to introduce the cheap wines of France into this country. In doing so Mr. Gladstone believed he would promote the interests of temperance by substituting cheap wines for the stronger liquors which were so much drunk by the population. This was to be done by licensing grocers to sell equally with merchants and publicans. In 1861 representations were made that the distillers had been rather unfairly treated. It was argued that the power given to the grocers and storekeepers to sell wines should be extended to spirits, and that was done, the sale being of bottles of not less than a reputed quart. By the provision of this act there are now more than 2,000 licensed grocers circulating 10,000,000 bottles of spirits annually, to say nothing of the wine and beer sales. That this act has been promotive of greatly increased drunkenness among women is now very generally believed, and the temperance forces of England are uniting to call on the government for its repeal. American temperance societies have as yet waged no vigorous warfare on grocer's licenses, the W. C. T. U. alone pronouncing against them. But the need of their abolition grows upon us. The opportunities for drinking at home and in secret are greatly facilitated by the ease with which liquors may be surreptitiously entered in the list of grocers supplies and covered adroitly in the bill by such neccssary items as "sugar," "coffee," etc. There are women in all our large cities who are known to society as invalids, but whom their physicians and family know as confirmed inebriates, made such largely by the indulgence in "grocers family supplies."

A LEAFLET has been issued by Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, the superintendent of the department of the study of Heredity, which is remarkably full of suggestive plans. "Wisdom is justified of all her children" is its significant heading and of her justification in this study of hereditary tendencies there can be no doubt. The leaflet puts a very different construction upon this study from the popular understanding in regard to it. Here it is shown that to properly estimate the sum or resultant of the ages, the men and women of today, the ages must be ransacked. Their architecture, forms of government, religion, customs and household life must all be understood in order to know what has gone to make us what we are. Judging from the past,we may shape the future to nobler ends by higher present aims and habits. In all the division of labor for which our national society is famed and deservedly so, no line of effort will yield better results to those who engage heartily in its quiet research, than this department of the study of heredity. Dr. T. D. Crothers, of Hartford, Ct., says of the arrangement of studies prescribed by Dr. Burnett, "It is an advance that promises a world of new thought, a field of the grandest possibilities."

THE Cleveland Educational Bureau wound up its season of entertainments for the winter on February 2 with a debate on woman suffrage between Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Prof. Van Buren Denslow. We are surprised at the weakness of the argument brought forward by the latter against giving women the ballot, the entire basis of which is the false assumption that the power of government rests on fighting force. "If women vote, they must fight; since they cannot fight they must not vote," is the substance of Prof. Denslow's plea; all of which Mrs. Livermore demolished at a blow when she said:

Not only will you disfranchise half the men of the country if you say that the right to vote depends on the ability to fight, but you will enfranchise a great army of women in the United States who can fight, who did fight. We have got four hundred of them in the women's state prison in Massachusetts who do fight, who have got into the state prison for fighting, and any one of whom could whip my friend Professor Denslow clean out of his boots.

"AMONG THE THORNS." Those who attended the national convention in Detroit, will not soon forget Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, and will be gratified to learn that she has placed at the disposal of the National W. C. T. U. one hundred copies of her charming book "Among the Thorns." As a writer Mrs. Dickinson needs no introduction to those familiar with our best literature, and "Among the Thorns" is a book of purest tone and most perfect diction. Orders should be sent to Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, headquarters National W. C. T. U., 16 East Fourteenth street, New York. Price postpaid, $1.50.

LAST Sunday was a day of prayer in Iowa, for the election of the responsible man in place of the heroic Holbrook on whom so many hopes depended. Mrs. Aldrich issued a call for a special prayer meeting in this behalf, to be held on Sunday evening, and we doubt not it was well observed. Thus our Heavenly Father reminds us of our dependence upon Him, and happy are we if it finds us already on our knees.

I wish some law could be enacted to keep boys out of smoking cars. If the New Jersey legislature can give us a law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors, why may not this other provision follow naturally? Even if the boys do not smoke, they seem "possessed" to get in with the smoking men—and are very likely to be set on fire sooner or later.

The Harlem (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. have a Home Protector, issued occasionally but bearing the blessed legend, "Speak to my people, that they go forward." New York is rich in W. C. T. U. literature.

Which reminds me that everybody is richer because of the new Penny Papers just sent out at a penny apiece by the National W. C. T. U. Literature Department. They are neat, and full of meat, stories, facts and arguments; all in a nutshell, just the shape to carry in a reticule, and just the thing to capture a wary "fly" upon the wing.

A kind friend, W. E. Bowman, of Ottawa, has sent me a beautifully correct and finished photograph of Gen. Neal Dow, taken by himself during Gen. Dow's visit to that city last November. And thinking many would like to secure it, I gladly mention that thirty cents in postage stamps will secure it postpaid. Mr. Bowman is one of our true, temperance "stand bys."

Here is a new significance to the term "overflow meetings." A vigilant district president, always going about seeking what she may devour for the sake of W. C. T. U., has instituted such meetings in connection with her district conventions, and they are intended for an "overflow" of soul—talking meetings, where two or three are on the floor at once with a text, a promise or an exhortation. I think I should always attend the "overflow meetings" under such circumstances.

The W. C. T. U. of Yonkers, so says Mrs. McClees, has won the prize for the largest decennial contribution to the National society. Consequently they confidently expect a lecture from Miss Willard at an early day.

Blessed tidings of transformed lives and homes comes to me from Missouri. Mr. Woodford's work there numbers pledges by thousands, and still goes on in more than geometrical progression.

From Kansas City and from that incarnation of consecrated energy, Mrs. Ira Lewis, comes the good word:

I am very happy to tell you that we are now ready to take a share of stock in THE UNION SIGNAL and will attend to the matter as soon as Mrs. Hoffman is again in Kansas City. Did ever women work as they do now? We send today twenty-five dollars to the National, twenty-five dollars to the state, and twenty-five dollars to the dear UNION SIGNAL. I am so glad for I had set my heart on it.

Are there not more like unto her, who have set their hearts upon it?

The Massachusetts W. C. T. U. asks 1800 ministers of that state to regard next Sunday, Feb. 17, as W. C. T. U. day in all the churches. A temperance sermon and a collection is desired. Some ministers and some churches are of their own accord and motion devoting a regular prayer meeting each quarter to temperance, and an annual collection to the W. C. T. U.

RHODE ISLAND.

Valley Falls.—Mrs E.S.Burlingame says in the Providence Journal: Among the desirable methods employed for the cultivation of a correct temperance sentiment, parlor meetings may be recognized as especially helpful. Persons who would sooner go to a funeral than to a temperance meeting, in a hall or church, will often accept with pleasure an invitation to an elegant residence, and seem to find the dreary subject tinted with roseate hues when discussed with the surroundings of wealth and elegance.

There are many staunch friends of temperance who might help on the cause materially by such parlor meetings, at which a paper should be read, or a presentation of some phase of the temperance question be made, which would be followed by informal discussion.

A very pleasant gathering of the friends of temperance was held on Wednesday evening of this week, at the residence of Mrs. E. B. Chace of Valley Falls, to listen to the reading of a paper on the crusade movement in that locality nineteen years ago. The paper had been previously read at a similar meeting of the Valley Falls W. C. T. U., held at the same pleasant home. But the inclemency of the weather prevented many from being present who desired it, and Mrs. C. very kindly responded to requests to repeat it. The gathering on this occasion was entirely informal, and was made enjoyable by the accessories that such a residence can furnish. There were about thirty persons present, including delegations from Pawtucket and Providence.

The reading of the paper, was listened to with close attention and deep interest by those present. To those of them who were helpers in the work, it was a pleasant reminiscence, recalling the events of former days. To those who had but recently heard of the movement, it was a surprise, that nine years before the crusade in Ohio, there originated, in our own state, a work so similar, following a lecture of Dr. Lewis, and carried on with such persistency and such good results, not only at the time, but during the years that have followed

The reading was followed by a pleasant interchange of opinions upon the thoughts presented. One person suggested as a reason why such efficient efforts have not had the decided result of conquering the liquor traffic, that there has been such a large influx of those elements in society, which embody ignorance and lack of principle. Another was especially impressed during the reading with the thought that what gave the women such power in those visits to saloons, and to the town council, was that their strong convictions as to what was right led them to make such great sacrifice of time and strength. Sacrifice for a good cause always carries weight with it.

A lady suggested that it is the same element which gives strength and influence to the W. C. T. U. today. The discussion as to whether it is right for a town council to grant licenses, after the town has voted that licenses shall be granted, led to the expression of opinion by different persons present, that nothing could make it right for a man to give his approval to the license system. The opinion was expressed privately, however, by some, that if a town has voted that licenses shall be granted, its decision should be respected by those in office, and if consistent temperance men, the only alternative would be to resign, as being conscientiously unable to carry out the town's decision.

Praise was bestowed on the Valley Falls W. C. T. U. for its action in furnishing coffee at the polls at the last election, and it was said to be the most quiet and orderly one ever known there. Mrs. C. thought the ladies did nobly, but she felt indignant at the thought of women, who were not considered capable of voting, standing and serving out coffee to men to keep them sober long enough to vote.

The time, when those who were to return to Providence must leave for the train, came all too soon, but the occasion will be remembered with pleasure by all present.

Providence.—The meeting of the Providence union on Friday afternoon was well attended. The Scriptures were read by the president, Mrs. G. F. Martin, and a very fervent prayer was offered by Mrs. J. K. Barney. As it was the regular business meeting, reports were given by officers and superintendents. The treasurer reported, receipts $194.74, expenditures $153.32, during the quarter.

Mrs. E. gave an interesting report in regard to our work in connection with the churches. She spoke of the work of various auxiliaries and of encouraging things connected with their work. A letter was read from the auxiliary in the Cranston street Baptist church, which spoke of work done and to be done.

Mrs. T. reported from the Roger Williams Free Baptist church, that two interesting temperance meetings had been held during the quarter, one on crusade Sunday and the other in connection with the Sabbath school on review Sunday. On the latter occasion, Rev. Mr. Wood, of New Hampshire, addressed the school, giving a series of pictorial illustrations showing the downward course of a drunkard from the first step onward.

The church of the Yahveh and Plymouth church were well reported by ladies present as having a deep interest in the W. C. T. U. and its work. A temperance school is about to be started in Plymouth church, to meet on Saturdays.

The Union Baptist church was encouragingly spoken of, and good success reported in the obtaining of signatures to petitions for constitutional prohibition. No doubt equally encouraging reports would have been given from other churches had the auxiliaries been present.

Mrs. L. spoke of visitation in intemperate homes. In one home there were four motherless children, in very needy circumstances. In order to keep anything to eat, they were obliged to secrete what they obtained in the most careful manner, to prevent the intemperate father from eating it all.

Mrs. M. spoke of receiving letters from a boy who had been saved by the efforts of ladies of the Union. He is now at sea, but writes very grateful letters to his benefactors, and remembered some of them with Christmas tokens.

A sad case was referred to by another lady of a family in this city, where the husband and father is intemperate, that were found to have been entirely without food a day at a time, and the mother has a nursing infant.

Mrs. Barney spoke appreciatively of the work being done by the union, referred with pleasure to the fine picture of Mrs. Martin, placed upon the walls by the W. C. T. U., and spoke hopeful words of the future. After some business the meeting closed in the usual way.

VERMONT.

The W. C. T. U. of Burlington, with the consent of the school board, has offered prizes in the high and grammar schools of that city, for the best essays on the evil effects of stimulants and narcotics.

January 26, a reception was given by the union, at the residence of Dr. J. H. Wooster, to the superintendent of public schools and teachers of the city, to consider the subject of temperance instruction in the schools.

After a handsome collation the secretary and ex-president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. T. E. Cole, reviewed briefly the work of the union, and spoke of the present plan of offering prizes in the high and grammar schools.

Mrs. Cole was followed by Mrs. Chamberlin, superintendent of Juvenile work.

A few practical suggestions were then made by the president, Mrs. Lund, to the teachers.

In response, Supt. Wheeler and Principal Landen thanked the ladies of the union for their courtesy, and expressed their hearty approval of, and interest in their work, and their willingness to co-operate with them.

Not only was a pleasant evening spent, but a fresh impetus given to the work.

Mrs. M. A. Munroe,
State Supt. Press Dept.

CIRCULAR.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Burlington, offers the sum of fifty dollars ($50) in the high and grammar schools of the city, for the best essays on "The evil effects of stimulants and narcotics," to be awarded according to the following plan:

1st. For the A department in the high school, the prize offered is ten dollars ($10); for the B department eight dollars ($8); for the C department seven dollars ($7) and for the D department six dollars ($6). In the grammar school, the prize offered in the A department is six dollars ($6); in the B department five dollars ($5) and in the C department four dollars ($4) in each division.

2d. Teachers, parents and friends are requested to furnish all the facts possible, and to suggest sources from which the pupils may derive information. This instruction must be given before March 7, 1884, and may form a part of the language instruction or composition lessons, and the essays be credited as a part of the monthly work.

3d. Teachers and parents are encouraged to have the pupils write the essays in full, twice, previous to the day of final writing, and to correct them; the pupils assisting, if desired, in the work of correction. This is requested, in order that the pupil may have an opportunity for properly arranging and expressing facts and ideas upon the subject, and for improving the manner of expression, through the suggestions of the teacher.

4th. The essays must all be written under the supervision of the class teacher on March 7, 1884. No instruction on the subject is to be given on that day, and no pupil is to have in possession any previously written essay, notes or copy, or to receive any assistance from any source whatever. No manuscript, when handed to the teacher, shall in any way be changed or corrected, nor shall it exceed four pages of foolscap paper, or contain less than one such page of written matter.

5th. During the week following March 7, all essays must be read in the hearing of the class, and the pupils, may by vote, or otherwise assist the teachers, to determine the best essays—not exceeding one in ten—and those selected are to be marked as worthy of especial notice. Those will be deemed best which contain most information regarding the evil effects of intoxicating liquors, opium and tobacco upon the brain system. All manuscripts must be sent to the office of the city superintendent on March 14, and each one must be designated by number, grade, teacher and school, omitting the name of the pupil.

6th. All competing essays shall be the property of the union and may be published if the union so elect.

7th. As far as possible, the union will assist each teacher, if desired, in obtaining information upon the subjects.

8th. The following schedule of topics, is recommended: 1. Brief historical sketch of each evil; 2. How do these evils affect the wealth of individuals and of nations? 3. How are they enemies to health and cleanliness? 4. How do they affect the intellect? 5. How are they related to crime? 6. How do they affect home life? 7. What are the medicinal effects of alcohol? 8. Illustrate the above as much as possible, by facts from history and observation; 9. Compare the evil effects upon the human organism of tobacco, opium and alcohol.

Burlington, Vermont, Jan. 1, 1884.

East Alburgh.—If you will please allow space in your columns, I will endeavor to describe a plan which originated in the mind of a young lady inmate of my home, regarding fans. She proposes that a quantity of fans be manufactured ready for utilization as the season opens, of good proportion (similar to those seen in traveling) one side to be used for temperance mottos etc., the other to be sold so much per square, quarter or half, to large business firms as an advertising medium. In this way our work will be financially aided, temperance literature circulated and business men, through the fans being placed in railroad depots, hotels and every public place available, will promote their interests. Webster defines the fan as "an instrument used by ladies to agitate the air and cool the face in warm weather." Doubtless this is the mission of the dainty little fan presented to Miss Willard, at the W. C. T. U. convention by the Swanton Y. W. C. T. U. Another definition is "to raise the fire or flame." I am of the opinion our temperance fan will accomplish much, not only by cooling the ladies' faces but also by so agitating the air that the temperance flame will be fanned and the fire already kindled, will grow brighter and brighter.

MISSOURI

REPORT OF THE POLICE MATRON COMMITTEE W. C. T. U.

St. Louis.—Your committee at the last monthly meeting had seen Mr. Caruth and Dr. Lutz in regard to the appointment of a police matron at the Four Courts and found both of these commissioners favorable to such an appointment. Since then the office of police matron has been created at the Four Courts, and the matter put in vice president's, Dr. Lutz's hands, with power to act. He has allowed us to nominate Mrs. Louisa Harris, and has appointed her at a salary of $40 per month. The union has further guaranteed her a salary of $10 a month additional. A large, cheerful, well-heated room in the northwest corner of the third story of the Four Courts has been vacated for her use, and she can enter upon her duties the moment the room is furnished by our union. A part of the furniture has been secured, and any one desiring to help furnish it can inquire and send articles or contributions to Mrs. Alice Peterson.

The union also sent three of its members to Chicago, two from the police matron committee and Mrs. Harris, our future matron, in order to investigate the workings of the system there.

We went directly to the Harrison street police station at 8 a. m. Saturday, Jan. 12, and received a cordial welcome from all the officers at the station, who furthered our mission in every way. We found Mrs. Littell to be worthy, if not exceeding, all the commendations previously heard. She is a large, motherly-looking lady, with beautiful silver-gray hair, and simplicity of dress—one to whom women and children in distress would instinctively cling, and at the same time of great penetration and prudence.

She took us down to the calaboose, where were two women. One brought in for being drunk upon the streets, who put together a plausible story which did not, however, deceive Mrs. Littell. The other, a young girl and rather pretty, brought in on a charge of larceny, who seemed not to be the guilty party, but abandoned by her companions to bear the charge. Her eyes were red with weeping, and while she did not at first seem to wish to open her heart, yet after awhile the matron's kindness won upon her and she said she would be glad to leave her life of shame. We went into court and saw all the officials, who bore witness in their words, as well as by the sincere respect of their demeanor, the high regard in which Mrs. Littell is held. We felt it as a deserved tribute to sweet, womanly, Christian character, that it could so win its way, and retain what it has gained among all grades of officials, who necessarily are built of sterner stuff in order to execute their duties, and from association with criminals are supposed themselves to become hardened. Everything was clean, orderly and quiet at the station. Unconsciously to themselves, I believe Mrs. Littell has affected the whole atmosphere and every individual there. I trust in the good providence of God, and with the help of your prayers, our dear Mrs. Harris may be enabled to so walk in the difficult path opened before her as to have a like gracious influence, for we have seen with our eyes that one showing forth the fruits of the Spirit is "approved of men" even in the most difficult position.

Mrs. Harris spent Saturday, Sunday and Monday with

Mrs. Littell, saw her search several women under arrest, and received careful instructions as to every emergency likely to arise. The whole committee spent three-fourths of one night at the station.

Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Harris also called upon the chief of police and were cordially received by him, having letters to him from Dr. Lutz. Our mission was favorably noticed in the Chicago Tribune also. We found that there were no written regulations for the police matron, who has quite a wide field of usefulness—taking charge of the women, restoring young girls to their parents, caring for young and abandoned children and recommending the judge to send different ones, for whom there seems to be some hope of reformation, to the Erring Woman's Refuge, the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, the Washingtonian Home or the Rehobeth. Some of these institutions are supported partly by funds from the city, and fines, etc., and also have managing boards among the benevolent, and drinking and erring women may be brought back and saved.

Your committee calls attention to the fact that the work house seems to be the only place provided in St. Louis for every unfortunate who has just taken the first step downward, and also for the wretch grown old in crime and shame.

We were the recipients of much kind treatment from the Chicago Union, who met us promptly, accompanied us, took us to their headquarters, the president, Mrs. Tillie B. Carse, entertaining us at her home, and providing for our expenses farther than we were willing to accept their most cordial hospitality.

Our own police commissioners have furthered our object in every way, and we present our thanks to them, and to the Chicago officials for all their cordial kindness.

MOUNT VERNON.—A series of successful temperance meetings conducted by J. C. Holt, of Illinois, have just closed. Two hundred and seven are enrolled in the C. T. U. A W. C. T. U. has also been organized which has at present a membership of forty with the following officers: Mrs. Jane Waters, president; Mrs. Sallie Penden, corresponding secretary. S. A. PENDEN.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

FLEMINGTON is all ablaze with temperance fire. The reformed club have hired a hall, seated, matted and provided it with stove etc., and lett the adornments to the W. C. T. U. They propose to make it a veritable temperance home. Attractive to boys as well as men, and with their pictures, mottoes, brackets, an organ blooming flowers, and a sweet singing canary, it is the finest room of the kind in the state outside of Millville. Its first service was held January 13, Sabbath, and before the hour for service the place was too strait, although it will seat three hundred. Many were unable to reach even the door. Revs. Mott, Chapel and Rooney addressed the crowd, and Mrs. J. T. Ellis uttered her thanksgiving speech. The choir of male voices, members of the club, rendered very fine music. The one thousand who signed the pledge under English and Mabee's organization are right loyal to it; thus far not one has violated it so far as we can learn. New recruits are coming into the ranks of this red ribbon army. The local board have consented to have scientific temperance taught in our academy, and the text books will soon be placed in the hands of the teachers.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him who heals the drunkard's woe,
Praise Him who leads the temperance host,
Praise Father Son and Holy Ghost.

LEGISLATIVE WORK.—The W. C. T. unions of this state are trying to roll a large prohibition petition into the legislative hall, under the special care of D. V. Chattle, who will act for us in the matter. A petition is also being circulated, asking the legislature not to grant our prayer. Our state president is planning aggressive work in new territory and calls all the W. C. T. U's. to arms.

WOODSTOWN has been favored by a series of temperance meetings, commencing in the Friends meeting house, and continuing in the various churches of the town, conducted by E. T. Scott.

BELLEVILLE.—The ladies of the Newark W. C. T. unions have been assisting Rev. D. V. Larew in a series of temperance meetings, with good success.

ORANGE W. C. T. U. held an interesting meeting with promise of active services during the new year.

HUDSON COUNTY prohibitionists are wide awake, preparing for the spring elections.

MONTANA TERRITORY.

A recent effort of the Dillon W. C. T. U. is most graphically described in the following personal letter:

"I've just a moment in which to tell you about our W. C. T. U. In fear and trembling we four worked up a public meeting. We trained the Band of Hope to sing and march and recite the pledge in concert. A task it was, for these western juveniles are as wild as the colts, and as smart and pretty accordingly. We secured a quartette to render the vocal music and two of our young friends to give us a flute and organ duett. I was sure our little church would not hold the audience and carried my point, thereby rather intimidating my less ambitious sisters.

The gentlemen of the Dillon Tribune kindly circulated handbills announcing our "Concert." After helping arrange the seats and tables we hurried home to get a cup of tea, and dress for the evening feeling nervous, anxious and tired, wishing for and yet dreading the result as prisoners awaiting a verdict.

The audience came, however, and when we reached the hall we found every seat taken and boxes and boards also doing duty, while people standing, vainly wishing for some extra chairs, thought the "show" would never begin. We opened with an organ solo, followed without any pause by "Jesus, lover of my soal," in which the people joined. The Rev. Mr. Riggin led in prayer, and after another hymn, I read my address. For a wonder I was not frightened at all. At the close I made my plea for the reading room, and slips of paper for contributions were passed.

Mrs. Wagoner gave a sketch of the rise and progress of the W. C. T. U. and Mrs. Wickum read an original poem.

The Band of Hope carried their bright banners "Our Home" and "Our Country," wore their badges triumphantly and kept time and step.

Some of the best of them rendered their recitations in a charming manner. Mrs. Katie K. made a thrilling address to the young men, and afterward, while the choir sang "My Wandering Boy," the contributions and cards were collected and the results counted. Imagine my surprise when the whole proved to be $95, $32 of which was cash. I could hardly recover myself enough to properly thank the audience, but their enthusiasm supplied my deficiency, and they gave me a little storm of applause. A Baptist minister present delighted the children and instructed the older people with a series of stereopticon views, illustrating the downward course of the drunkard, and the various conditions of the stomach under the influence of strong drink.

Our meeting closed with a brief speech by Mrs. Riggin, followed by "Coronation," in which all united.

Such was the first public meeting held by the W. C. T. U. in Montana and we are as happy and proud as we were fearful and despondent. We have learned that the people went expecting to see a juvenile show of some sort, and partly because there was nothing else "going on" in town, all grades and classes were represented, and saloon keepers saw their children wear the colors and take the pledge. All were quiet and respectful to the last, and the meeting was pronounced the most interesting entertainment of the season.

We are all beginners, remember, and were surprised by the fact that it didn't hurt us to face a large audience. You see we are so filled with the importance of our object that we didn't think much of what everybody thought of us.

We are going to try to have that reading room opened soon.

DAKOTA.

YANKTON.—There was assembled at the Yankton Methodist church a large audience to listen to the exercises in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the woman's temperance crusade.

Mrs. E. J. Coggins, president of the W. C. T. U. for Dakota, presided over the gathering. The meeting was opened with singing by the Methodist choir. Rev. J. G. Travis read the crusade hymn. Rev. R. H. Dolliver offered prayer. C. S. Palmer occupied a half hour in telling the audience about the temperance work in which he had been engaged in Vermont and in commending the efforts of the ladies who were engaged in furthering the cause of temperance. Professor Bartlett spoke briefly, but to the point, and would have said more but for sickness which had almost prevented him from attending. "The Drinking House over the Way," from the Memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL was most excellently rendered by Mrs. H. M. Buchanan. Mrs. E. J. Coggins gave a sketch of her connection with temperance work and the union, which was full of interest. She earnestly advocated the objects of the cause and gave the audience a very interesting discourse.

The meeting closed by singing the temperance doxology and it was mentally voted that the tenth anniversary of the crusaders had been faithfully observed in Yankton. Thank offering to the National $5.

DAKOTA NOTES.

Plankinton has a flourishing Band of Hope.

A Band of Hope has been recently organized in Vermillion.

Mrs. Dr. Brown, of Huron, a woman of ability, culture and refinement, is president of the W. C. T. U. of that place.

A W. C. T. U. has been organized at Milbank, the best ladies of town taking hold of the work with vigor and earnestness.

There is a prospect of securing Marion D. Baxter for a period of two or three weeks, to help in the temperance work in southern Dakota.

Pierre has no woman's temperance organization, but there is a prospect of a coffee and reading room being opened in charge of the ladies.

Mrs. S. T. Anderson, secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, and a popular and talented woman, spoke in Wanpeton last Sunday morning and evening.

The Redfield temperance people have decided to test the liability of saloon keepers who are selling liquor in Redfield without a county license, notwithstanding they have been licensed to carry on this traffic by the city.

The union at Scotland is the first one organized by the new territorial president, Mrs. E. J. Coggins of Yankton, and much interest is shown in the temperance work at that place. Mrs. T. O. Bogert is president of the union. The crusade anniversary was observed by at least twelve unions in this newly organized territory, and a collection sent from each to the National treasury.

OHIO.

CINCINNATI.—The W. C. T. U. sustains finely worked-up meetings in Smith & Nixon's hall each Sunday afternoon. At the meeting of January 27 the Rev. Geo. W. Henning, one of the leaders in the Kansas campaign, was introduced and said:

It is conceded to be our privilege and duty to save our fellow men from a ruined state, to lift them out of the gutter and out of moral degradation. It is the duty of physicians to cure men diseased. It is their duty also, and a more noble work, to save men from disease by precautionary measures. It is not considered an infringement of personal liberties of citizens that the health board require drainage, fumigating and whitewashing when epidemics threaten. But there are people who raise their hands in holy horror when we propose to save our men from drunkenness by prophylactic legislation, and when we propose to purify the moral atmosphere by abating saloons and places which breed moral malaria, they cry that personal liberty is being outraged.

We raise no high question about meats and drinks, we propose no sumptuary legislation; we raise only a question of state privilege. In a government for the people, the highest interests of the people, their protection, their happiness, their prosperity must be conserved. In a government by the people, the conditions of good citizenship, intelligence, integrity, sobriety, are vital. Where manhood suffrage prevails and every man is a factor in government, there arises the greatest danger from the impairment of qualification. The vast influx of population from European countries is of such a character as to excite the serious concern of every thoughtful man. It is not from the best classes, but largely from the worst; and the worst feature of it is that it is bringing in the drunkenness of Europe. We tremble for this government in the immediate future unless some check can be put to the spread of this demoralizing contagion. The most effective check practicable will be found in the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of the beverages which demoralize men. Insure to the children of these immigrants an opportunity to develop into good citizens, under favorable circumstances.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette recently proved that 80 per cent. of the crimes in this city is traceable to drink. Observe the accounts of murder and other crimes, and you will see that the locality is that of saloons, and the haunts of drinking men and women, in most instances. Against this crime-breeding nuisance we petition the legislature to let us vote. We petition for the abatement of a growing burden of taxation, of ignorance, of poverty and of crime, all of which is growing under and by reason of the protected traffic in drink.

We seek to effect a revolution in the interest of good government, of righteouness, of home education, of peace. We seek it by legitimate means. Edmund Burke says that "When bad men conspire good men must combine." We are combining. We seek it by agitation through the press, and on the platform, by meetings and petitions.

That prohibition is in politics is not our fault—it has been forced there by the liquor men themselves. They have resolved in solemn conclave that they will not support any man or party that favor prohibition; they have constituted themselves a third party, and put the liquor traffic above all questions of policy or principle that may arise in government. Moreover, they boldly defy law. They propose, with an enormous fund in their treasury, to corrupt courts, bribe jurors and suborn witnesses. The sum of it is that less than two hundred thousand men, whose business is wasting and destructive, are defying fifty millions of people.

It is objected that the prohibition of the liquor traffic will impair our revenues. Mr. Gladstone says that in such cases, where great reforms are in issue, no question of revenue should be considered; but the fact is easily demonstrated that the traffic entai s a real and immense loss upon the government. Chief Justice Grier said that it is not only constitutional to prohibit it, but the people would find themselves gainers an hundred fold in every element of happiness and prosperity.

It is objected that our proposition is utopian—that we can't succeed; but every day is bringing us toward its realization. There is a Chinese legend that one of the gods, I-Ti, planted a vineyard and made some choice wine from its fruit. He offered it to the wisest statesman to drink, who tasted it and pronounced it very good, but said it would bewitch the heads and seduce the hearts of the people, and pouring the remainder on the ground, begged I-Ti to make no more. Thereupon it rained gold upon the earth for three days, and great prosperity prevailed. So will it be in our own country when we shall pour out the last of the beverage that seduces and bewitches only to destroy. So we believe and so we pray, and we do not see how any reasonable man can object to our present prayer, which is simply that the legislature shall again submit to discussion and vote a proposition to amend the state constitution so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, the prolific cause of losses to the state and of dangers to every interest of society.

The president announced that this was the last service that would be held in the hall, owing to changes soon to be made in the building. On next Sunday and thereafter they would meet in College Hall. The same order of exercises would be observed there as in the hall they were about to leave. The musical program, which had always been a prominent feature in these meetings, would be continued, and made even more attractive.

Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown and other prominent speakers are to address the meeting next Sunday, which will be a review of the past and future work of the union.

The Ohio W. C. T. U. are circulating petitions praying the present legislature to resubmit the prohibitory amendment at the election in October, 1885. These petitions were circulated at the close of the meeting, and received a large number of signers. It is proposed to have the city thoroughly canvassed, and every county in the state.

WYOMING TERRITORY.

CHEYENNE.—At a recent meeting of the W. C. T. U. sixteen new members were received, who promise to be active workers against the existing evil. It was decided to have ex-Gov. St. John, the great temperance advocate, lecture here on February 12, and subscriptions are already being taken to pay his expenses.

The old Red Cross temperance society is, as we are informed, about to be re-organized for work again in the temperance battle. This old organization has had many ups and downs, and yet it still preserves some elements of vitality, and it is now the intention, no doubt, to get in shape to take part in the campaign in temperance reform which they tell us is near at hand.

GEORGIA.

SECOND ANNUAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The second convention of the Georgia W. C. T. U. was held in Augusta January 24 and 25. Great was the disappointment at the non-arrival of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and Mrs. Dickinson. Even Mrs. Chapin failed us; until, Blucher like, she came in near the last, having been unexpectedly detained in Alabama whither she had gone to attend the state temperance convention. South Carolina sent several visiting delegates, among whom was Mrs. Gill, of Allendale, who proved to be a host in her own sweet, gentle self, aiding us in the deliberations of the convention, and charming all at the public meetings with her earnest words and clear, musical enunciation.

The sessions of the convention were held at the lecture room of the Presbyterian church, so the executive committee, who met the day previous, decided to attend Wednesday evening prayer service at that place, in preference to going to their respective denominations. The pastor, Rev. Wm. J. Adams, discoursed from the words, "They that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard." From this precious text Mr. Adams argued that all things pertaining to the good of mankind, and the spread of the gospel, were legitimate subjects of Christian conversation, and if so, then the women who were to meet at that place on the morrow were engaged in legitimate Christian effort. After a review of the temperance movement in America and Great Britain, this Christian gentleman and scholar invited his congregation to attend our deliberations, and then in an earnest prayer commended us to God's blessing and guidance.

Mrs. Sibley presided with ease and sweet womanly grace, and the work of the convention went smoothly on. The reports from the various local unions, and from fraternal delegates, showed that all quarters of the state share alike in enthusiasm for the cause, whose workings in Georgia are more a simultaneous than a concerted movement.

Since the first convention some department work has been done. An encouraging report of juvenile work was made by Mrs. Richard Webb, who is untiring in her efforts to promote the interests of this department. Mrs. J. C. Keyes, superintendent of scientific instruction, submitted a report showing the introduction of Miss Colman's series into several schools and Bands of Hope. This clear-headed lady also read at one of the evening meetings an able and beautiful paper on the principles and need of temperance instruction. A thrilling account of prison and jail work was given by our devoted and efficient superintendent of that department, Mrs. E. E. Harper. Her report was also read at one of the public meetings.

Mrs. Sibley told us cheering things about influencing the press, and Mrs. Grigsby Thomas stated that she had entered upon the department of Sunday school work. For this dear young worker I predict success. Mrs. Underwood had furnished some important relative statistics, and these were incorporated in the corresponding secretary's report. Conference with influential bodies has no special superintendent, but the state superintendent and secretary voluntarily undertook the work, and the result has been the bringing of our claims before the state Sunday school association, and both branches of Methodism.

The Augusta ministers of various denominations attended not only the public meetings, but the sessions of the convention, aiding us by words of cheer and counsel. The public meetings were held at the Christian church, and presided over by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Lucas, who is in hearty sympathy with us. The addresses of welcome in behalf of the citizens by Mr. C. Z. McCord, in behalf of the clergy by Rev. Wm. J. Adams, and in behalf of the W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Sibley, were all well received, as was the extempore response by Mr. Thrower, of the Good Templars. A letter of greeting to the convention from Miss Willard, was deemed too good to be withheld from the public and was listened to with much interest.

On the second evening Mrs. Chapin came in time to follow the papers referred to the secretary's report, and Mrs. Witter's remarks, by one of her enthusiastic addresses. She remained over in Augusta, speaking to the colored people on Sunday afternoon, and to a packed house on Monday night.

The next annual meeting will be held in Columbus in May, 1885.

The following is the report of the committee on principles, plans and resolutions:

We, the members of the W. C. T. U. of Georgia, assembled in our state convention, invoking the guidance of our Heavenly Father, and relying solely on His strength, do adopt the following principles, plans and resolutions:

Principles.—We believe in prohibition by law, and total abstinence in practice, but recognizing the frailty and weakness of our human nature, we only hope to accomplish these by God's sustaining and guiding grace, relying upon prayer, study of the sacred Scriptures, and earnest Christian effort.

Plans.—1. Preventive, including heredity, showing the close relation of natal inheritance to the terrible appetite for liquor; hygiene, teaching in addition to and explanatory of divine law, the rules of health, as formulated by medical science, which inculcate the great importance of temperate habits.

2. Educational, which embraces scientific instruction, temperance literature, influencing the press, relative statistics, conference with ecclesiastical, Sunday school, educational, and other associations, juvenile work, including Bands of Hope, training and industrial schools.

3. Evangelistic, which embraces prison and jail work among railroad employes, securing the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's table, securing day of prayer in week of prayer, Bible readings, and work among the colored people.

4. Social. Young women's temperance work, parlor meetings, flower mission, and state and county fairs.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, We do honestly believe that the legalized manufacture and sale of intoxicants is an inexpressible evil and a national shame.

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of Georgia do earnestly appeal to all Christians to aid us in our efforts, by legislative enactment and otherwise, to banish the accursed thing from our state and nation.

2. That we do invoke the aid of all temperance organizations in petitioning our legislature for prohibitory laws, and that we never cease our labors until Georgia is a prohibition state.

3. That we petition the officers of state and county fairs to discourage the manufacture of intoxicants by offering no premiums for wines and liquors.

4. That as intemperance is recognized as the greatest obstacle to the progress of the gospel, and the coming of the Lord's kingdom, we earnestly entreat all Christian ministers to bring this subject often to the attention of their congregations, and invite their personal influence in all laudable efforts to banish this great evil of intemperance.

5. That as early impressions are the most lasting, and as it is easier as well as wiser to form than to reform, we ask the co-operation of all those who have the care or training of children to aid us in teaching the dear little ones, the lambs of the flock, the advantages physical, mental and spiritual of temperance, and the inevitable moral and physical results of intemperate habits.

6. That recognizing the great power of the press, and the essential importance of temperance papers, we most heartily recommend to the members of the W. C. T. U., and the public at large, our national organ, The Union Signal, published in Chicago, Illinois, and the People's Advocate, published in Atlanta, Georgia.

Also the following, unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of Georgia, in convention assembled, tender to Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, superintendent of Southern Work, our warmest love and appreciation, and that we hereby invite her to visit Georgia this spring, remaining at least six weeks with us in the interests of our temperance work.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Wm. C. Sibley, of Augusta; vice president, Mrs. Mary Shropshire, of Rome; recording secretary, Miss Emmie S. ## ILLINOIS.

COUNTY FAIRS CIRCULAR.

To District and County Presidents of Illinois:

Dear Sisters:—Last year I addressed private letters to most of you upon the subject of county fair work in which I requested you to try certain suggested plans and report to me. I regret to say that I received but few responses and absolutely no reports, so that at Alton I appeared with empty hands.

This year our work is beautifully planned by our national superintendent. I had intended to prepare circulars, but hers are so perfectly adapted to our needs that I have procured from her a supply which I this week send out to every district. The county fair work includes soldiers' reunions, old settlers and pioneer picnics, and other similar gatherings. The year 1884 will give us additional opportunities in the shape of campaign meetings and all sorts of political gatherings. See what a broad field we have hitherto neglected or have at least worked in a very unorganized way. Dining halls, lunch, coffee, and tea stands, booths where flowers may be sold, temperance literature distributed, and temperance workers be ready to beguile the tired and tempted from other and dangerous places of refreshment—all these opportunities and many more are ours it we make the effort. To do this we must organize. Each district president should appoint a helper in every county who shall place herself in correspondence with the state superintendent and keep her informed as to her own field, take the lead in the work and secure such help as she needs. All this and much more is detailed in our circular to which I earnestly call your attention, and ask you to respond. This is new work in our state, but I am convinced you will find it pleasant and profitable.

Yours truly,

E. A. Matthews, Supt. County Fair Work.

Galesburg.—Several of the temperance organization have for a few weeks past been circulating a petition to the city council, asking that the question of license or no license be submitted to a vote of the people at the coming election, independent of party or politics.

Mrs. Lucy Simpson, of Detroit, who is lecturing here to interested audiences, has also aided in the circulation of the petition and in other good work as well.

Our W. C. T. U. has tried the experiment of holding parlor meetings from time to time and has found it quite a success.

At a recent meeting a few members of the Girls' Temperance Union, which, together with the Boys' Club, is doing good service, met with us. Our program consisted of singing, a Scripture lesson from Ezekiel, 26th chapter, (with remarks in which Jerusalem and Tyrus were likened respectively to the forces of temperance and intemperance), prayer, a paper on hygiene, a vocal solo and a reading by members of the G. T. U., an original poem, a recitation, and reports of some branches of the work.

We observed the 8th of January by an afternoon meeting, making use of the program suggested by the National Society, taking under consideration, among other passages, the following: Joel 2: 12-14; Prov. 28: 13; Amos 5: 14-24; Isa. 30: 18-21; and a part of Isa. 33.

L. F.

Belvidere.—Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, has been laboring here over four weeks, and her efforts have been rewarded by an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, such as we have not witnessed for many years.

A great many who have heretofore seemed beyond the reach of such influences have been drawn into the meetings and signed the pledge.

A reform club has been organized, numbering at present about seventy-five, nearly all of whom acknowledge their own weakness and inability to stand in their own strength, and are trusting only in Him who alone is able to keep them from falling.

The good work still goes on, and we hope that many more may be rescued. We feel that as a union we have need of great wisdom, and pray that He who has thus opened a way for us to work, will guide us in the labor we have undertaken.

S. E. Foote, Cor. Sec.

The Emma Bond Fund of the Illinois W. C. T. U. is reported as follows by the treasurer, Mrs. T. B. Carse: Mrs. H. R. Smith, $1; Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, $1; Mrs. T. B. Carse, $1; Mrs. M. B. Willard, $1; Mrs. M. George, 50c.; Mrs. S. Dickerman, $1; Mrs. S. Shepard, $1; Mrs. E. P. Vail, $1; Mrs. W. E. Kelley, $1; Mrs. A. P. Kelley, $2; Miss F. E. Willard. $1; Miss —— Spear, $1; Miss F. C. Skinner, $1; a friend, 25c; Mrs. J. O. Wilson, $1; Mrs. L. A. Hagans, $1; Mrs. C. Goodman, $1; a friend, at Michigan City, Indiana, $2.

A popular lecture upon "Great Blunders" was given by the Rev. Wm. Faucett, on Tuesday evening, February 12, for the benefit of the North Side (Chicago) W. C. T. U, at their new rooms, 721 Larrabee street, to raise funds to carry on the work of the union.

The W. C. T. U. of St. Louis is presided over by Mrs. Gov. Thomas C. Fletcher—a modest, elegant lady, whose dignity of ruling has made her hosts of friends. Her husband having been governor of Missouri does not prevent her working for the ennobling cause of temperance and right.

The labors of Messrs. Holt, Critchfield and Woodford in Lamar, Sarcoxie, Webb City, Carterville and Joplin, Mo., are bearing much fruit. The meetings are large and enthusiastic, and hundreds have signed the total abstinence pledge. Over eight hundred have been enrolled in Joplin alone.

CHICAGO Inter Ocean: The statistics of Edwards county, Illinois, should be a weapon of defense with the temperance reformers. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.

The Harpooner's Story.

New Bedford, June 1, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for Scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of his, and so send you the facts.

Respectfully yours, RALPH Y. WINGATE.

The Trooper's Experience.

Masven, Basutoland (S. Africa,) March 7, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those sores for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.

Yours truly, T. K. BODEN,

THE MORAL INFLUENCE OF GOOD COOKING.

When wandering alone through Norway in 1856 I lost the track in crossing the Kyolen fjeld, struggled on for twenty-three hours without food or rest and arrived in sorry plight at Lom, a very wild region. After a few hours' rest I pushed on to a still wilder region and still rougher quarters and continued thus to the great Jostedal table-land, an unbroken glacier of five hundred square miles, then descended the Jostedal itself to its opening on the Sogne fjord—five days of extreme hardship, with no other food than flatbrod (very coarse oatcake), and bilberries gathered on the way, varied on one occasion with the luxury of two raw turnips. Then I reached a comparativly luxurious station (Ronnei), where ham and eggs and claret were obtainable. The first glass of claret produced an effect that alarmed me—a craving for more and for stronger drink that was almost irresistible. I finished a bottle of St. Julien, and nothing but a violent effort of will prevented me from then ordering brandy.

I attribute this to the exhaustion consequent upon the excessive work and insufficient unsavory food of the previous five days; have made many subsequent observations on the victims of alcohol, and have no doubt that overwork and scanty, tasteless food are the primary source of the craving for strong drink that so largely prevails with such deplorable results among the class that is the most exposed to such deprivation. I do not say that this is the only source of such depraved appetite. It may also be engendered by the opposite extreme of excessive luxurious pandering to general sensuality.

The practical inference suggested by this experience and these observations is that speech-making, pledge-signing, and blue-ribbon missions can only effect temporary results, unless supplemented by satisfying the natural appetite of hungry people by supplies of food that is not only nutritious, but savory and varied. Such food need be no more expensive than that which is commonly eaten by the poorest Englishmen, but it must be far better cooked.—W. Mattieu Williams, in Popular Science Monthly for December.

Standard Bearer (Concord, N. H.): In our own city some of our police officers are as regular at the bar as any saloon patron. If the mayor tells the truth when he says he would prosecute if he had evidence, he would have been prosecuting as soon as the oath of office had been administered to him. He would only need the testimony of his own appointed officers. This is the case in Concord, and it is also the case generally throughout the state. But we must not blame the officers too much; for they are servants not of the people, but of an institution that dares to be only a hypocrite; and this institution they faithfully serve.

IN the postmaster general's report, the number of women employed as clerks in the central establishments in London, Dublin and Edinburgh is 455; as telegraphists, counter-women, etc. throughout the Kingdom, 2,106; total 2,561. The report also records that for the first time a female medical officer, Miss Shore, has been appointed this year to take charge of this department.

AT a certain large dinner party, the illustrious American and foreign statesman, Mr. Colfax declined to take wine, whereupon a noted senator, who had already taken too much, exclaimed half jestingly across the table, "Colfax dares not drink." "You are right," was the answer, "I dare not." And a braver reply could not have been uttered.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE most recent public returns of quantities of malt and British spirits taken for consumption in the United Kingdom for ten years show that while there was a gradual increase in the quantity consumed per head of the population between 1870 and 1875–76, there has been a steady decline since then. According to the last published returns of the inland revenue department the number of barrels of beer retained for home consumption in the United Kingdom during the year ended 31st March, 1882, was 27,870,526. The considerable increase in the deliveries of spirits for consumption in the year 1881 was not sustained in 1882, as there was a falling off of 174,871 gallons, which is chiefly due to England. In Scotland there was an actual increase. A falling off in the consumption of beer is also noticeable. The inland revenue commissioners had "been informed by several eminent brewers in the metropolis that, notwithstanding the increase in population, a less amount of business had been done." This may be accounted for in several ways, but principally, let us hope, by the improved habits of the people. Temperance principles seem to be influencing certain classes of the population largely, the past year having been apparently one of unusual progress in this direction. This movement has been greatly encouraged and promoted by the erection of coffee taverns; and when it is stated that between 30 and 40 limited liability companies for carrying on coffee taverns had been formed in various places during the past year, and that 100 new establishments have been opened in the metropolis, it will be seen that the success of such enterprises must sensibly lessen the consumption of alcoholic drinks. The manufacture of temperance drinks, to judge from the number advertised, has also been exceedingly brisk. The chancellor of the exchequer, in dealing with the question of the beer duty in his last budget speech, after alluding to the above reasons for the falling off in the consumption of alcohol, stated that the augmented savings of the people, as shown by the deposits in the post office banks, was a clear indication that the diminution in the consumption of alcoholic drinks was also associated with the gradual extension of more saving habits among the people. A deficiency of revenue from these causes cannot therefore be a matter of regret.

KINGSTON, Canada, Jan. 22.—Mrs. Catherine Malone and her daughter, Mrs. Gray, had been on an extended spree together in this city, and the former died suddenly yesterday. When the undertaker was putting the body in the coffin he asked if she desired to have the corpse re-dressed. Mrs. Gray said: "No, chuck her in as she is." When the lid was screwed on she leaped upon the coffin and danced like a maniac, and only ceased her antics when a constable compelled her to do so. The daughter's spree is not finished yet.

Pilgrim's Progress.

A large edition of this intensely interesting and instructive book has been placed at our disposal by the publishers, and we are enabled to offer it to ou subscribers at a wonderfully low price.

The author's biographer, speaking of the circumstances under which this book was written, says:

Although cut off by his protracted confinement from all opportunity of public preaching, he was, in the overruling providence of God, more extensively useful than while in the enjoyment of unfettered liberty; for having during his leisure hours exerted the extraordinary talents with which he was endowed, he produced the PILGRIM'S PROGRESS —a work which has been more extensively circulated, and done more good in the world than any other book except the Bible alone."

The great popularity of this book is shown in the fact that it has been translated into every language on the continent of Europe.

It should be in every family. Parents can give no better instruction to their children than by laying before them a copy of this excellent book.

Sunday School and Band of Hope Teachers and Superintendents cannot do better than supply each scholar with a copy.

Board covers, 127 pages, printed on small but very clear and easily readable type on white paper.

Price, single copies, FIFTEEN CENTS, postpaid. In large quantities, $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE PENOGRAPH.—For more than thirty years inventive genius has industriously labored to produce a perfectly automatic fountain pen. Numerous devices, possessing various degrees of merit, have been patented and extensively sold; and most of them have worked splendidly till one or more of their delicate parts gave out and had to be repaired. But all defects hitherto encountered have been remedied in what is termed the Penograph. In the Penograph all small and complicated contrivances are dispensed with. Although the pen appears to be small it will write just as well as the largest. It is capable of producing the finest hair lines as well as heavy shaded strokes. The pen is of solid gold, first quality diamond pointed. With fair usage it will last a lifetime. The case is vulcanized rubber, handsomely finished. In our opinion the Penograph, as illustrated above, is well calculated to supercede all other writing pens and pencils in daily use. Its flow of ink is automatic and free, but never too profuse. It sheds ink when in use and stops when the pen ceases to move. It needs no wiping and no dipping for ink. It is carried in the pocket always ready for use on any kind of paper. It costs no more than is usually charged for a first class gold pen and holder without the fountain. It is fully warranted and may be returned if it fails to meet the expectations of any person who shall read the above. Price $3, postpaid. An extra pen will be given to any subscriber who shall send us $9 for a club of three Penographs. All postpaid.

We offer the above Penograph as a present to any one sending us four new subscribers at $1 75.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Our first leaflet bearing on the license question and suitable for circulation before elections, is now ready and on sale at this office. It was written by Prof. Geo. E. Foster and is entitled "Shall we license the Dram Shop?" It is one of his best.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson in Pall Mall Gazette, calls upon the government to make local option effective at the coming session of parliament. Twenty years of legislative discussion with a constantly increasing vote on the principle, ought to enable the cabinet to introduce the measure.

This is the significant and italicized heading of the editorial columns of the Washington Sentinel, the national organ of the beer brewers of America. Read, mark and inwardly digest its suggestive advice.

It is the holy duty of every man who loves his country, wants its liberties and free institutions preserved, and Puritanical despotism and tyranny destroyed, to see that all emigrants, or such that neglected to do so heretofore, take out the necessary papers in order to become naturalized. In every city, town and village there ought to be a standing committee for that purpose. If we want to succeed, we must do it at the ballot-box.

Canada has entered upon an agitational campaign that will stir the population from Cape Breton to Vancouver's Island. The Temperance Alliance is in the whole field and plans are maturing by which a simultaneous election under the Scott act will be held in all the counties and cities of the Dominion in which that act is not already in force, sometime in October next. It is also expected that parliament will come to a division during the present session on the prohibition question.

Akin to the work of the Cleveland Educational Bureau is the latest effort of the National Temperance League of England, to secure a hearing for temperance at the court of The People. Exeter Hall Saturday afternoon concerts, at a penny admission are now the popular attraction in London. A total abstinence tale by some notable lecturer or legislator is sandwiched in between bright inspiring music consisting of choruses, solos and orchestral numbers. There is no patent on the experiment. It might be repeated in every large city to good advantage.

The New York legislature is this year the battle ground of high license and prohibition. Two prohibitory amendments to the state constitution have been offered and are met by two high license bills. The time has past for the issue between high and low license. Even the traffickers in liquor see that and give over the tactics of other years. High license is now the political "dodge" to defeat the overcoming sentiment demanding prohibitory laws. It is a device simply, and the sorrow is, that so many really good men are captured by it. "Driven by the wind and tossed" might well be the legislative epitaph written on their political headstones.

The W. C. T. U. of Wyoming with a strong support of temperance citizens is working to secure a local option law, by which with the woman's ballot, already beneficent in that territory, local prohibition may be the rule in every city and incorporated town. The law has already been introduced in the territorial legislature by Judge Groesbeck. It provides that whenever two hundred citizens of a corporate city shall ask the board of county commissioners to hold an election they shall be entitled to such election, at which they may vote on the question of prohibiting the sale of liquors in the city. A large mass meeting was held in this interest by the W. C. T. U. of Cheyenne in which the ministers of all denominations participated.

Scientific temperance education is meeting with favor in many localities, another triumph having been scored in New York state. Mrs. M. H. Hunt, our National Superintendent of Scientific Instruction, has been speaking nearly every evening since October in the state. She has carried her audiences by both eloquence and logic to her conclusions. In every place where she has spoken enthusiastic assemblies have given a rising vote in favor of the bill providing for compulsory temperance instruction, and on the 7th of February this bill passed the upper house of the legislature. Iowa is petitioning a very willing legislature with very little fear of results. School superintendents and college faculties are largely represented on these petitions. Next year Illinois will enter upon the same work with good hope of success. Everywhere the thought of prevention is gaining ground and holding all it gains.

In strong and pitiful contrast to this humane policy think of a court sentencing a young man who has reputably committed crime under the influence of drink, to two years in the penitentiary, stating as a reason for so long a sentence, that the criminal will there have the opportunity denied elsewhere, of overcoming appetite under the prohibitory laws of prison discipline. The mad reasoning of state and court is this: Public opinion demands permission by the state of schools of vice and crime. Logical necessity demands prisons to shut up the criminals they graduate.

A better day is coming, however. As a "straw" indicative of the direction of "clear thought" take the action of the board of education in the city of Syracuse, N. Y., which recently resolved that in view of the marked increase of crime among the young, the superintendent of the schools of the city be authorized to correspond with boards of education and educational men in the state, in relation to the necessity for a more complete education, as pertaining to the duties of citizenship, and to inquire of them if some course of instruction in civil law and in moral and social training, such as temperance, honesty, integrity, virtue, reverence, etc., may not be required in the public schools of the state.

A few weeks ago, when the temperance forces of Topeka, Kansas, were fighting illegal liquor selling, prosecuting saloon keepers for violation of the prohibitory laws, one of the daily papers, which is most favorable to whisky selling, consequently most opposed to convictions in the cases, published in full Dr. Lewis' article adverse to prohibition, with favorable comments.

Dr. Lewis, we know, did not write out his arguments for any such use, but this perverted use of them may perhaps enlighten his eyes as to their real character. At any rate, the following incident may serve to show both himself and all who hold his opinions the immense practical value of enforced prohibition.

At a very recent meeting of the Reform Club, of Topeka, a reformed man who had stood unshaken in his total abstinence principles for ten years, made this confession: "I was in Topeka last week in attendance upon the G. A. R. meeting, and in an evil hour I forgot God. My old appetite for drink came upon me with such force that had I been able to find a place where liquor could have been gotten, I should have fallen. I would have given my right arm almost for a drink." Praise God that the saloons in Topeka are closed, and that this tried and tempted man was thus saved to himself and his family.

THE MARCH OF THE SIXTY THOUSAND.

BY ELZABETH T. LARKIN.

Not with a firm and measured step
Moves on the mighty host,
No well trained soldiers in the ranks
Does their grim leader boast;
Oh, no; they've drained the poison cup,
And in its depths have found
The adder's bite, the serpent's sting,
That gave the deadly wound.

Lured by the tempting cup, they drank,
To "seek it yet again;"
Quick to its work the poison sped,
And ran through every vein.
It quenched affection's tender flame
For those once loved so well,
And kindled in the heart instead
The very fires of hell:

Hurled reason from her royal throne,
God's glorious image marred;
Behold the wreck, no more a man,
Bleeding and torn and scarred.
Behold the soul! Oh! dreadful fate,
Well may the angels stand
Weeping at such a sight as this
In our beloved land.

A vanquished army, on they move,
With reeling steps and slow;
Stumbling into their yawning graves
They fall, to rot below.
O God! that such a thing should be,
And to our doors be brought,
And we look calmly on, and see
The work the fiend has wrought.

And we look calmly on, and hear
Throughout out stricken land,
The wail of Rachels comfortless,
A sad, heart-broken band.
"Why stand ye idle all the day"?
The call rings loud and clear;
"Thy brother's blood cries from the ground,"
Thou soon, alas! shalt hear.

Rouse, brother, sister, to the work!
Spring quickly to your post!
And hand to hand the conflict wage
Against the fiendish host;
Grim alcohol has long arrayed
Against the souls of men,
And in the strength of God, our trust,
We shall not fight in vain.

THE WINE QUESTION: A NEW PHASE.

BY NORMAN KERR, M. D., F. L. S.

The National Temperance Society of America having reprinted several works on the wine question, including my lecture to the Church Homiletical Society in the Chapter House of St. Paul's Cathedral, and my "Unfermented Wine: a Fact," a resolute onslaught has been made on the society for issuing books on this burning question. The assault has come mainly from Dr. Howard Crosby and other champions of drinking, and has for its aim the withdrawal of all publications on Scripture or communion wine. It is to be hoped that the shameless attempt will meet with the failure which it so richly merits; but the National Temperance Society took a false step, which may lead to serious disaster, when they fell into a trap cleverly laid for them by the enemy, and pledged themselves to strike out from all such publications all such passages and quotations as might be proved to be "atrocious falsehoods" or "twistings of Scripture." Who are to be the judges? The committee? What knowledge are they supposed to have of Hebrew, Greek, Sanskrit, organic chemistry, theology, etc.? An author stands or falls by the merits of his work. If that be genuine it will stand, if otherwise it will fall. All the committees on earth cannot alter the result.

Nothing loth to profit by this tactical error, the New York Independent brings forward a number of charges, all trumpery side issues even if well founded, against several books, and calls on the committee to redeem their most unwise pledge. Three of these charges are against my lecture, and the committee have asked me to reply. I shall never do so again. Life is too short for authors whose time is of any value to waste time and energy on either the slanders of the informed or the blunders of the ignorant. But, in pity to the committee, I shall this once, though overwhelmed with work, come to their rescue, trusting that they will speedily extricate themselves from their present false position. In exposing the falsity of the charges of the Independent, let me repeat that my lecture was delivered to a hostile audience of learned and critical theologians; that it was dedicated to the highest ecclesiastical authority in this country; that it has been read by nearly all the bishops and principal ecclesiastical dignitaries in the country; that it has been freely criticised; and that, beyond a few clerical errors and misprints, its accuracy stands unimpeached. I took great pains to indicate every authority so clearly that any one can verify every quotation, and I have from the first invited the closest scrutiny of every proposition and every statement. That, after the ordeal through which they have passed, the argument and the evidence adduced by me stand to this day unshaken, is the best proof of the reliability and accuracy of the work.

It ought to be remembered that the lecture was given to the scholarly members of a clerical society having no connection with temperance, and embodied the outcome of an original and independent inquiry, undertaken apart altogether from the total abstinence movement, as a matter of scholarship and research.

The Independent says: "The volume by Norman Kerr, M. D., entitled 'Wines, Scriptural and Ecclesiastical,' republished by the Society, maintains (p. 83) that the word 'drunken' in I. Cor. 11:21, should have been filled or sated, as with sweet drink; and asserts that Clement of Alexandria held this interpretation. Clement of Alexandria neither gave nor held such an interpretation."

It is not true that I interpret methuo in I. Cor. 11:21 as "filled or sated, as with sweet drink." What I stated ("Wines, Scriptural and Ecclesiastical," London, 1881, p. 106) is that it means "full," not necessarily of drink: or, as I render the passage—"one is hungry and another is quite full." Clement of Alexandria does take this view. After denouncing gluttony, and setting forth the sin of making a god of one's belly—which evil practice he describes as "in alimento intemperantia," "intemperance in food"—of these sensual gourmets he says: "Videre enim est eos qui sunt ejusmodi suibus vel canibus propter voracitatum assimiluri, potius quam hominibus." "For those who are of this fashion should, on account of their voracity, be ranked with swine or with dogs rather than with men;" Clement goes on to say: "Eos itaque qui in epulis mal se gerebant Apostolus increpans dicit 'Unusquisque enim propriam cœnam proœccupit in comedendo, etc." Again he says: "Apud eos autem . . . qui citra ullum pudorem comedunt, qui insatiabiles sunt seipsos dedecore efficient." "To those who so bore themselves badly at feasts the Apostle, chiding, says: "For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper," etc. "But with those . . . who eat without any shame, who are insatiable, they do that which is unseemly. (Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædagogus, lib. II. cap. I., about "How nourishment should be taken." Cap. II. treats of "How drink should be taken." Patres Caillau, Parisiis, 1812, tom. III., p. 298.)

The Independent.—"As a 'twisting of Scripture,' we may give Dr. Kerr's words (p. 71) 'In Deut. 32: 33, it (wine) is called 'the poison of dragons and the cruel venom of asps.' This exposition is plainly incorrect."

There is no twisting whatever of Scripture, but a plain straightforward statement of fact. Nor is there any attempt at exposition, or at basing an argument against drinking from this text. Treating of the word yayin, I adduce its use in this Scriptural passage simply to show one of many different applications of the Hebrew word. What I say is:—"In Deut. 32: 33, it (i. e., the original yayin) is called the "poison of dragons;" etc. A reference to a genuine Hebrew Bible and to the authorized version will attest my accuracy.

The Independent.—"Dr. Kerr says (p. 29) that the protropum of Pliny 'was mustum flowing from the untrodden cluster, from the pressure of the grapes upon each other,' and gives this the first place among 'Greek and Roman unintoxicating wines.' Pliny says of it that after allowing it to finish its fermentation ('defervere'), they ripened it ('torrent') in the sun forty days. This would seem less favorable than Columella's cool pond for producing Dr. Kerr's harmless grape juice. To represent it as unfermented is plainly incorrect."

Protropum is classed by me as an "unintoxicating wine," which it seems to me that it undoubtedly was. Pliny says nothing about it fermenting. The word "defervere" means to "cool down," the juice flowing warm from the grapes because these were gathered after having been exposed to the heat of the sun.

Even if vinous fermentation did take place, the resulting wine would be unintoxicating, because (1) there is only a very small proportion of gluten or albumen in the juice flowing spontaneously from the untrodden grape, so that in any circumstances (unless sugar were added) the amount of alcohol that could thereafter be developed would be inconsiderable.

(2). Then the racking (vinous fermentation not yet having begun) would still further reduce the amount of fermentable substance in the juice, and therefore still further lower the possible alcoholic strength.

(3). If any vinous fermentation took place at all, and a continuance of fermentation were possible, the exposure to the sun would in a few days induce the acetous fermentation. Thus the liquid long before the expiration of forty days would be vinegar, and therefore non-intoxicating.

But the probability is so very great as almost to amount to a certainty that protropum was unfermented as well as unintoxicating, because roasting in the sun for forty days would so thicken the juice (which by the process of racking had been shorn of a considerable proportion of the very slight amount of fermentable pabulum which it originally possessed) as to prevent it from fermenting. The directions given by Pliny for the manipulation of protropum are applicable to the preparation of an unfermented wine, but are totally inapplicable to the preparation of a fermented intoxicating wine.

I have not seen a copy of the Independent since I was in New York about twenty years ago, but if it now bears the character which it hen did, an ample apology, with a retraction of these three false charges, will speedily appear in its columns.

Since the above was written I have received the full text of Dr. Crosby's violent, unwarrantable, and unprovoked attack on the American society. As he accuses the society of publishing several "atrocious falsehoods," including the Nazarite falsehood, the Rechabite falsehood, the "atrocious falsehoods" here being according to Crosby, that the Nazarites are declared to be an example to godly persons in avoiding wine, and that the Rechabites are approved by God for abstaining from wine, intelligent Christians will at once see that any opinions opposed to the reverend doctor's opinions are, in his view, "atrocious falsehoods." If any member of the medical profession in England forgot himself so far as to employ such language to a colleague, he would speedily be "sent to Coventry." It is high time that so un-Christian, unjustifiable, and inexcusable an assault on so excellent and energetic a society should be publicly reprobated, and that so offensive a new departure in religious and temperance controversy should be indignantly repudiated by all honorable religious men. Though Dr. Crosby's "calling names" can injure only his own cause, it is none the less the duty of Christian people to show their disapproval of such improper language. I honor the American society for its consistent and noble career of public usefulness, and I sincerely trust that the committee, treating all such discourteous and scurrilous assaults with the silent contempt which these deserve, will persevere in their old and commendable practice of publishing honest and straightforward works on every aspect of the great temperance movement.—London Temperance Record.

KNEE DEEP.

BY MRS. J. F. WILLING.

We never weary of quoting that word of Neal Dow—"They had to snow Maine knee deep, with temperance literature, before prohibition would prohibit."

With a like Herculean task on hand, what are we doing? A few suggestions on that line may not be out of place.

1. Every temperance woman ought to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL.

It is our own paper, and we ought to keep it alive and in health and vigor. There is immense competition in the newspaper business. Every such enterprise, like every baby, has to run the gauntlet of diseases and dangers that threaten to carry it off. This one has entered the lists against the heaviest monied monopoly on the continent. It is the organ of the most effective corps of the temperance army—the Old Guard, that never surrenders—not a "thundering," but a "praying legion"—so it is a mark for the enemy's artillery. If we do not stand by our own paper, nobody will take care of it for us.

No temperance woman can afford to be without the paper. The currents of event in a great work are constantly changing, just as the channels of navigable rivers shift from this side of a rock or island to that. The pilot, who steers by knowledge of the course gained last year, may run his ship aground. The enemy changes base, and we must change our tactics. Every one who would keep step in the grand march must listen, as the word of command runs along the line. Saving the price of the paper, may cost the salvation of souls, through the blunder of somebody who did the best she knew, but who might have known better, if she had caught the signal from the head of the army.

Our editors, from their lookout perch, sweep the field with their glass, giving us new plans, new suggestions, new encouragement. We have the thinking bayonet in our ranks, but the bayonet must also read, or it will soon have nothing left to think about. There is a deal of talking to be done to stir up all the laggards and dullards. Unless our talking is wise and fresh, it will become as tiresome to this curious, Athenian people, as a twice-told tale. An empty mill grinds out nothing but noise. We must have the weekly grist of facts, to keep us going. Chickens, geese, cows, needles, paper rags—everything must be put under levy, if necessary, to bring into the house every week, the best thought from the best temperance pens,—to keep up one's own intelligence, and to interest the husband who votes, and the children who will presently, in the Great Question.

2. Every temperance woman who takes the paper must make the most of every number. She ought to read it as soon as she can—while the news is new—having its suggestions on hand for use the first practicable moment. It is cyclopedic, and she may find the solution of a problem that has been weakening her courage, and the sooner she has it the better.

Few will care to keep a file of the paper. In these busy days nobody ever finds time to go over a file of old papers. As they accumulate they are apt to become like a first wife's clothing, saved too long—not quite easy to give away and a little awkward to keep.

It may be well to read the paper, pencil in hand, making any item that hits square on the head a nail that somebody is feebly driving. Then let each number be placed in the right pair of hands, as soon as possible, accompanying it with a prayer that God will make it an inspiration to new zeal and courage.

3. If we can spare five dollars now and then—and we can by self denial—

"When a woman will, she will;
And you may depend on't"—

we can use it to advantage in temperance literature for gratuitious distribution. We had better give voluntarily the money that is the sinews of this war, rather than have it taken by the taxcolleetor to pay for the crimes caused by strong drink, or for damage done to us personally by the drunkenness of others. Let every temperance woman try the spending of five dollars, now and then, in the best tracts and picture papers bearing on this subject. There are at least 40,000 of our army who might save or solicit five dollars apiece for this work. $200,000 worth of these fresh, stirring little snowflakes every year, would go far toward snowing in the mighty engine of destruction that goes crashing through the land, crushing the bodies and souls of some who are our life's life.

It is always refreshing to see a lady come into a street car or railway coach with a bit of white ribbon tied in a button-hole. It would be more so if every one carried a parcel of leaflets and papers which she would offer, in the polite, amiable manner that marks a genuine temperance woman, to the people who have before them an hour of the enforced idleness of travel, and who are quite willing to while it away upon anything that is placed in their hands.

4. Every union ought to have a circulating library. Some little entertainment or solicitation would purchase a few books with which to make a beginning, and every new helpful book that comes out, or of which one of the ladies may hear, can be added afterward. A little locked cupboard in the room where the meetings are held, and one lady to act as librarian and see that the books are properly cared for and regularly exchanged—a small outfit, but there is no measuring the good that might be accomplished by such an instrument.

Chalmers said of the Methodists of his day, "They are all at, and always at it." Temperance women must be all at it, and always at it, if they are to make prohibition possible by snowing the land knee deep with temperance literature. Snow flakes melt upon the palm. Enough of them will dam up the mightiest tide of travel. Though an army of a hundred thousand were waiting, snow flakes could hold them in check. The snow flakes of thought that flutter white and glistening from clean hands and pure hearts, may turn back to its native perdition this desolating torrent of wickedness—this sum of all villainies.

A TALK WITH THE SALOON SUPPORTER.

BY E. N. ANDREWS.

One of the leading professors of chemistry in a leading medical college in this city, stated before his class in a recent lecture: "Alcohol is a poison just as much as anything else is a poison." Another prominent physician said to his class last week, "Lager beer contains twelve per cent of alcohol." He also said, "Men drink lager for the alcohol that is in it." You are asked now to put these three facts together and reflect a moment on what you are doing for yourself when you drink a glass of beer! But whatever this beer does for you or does not do, you are requested to think a moment of what you are doing for others every time you take a glass.

1. You are putting five cents into the pocket of the saloon keeper. Well, that is not so bad for him, and it may be that his family need the support you thus give them, if so, this is the only possible good that can come of such patronage at your hand; so it seems to those who have duly considered the matter.

But in the next place, let the supporter of the saloon man think a moment of what his beer drinking is doing for his own family. Suppose, while he is sitting there late at night in such company as the salcon draws together, we step inside the door of the place he calls home. In most cases, if there is a wife and children, they will show that they have been neglected, sadly neglected by the man who has sworn to protect and help them on in life. The shabby clothing, to begin with, speak of the fact that the money has gone for some other purpose than to make the devoted wife and the dear children comfortable and happy! Yes, it has gone down the throat of a man who is likely, utterly selfish and so beer-besotted that he cares for nothing except how he may again and again satisfy his own depraved or abnormal appetite. He is the only one in the household who has a chance to earn anything, and that amount, though perhaps small, mainly because of his drinking habit, he habitually appropriates to his own stomach's cravings. If this is not robbery, what is it?

Still further, that poor wife and mother once had some pride and ambition to occupy some position in respectable society, but now she is more and more inclined to keep out of sight. The neighbors well know every man who visits the saloons, and of course her husband is marked. The children hear from their playmates what the public opinion is about their father, and so they lose all respect for him, and begin to lose self-respect also. The father, in turn, feels like blaming wife and children or other relatives or friends because of his low down condition, and so there is misery, self-condemnation, and loss of self-respect and all interest in affairs that are of a public nature and look toward the well being and improvement of society.

The course is every moment downward and never upward from the very moment a man begins to drink beer or any other intoxicating drink. The difference between the beer drinker and the whisky drinker has been defined thus: The beer drinker kills himself, and the whisky drinker kills others. This however may be considered a distinction without a difference, for it has been observed that both are sure to bring wretchedness to their own families which ought to be the most precious on earth, and are such to every real man.

And this leads to the third charge: If we assert that saloons ought to be closed by public sentiment expressed in the form of law, a multitude, yes, even those who are slaves to their cups will cry out that sacred liberties are being encroached upon. But whether the saloons be closed or not; whether the dealer in the poison in various forms be punished or not, one thing is certain that the drinker of beer is the worst enemy of himself and family and well deserves the punishment that public sentiment is pretty sure to inflict, as well as that which he inflicts upon himself.

One thing more should be said of him who spends his money and his time at the saloon. He is thus sinning against his God as well as his own soul. He is destroying surely, by degrees, all moral sentiment. Love and virtue die out; self-respect, love of home gone, and heaven lost!

Is it surprising that we feel in duty bound to ask the saloon visitor to stop, stop just now, and turn his thought to a better life and to the great Physician who came to save even such men from the impending ruin.

A BIBLE READING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF HEREDITY.

BY BESSIE V. CUSHMAN, M. D.,
Supt. Dept. of Heredity in the W. C. T. U. of Missouri.

FOUNDATION TEXT.—Prov. 17: 6; Ps. 128: 1, 3, 6; Deut. 4: 40; Deut. 5: 29

The promise of blessing depends upon obedience: Gen. 22: 18. Life becomes fearfully solemn when we realize that our choice may influence the lives of all that shall follow us: Deut. 30: 19; Num. 14: 18.

It is significant that the promise of mercy is to a thousand generations, while the visitations of iniquity are limited to the third and fourth. If the third and fourth generation persist in the iniquity of their fathers, the fifth is usually wanting: Prov. 10: 25; Prov. 11: 19; Ps. 37: 22; Job 21: 17. "In the keeping of Thy commandments is life."—Is. 48: 18, 19. Sin leads to sickness. Early death and final extinction is the inevitable fate of "them that hate Him." God's method of dealing with men and the children of men is illustrated in I Kings 21: 25-29. Ahab, influenced by Elisha, repented, and so averted the destruction that threatened his house. But his sons, born before this experience in sackcloth, received the stamp of their father's wicked purposes, and their mother's idolatrous disposition, and "wrought evil in the sight of the Lord," so bringing upon themselves the ruin which their father escaped by heeding Elisha's timely warning. This was not the first time in the history of Israel that the children had borne the transgressions of the fathers: Num. 14: 33; Num. 32: 13.

David pleads in Ps. 79: 8, and the marginal reading is: "The judgments of the Lord are righteous": Jer. 32: 18; Prov. 13: 22; Ps. 112: 1, 2; Ps. 25: 13; Ps. 37: 18, 26, 28. His curse may be removed, but His mercy endureth forever: Ps. 103: 17, 18; Prov. 20: 7.

God and nature cry evermore to the sinner and the sick: "Turn unto me, and I will turn unto you": Deut. 30: 1-6; Jer. 3: 22; Jer. 12: 15.

Timothy furnishes an example of the inheritance of faith: II Timothy 1: 5; Let no soul feel crushed by a heritage of sin: Ez. 18: 19, 22; Luke 3: 8. This is the exponent of the law of heredity, as set forth in the New Testament, and it in no way conflicts with the law of heredity laid down in the Old Testament. Each is weak and incomplete without the other.

Correspondence.

THE "INNER HISTORY" VERIFIED.

Dear Union Signal:—Some one has forwarded me a copy of the Lever, containing an article by John B. Finch, in criticism of an editorial in The Union Signal of January 24, entitled, "A Bit of Inner History." Will you allow me space in your columns for a brief rejoinder?

Notwithstanding Mr. Finch declares that editorial to be "made up of misstatements," I unhesitatingly declare it to be a statement of facts. Nor does Mr. Finch's article, which is very adroitly written, really disprove any vital assertion of the editorial. He gives the same version, in different phraseology, of the inception of the movement for constitutional prohibition in Massachusetts as The Union Signal gave. The Massachusetts W. C. T. U. inaugurated it, raised the money, canvassed the state for signatures to petitions, held the meetings—in short, "took the laboring oar" all through the first year. For this reason, I insist that the resolution recognizing the equality of these women with their brothers, should have received respectful treatment.

Mr. Finch says the money subscribed was only $1,000, while The Union Signal stated the sum to be $1,200. I only secured the pledges of money, did not collect them, and was not treasurer. But the announcement was made at the Tremont Temple meeting at the close of the day that $1,200 had been pledged, and the papers so reported the next day. Nor has this before been contradicted. There is always a little shrinkage on money pledges made at an enthusiastic meeting, when the time of collection comes. Most of these pledges could have been collected had an effort been made. All concerned, were, however, too busy and over-worked to undertake it.

Mr. Finch states that "Gov. St. John, Mr. Bain and himself had been in the state a month, at work," before the second convention was called for the furtherance of constitutional prohibition, December 27. Yes, but they had been at work in a random way, under no organization, and under inefficient leadership. This was the aggrieved personal statement of two of these gentlemen in the rooms of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., who, indeed, had cause for dissatisfaction.

Early last fall, in personal conversation with some of the leaders of the constitutional prohibitory movement, I found an evident disinclination to renew the work of the previous year, a feeling that the state was not ready for it, and that much preliminary work must be done in the way of creating a public sentiment favorable to it. Nothing therefore was done by the organization until after Christmas. But when the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. held its annual meeting in October, they decided to go on alone with the work, since they had begun it, and had pledged themselves to continue it until it was accomplished. The petitions were immediately circulated, and the whole organization, of nearly 250 local unions, had been at work for six weeks, when the the convention of December 27 was held.

The second convention was a different one from the first. President Seelye of Amherst College presided at the first. Not a paper ridiculed the proceedings, but gave fair and dignified reports of the sessions, and of the overflow meetings held in the evening. If a woman suffrage resolution had been presented at the first convention, it would have been received with courtesy. I, myself, should have opposed its adoption, but should have suggested some way of disposing of it that would have antagonized no one.

After my card of protest against the action of the Tremont Temple convention had appeared in the papers already published in The Union Signal, the committee replied to it by the following published resolution:

Resolved, That in asking the legislature to submit a prohibitory amendment to the constitution to the voters of the commonwealth, we desire neither to favor nor antagonize any other question or issue, but to present this single issue to all citizens of the state: appealing to all, whether native or foreign born, woman suffragists or anti-woman suffragists, republicans, democrats, labor reformers, third party prohibitionists, reformers of every class, Christians of all sects, non-Christians and all who believe in the home and school as against the traffic in alcoholic beverages to unite with us in this work.

Had that declaration been passed when the woman suffrage resolution was voted down, I should have remained with the committee. It came as an afterthought, and as the result of my protest.

Mr. Finch seeks to give the impression that I will "do nothing to prevent boys from becoming drunkards, unless girls can vote." The manliness of this inunendo will be apparent to all who know me. I began my temperance work forty years ago, before Mr. Finch was born, unless he is an older man than his article indicates, and before the movement for the enfranchisement of women was thought of. I was then president of a section of the "Cold Water Army," which numbered 1500 members, and one of the editorial staff of a juvenile paper published in its interest.

Nor have I withdrawn from the temperance work, as Mr. Finch seems to think, in withdrawing from the organization under whose management he is working. I am still president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., and actively at work. By letters and telegrams which, at times, pass daily between our head-quarters and myself, I know every movement, and advise, direct and assist, as maybe necessary. When it was discovered that there were verbal inaccuracies in the heading of our petition for constitutional prohibition that vitiated it, I wrote a circular in correction of them, which has been received by the unions, who have remedied the mistakes, are pushing the petitions, and will forward them to our headquarters, when they will be sent to the same legislative committee as will those from every other source. The W. C. T. U. is doing more than circulating petitions. It is working for a law making scientific education in the physiological effects of alcoholic liquors compulsory in our public schools, is conducting temperance schools, in which thousands of children are gathered and trained, is circulating temperance literature, is holding temperance conventions and conferences, sometimes two and three a week, is gradually winning its way among all denominations of Christians, who more and more are coming to regard temperance work as "church work," and in various other ways is creating and fortifying the public sentiment, which will make constitutional prohibition operative and vital, when the people shall vote it. The logic of events connected with political temperance everywhere warns us not to discontinue this work, while continuing to petition for prohibitory legislation.

I shall have nothing farther to say on this subject, as acrimonious discussions between the advocates of a common cause are always to be deprecated. When I cannot work with people, I withdraw, but will not quarrel.

THE THANK OFFERING MEETING.

Dear Union Signal:—During the weeks which have elapsed since crusade Sunday, Dec. 23, the interest of the local W. C. T. Unions has been largely centered upon the family homestead in New York, because to its hospitalities all were to be invited on the thanksgiving occasion which should appropriately celebrate the reception of offerings to the "Mother Union," from her daughters, scattered from Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. The interest in this gathering was also enhanced by a prize offered through our National organ to the union bringing in the largest offering on that occasion, and the hope of securing the presence and services of our president, Miss Willard, was an inspiration to work and liberality in both eastern and western homes of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Weeks passed on, and in the latter part of January appeared the invitation of the genial hostess of the National Headquarters, calling all branches of the W. C. T. U. family to unite in the celebration at "16." An all day meeting was arranged continuing from ten a. m. to four p. m., with an evening service of a more general character, and work and prayer united gave promise of a helpful, inspiring day, only one other factor, good weather, being necessary to the anticipated success. But the morning of February 5 came in tears instead of smiles, and the rain, the ice, and the fog united to form a most inclement day, rendering a large attendance upon the thanksgiving festivities absolutely impossible. Those however, who, braving the storm, assembled in the pleasant parlors at headquarters, felt amply rewarded by the cordial welcome of Mrs. Buell, and the "social hour" announced upon the program passed in pleasant converse. Then came the hour for prayer and conference, presided over by Mrs. Hammer, of New Jersey, the subject "The Needs of the National Work." Earnest-hearted women spoke on various lines, but all centered on the idea of full consecration of heart and life in the workers being the great need of all reformatory Christian effort. Inspiring hymns were sung and earnest prayers offered that the temperance workers everywhere might be consecrated anew to the service of the Master.

The hour having arrived at which the thank offering envelopes were to be opened and their contents announced, the services commenced with Scripture reading by Mrs. Rulison and prayer by Mrs. McClees of Yonkers.

Mrs. Buell then took the chair and after giving a short sketch of the observance of crusade Sunday, proceeded to open the envelopes, and read the name of the union, the amount of money, and the Bible text enclosed in each. If in spiritual presence, the members of our wide spread family as announced, were with us, we had indeed a gathering of many hundreds, and we "thanked God and took courage" as from the north and the south, the east and the west came offerings typifying the love and interest of the daughters in the parent union—even the grandchildren were represented, for from several Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions came generous offerings, and the great grandchildren in several Bands of Hope evidenced by contributions their acknowledgment of the family tie! Intense interest was manifested by all present, both in the entire financial outcome of the "Opening," and in the union which by the largest offering should be entitled to the services of our National president, and when Mrs. Buell announced $1,676 as the full sum received, and Yonkers, N. Y., as the banner union, contributing fifty dollars to the grand result, the feelings of thankfulness in our hearts were appropriately voiced in the singing of a hymn of praise. Mrs. McClees, of the Yonkers union, in glowing words then gave a sketch of the all-day meeting which had evidenced its interest in the National Union, by the bestowal of so large a gift. We ought, in honor to the union in Los Angeles, Cal., sending an amount equally large, to say, had not the offer of The Union Signal excluded the Pacific coast, Miss Willard would need the wisdom of Solomon to decide between the relative claims of New York and California!

Owing to the inclemency of the weather, etc., the program of the day had been allowed to become quite informal, and the last hour which was to have been one of prayer and testimony presided over by Mrs. Mary Burt, president of the New York state W. C. T. U., having been largely consumed in the praise service, in its stead (by request of Mrs. Buell), Mrs. Burt gave a short but interesting address which fittingly closed the exercises of the day. The friends present were then invited to remain as guests to the National Union, and an informal tea was served by Mrs. Buell as hostess, thus adding the central suggestion of our triune family motto, "For God, and home, and native land."

The weather still continuing most unfavorable, the evening audience was not large in numbers, but full of interest in the exercises. After the singing of grand old "Coronation," and the reading of a psalm of thanksgiving, prayer was offered by Mrs. Burt, and Rev. Mr. Crafts, of New York, was introduced to the audience as a fearless, faithful champion of woman's work for temperance. Taking the Sunday school lesson of next Sunday as his text, he drew a parallel between the conversion of Lydia and the "arrest of thought" which led to the enlistment of women in the temperance work of the nineteenth century, proving the outcome of the former to be the establishment of the kingdom of God in Europe as evidenced in the formation of the Christian church, and the result of the latter, the reformatory and preventive work of the W. C. T. U.

At the conclusion of his address, the audience were favored with a solo, "While the days are going by," by Miss Sharp, after which it was stated by the chairman that Miss E. W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn, (who was expected to address the meeting) was prevented from attendance by a previous engagement. Mr. Robert Graham, secretary of the Episcopal church temperance society, was then introduced. In glowing words he told us of the establishment and progress of temperance work in his denomination both in England and America, and ended with an enthusiastic portraiture of the work which he is now advocating in New York city, "High license," with such able arguments for its possibilities and advantages that the members of the W. C. T. U. present felt, (though entirely unconvinced, that anything less than prohibition should be our goal), willing to listen to the presentation of any method which any friend of the cause feels will diminish the force of the terrible liquor traffic, so disgracing not only New York, but every city and town in our land, save those under the power of prohibitory law. The address was most interesting throughout, and as we listened, all felt thankful that while differing widely in methods of approach, the Christian church of the nineteenth century, stands as a unit upon the platform of temperance reform, and the closing hymn, "Stand up for Jesus," gave inspiration and promise to all workers together with God, irrespective of denominational name.

Thus closed our national Thanksgiving Day. May its influence abide and widen, until at the close of our second decade, a "multitude that no man can number" shall unite to celebrate the anniversary of the W. C. T. U.

MIXING THINGS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Congregationalist dated Dec. 6, 1883 publishes an article under the head, "Mixing Things," in which the idea is prominent "that so many unnatural bonds are tied" to the temperance work—some "which might be endorsed" and others objectionable—"they are tendered you in the lump so that your only option is to say yes or no to the whole."

Dear sisters, I ask if persons complaining in this way were ever known to help one jot or tittle in the temperance work. If we are not doing the right thing show us what is right.

If "it has not been possible to speak on abstinence directly, on account of some other question so utterly unallied to it," please root out the weeds so unnatural to its growth. "Just now the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts, offers a mixture which combines a large variety of elements" the lament is, "that many kinds of wood construct the platform." One important wood is prohibition, which is not so very outrageous because "the ground has at least been fully gone over in the past.

"Our good sisters have not seen fit to stop" until they have entered the political field and declared themselves advocates of woman suffrage and prohibition—"two political principles which have no natural or necessary affinity with Christian temperance."

If prohibition has no affinity with Christian temperance we must be very blind, because we can't see wherein prohibition will destroy or do mischief to the victims of the liquor trade.

The blood of drunken lost ones must be found in the skirts of every intelligent Christian man who votes for license. By doing so he legalizes, so far as his vote goes toward power, every crime committed in drunkenness, not only crime, but suffering connected with it.

The large army of women who are so silent on woman suffrage would gladly remain as they are. We are ashamed to have it necessary to ask for the ballot—not because it is right our voices should be hushed in the government in which we are a part, including our children we are no mean part either.

We have trusted our dear brother voters hoping and praying that light would break upon the unholy notion of tampering with and giving influence to this iniquity. We are driven to pray for an equal chance in power to protect our homes.

We wish that every man could realize the dread that chills every true mother's heart for fear her precious sons may become drunken. M. E. B.

THE WORK SHOP. NO. I.

The Local Habitation—The Daily Round—Echoes from a W. C. T. U. Whispering Gallery—Our Hygiene Supt.—Queries about "Corresponding Secretary, Recording Secretary and Dues."

DEAR SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNIONS:—It would be a real pleasure to me if I might personally welcome each of you to a peep into my new work shop. It is a rear upstairs room at Rest Cottage, eighteen feet long by eight feet wide and lined with shelves and pigeon holes—over sixty of the latter having been provided and partly labelled already by Anna Gordon's systematic hand. The walls are cream color, to match the tiny carpet; the small stove has an open grate, a sort of make-believe fireplace; the maps, newspapers, gazeteers, census, educational, Indian and other bulky "reports," are here by courtesy of Gen. Eaton and Hon. Hiram Price. My new "People's Cyclopedia," has its shelf, my Temperance Library is duly installed; a complete file of state minutes adorns one large pigeon hole; maps are on the walls, also bright Christmas cards from some of you; photographs of white ribbon women, and an elegant one of the Hayes' memorial portrait stands on a pretty bracket of its own. THE UNION SIGNAL'S artistic frontispiece to the decennial number, and George Macdonald's picture complete the enumeration up to date—for we have recently furnished and moved into "the work shop!" A couple of large tables, a Remington type-writer and three chairs fill up the space—one for each of the working women who "own the place," and one for "company." There is a big waste paper basket, but it is only for envelopes and newspapers. No scrap of a letter or postal is destroyed, but all are filed away as "records of the movement," and "history on the wing." Here in a rocking chair sent me by that generous "Little Dane" who long ago fitted out our editor with the typical "chair" for her pleasant city sanctum, a hieroglyphic penholder puts in time with tolerable solidity when not out on engagements involving district conventions, special emergencies and the like, and here the "plain as print" hand writing of the best "private secretary" in Christendom adorns from fifty to seventy-five letters or postals per diem. Our one window looks westward, and many a thought of tender interest and solicitude follows the hasty glance "over the trees and far away," towards the brave hearts in the Hawkeye state, the states and territories of the mighty new west, and Edenic California's undaunted band.

A medical student who knew the celebrated Dr. Dunglinson, of Philadelphia, told me many years ago that the doctor always wrote in a small, light closet, just large enough to hold himself, his table and the books he needed most, for he had a theory that those "close quarters" served to unify his attention and thus condensed his thoughts. If this be true there is compensation in restricted office room, and I am hoping for improved results in style. How many bright thoughts come to us in this cozy den—not from our own brains so much as from the thousand letters per month written by earnest practical W. C. T. U. women, from Charleston to San Francisco, from the Gulf of Mexico to Puget Sound! It is a reckless waste of precious things to pigeon hole all these bright sentences, to reply in private only to queries that might interest a large constituency and help to clear and mutual understanding of many a vital interest. Besides, we all know how a friend's suggestion often serves like the hand upon the rocking stone—to set our best thoughts in motion. Hence, for this two-fold reason, and by the kind permission of our hospitable editor, I mean to be, in this little work shop, which is a veritable W. C. T. U. Whispering Gallery, a sort of "chiel amang ye takin' notes."

—Our National Superintendent of Hygiene is one of the editors of Good Health, superintends an experimental kitchen and cooking class, has access to a very extensive library formed from the literature of hygiene and has a husband whose Sanitarium at Battle Creek is second to none in the west—a distinguished physician and "honorary member of the W. C. T. U.," as his wife proudly informs me. He promises to go with Mrs. Kellogg and help in her "Normal Institutes." The enthusiasm awakened by the one just held in Battle Creek was almost unbounded and our superintendent believes that in this way she can, in three days, accomplish more than in three years by any other method with her limited amount of time. Mrs. Kellogg has been requested to take the department of "Suppression of the Social Evil," which, as she aptly says, "Is really a subject of moral hygiene."

—Writes one of our levelest of level heads:

"I am in the midst of a circle of newly appointed officers in a region newly explored by our W. C. T. U. pioneers. They are all cultured and studious women, anxious to learn how to do their work well, but everyone has to begin de novo. It occurs to me that there must be very many such circles, and if we could have all these helps given in THE UNION SIGNAL it would be just what is needed. What a blessing Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith's drawer in the bureau is! We want more such drawers.

Let me ask two questions of importance to us "new beginners":

1. How many kinds of secretaries are contemplated in the W. C. T. U. plan and what are their distinctive duties?

2. Which does experience prove to be the best, quarterly or semi-annual payment of dues?"

Answer: 1. We have two secretaries in state and local work alike, i. e., corresponding and recording. Miss Mary Allen West in her leaflet on "Organization," gives as correct a statement of their duties as I have seen, and so will copy:

"The corresponding secretary's work brings her into closer relations with the president than does that of any other officer; for this reason she should be one with whom the president can work in perfect harmony, and if possible, one who lives near her. It is an excellent plan to allow the president to nominate the corresponding secretary. As the name of her office indicates, she is to attend to the correspondence of the union. Very often letters are sent to the president, and unless the secretary is near by, it will be less trouble to answer the letters than to send them to her. Again, the secretary usually wishes to consult the president concerning letters she is to answer; thus they need to be near together. Choose as corresponding secretary a lady who has true Christian courtesy and the power to express herself in a clear, bright, pleasant manner. It is through her your union is known to other unions and the state and district officers; see that you have a secretary who will represent you. I know a union that was crushed nearly out of existence, and was represented to me as quite dead, by a moody self-conceited, altogether unsuitable corresponding secretary, a very incubus, as I found on visiting the society. Her own moodiness colored every letter she wrote, and, of course, shaped the answer they called out; so we misunderstood the union, and it felt that its work was not appreciated by us. The corresponding secretary can add much to the interest of the meetings by giving once a month, a summary of temperance news, gleaned from various sources not including THE UNION SIGNAL, as every member ought to take that for herself. We took this idea from the scrap bag of mission circles, and it has worked well.

"The duty of the recording secretary is to record, accurately and concisely, the doings of the union. She is also to make the required reports to district and state secretaries. She needs a clear head, a quick hand and the ability to lose self in her work, otherwise her record book will be a transcript of her opinions, rather than of the doings of the society. She should write a clear, legible hand and so arrange her records that they are easy of reference. She should be one who can be regularly and promptly at the meetings, and can keep her head when she is there, even when confusion seems to reign. It is her business to see that notices of meetings are given; though this duty is frequently divided between the secretaries, the recording secretary attending to the church notices, and the corresponding secretary to those for the press."

2. All dues, local, state, and national, should be paid quarterly. This method enables the officers to decide how much they can "branch out" and keeps the work at a far quicker pace. In the purpose to make creditable reports and to send such an amount to state and national as will not belittle the society, greater efforts will be made, a larger number of members secured and the advantages will be much every way.

Yours always, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

TO BE always intending to live a new life, but never to find time to see about it—that is as if a man should put off eating and drinking and sleeping from one day and night to another till he is starved and destroyed.

CHILD'S HYMN.

God, make my life a little light
Within the world to glow—
A little flame that burneth bright
Wherever I may go.

God, make my life a little flower
That giveth joy to all,
Content to bloom in native bower,
Although its place be small.

God, make my life a little song
That comforteth the sad—
That helpeth others to be strong,
And makes the sinner glad.

God, make my life a little staff
Whereon the weak may rest,
That so what health and strength I have
May serve my neighbors best.

God, make my life a little hymn
Of tenderness and praise—
Of faith that never waxed dim,
In all his wondrous ways.

"OLE PHARO."

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

Miss Wilson sat before her Sunday school class, tired, discouraged, and fairly at her wits' end. She had given up the lesson in desperation, and for ten minutes had been talking against time, and longing for the stroke of the bell that should put an end to her torment. She had been so sure of her lesson, so full of interest in it herself, that she had looked forward eagerly to the pleasure of teaching it, but not a breath of response could she arouse in her class. It seemed as if the very spirit of mischief and defiance had seized them. They giggled; they laughed outright; they pinched each other; they dropped marbles on the floor, and scrambled for them pell-mell; they made such droll criticisms upon the blackboard illustration that Miss Wilson herself was inwardly convulsed, especially as her artistic soul assured her they were not inappropriate or unjust. She had no need to look far for the mainspring of all the disturbance. Each one of the six street gamins was a host in himself; but the leader of the combined hosts was a little colored boy, whose great pathetic eyes looked as innocent of mischief as a young calf's. His air of deference and his wonderfully musical voice had won her confidence at the outset, and she was slow to discover his failings until they were past overlooking.

King Solomon Jones, his name stood upon the class register; and he never failed to put on his most injured look at any failure on her part to give him his royal title at roll call. Miss Wilson was not blind—King Solomon had promulgated the opinion that she could "see with her y'ears," and while she talked earnestly to Conny Burns of Stephen's forgiving spirit toward his murderers, she knew very well that Solomon was busily engaged in fastening a string to the hair of a little girl in the next class. He accomplished the feat, but not a muscle of his face moved when Miss Wilson quietly reached across, and, removing the string, handed it to him. "Shoh, Miss Wilson," he said innocently. "What'd I want that gal's har' strings?" and at that instant the bell rang.

"What shall I do?" thought the perplexed teacher. "I am not teaching them one thing, or doing them any good. Somebody else will have to try them."

But as she was gathering up her books to go home, some one touched her arm. There stood King Solomon Jones, for the first time in his life showing signs of embarrassment, and exploring a crack in the floor with his bare toes as he said:

"Miss Wilson, I wish't you'd go and see Ole Pharo; he's powerful sick."

"Old Pharo," repeated Miss Wilson.

Solomon nodded.

"That's where I live. My mammy sold me to him for whisky. She owed him a heap, and he said he'd take me to run arrants. Laws, I'm gwine run so fur one these yer days he'll never set eyes on me no mo'."

"But where does he live?"

"Down by Martin's, behind the Brewery; it's a low-down place, but you needn't be feared in the daytime, and long o' me."

"I'll ask Mr. Newcome," said Miss Wilson, hesitatingly.

"He's no good," said the boy impatiently. "Old Pharo won't take none of his sass. Shoh, Miss, I didn't reckon you'd be afeared no more'n Stephen was."

"I'll go," said Miss Wilson instantly; and go she did, with a prayer for help and guidance.

"This man's name cannot really be Old Pharo," she said to Solomon.

"Ought to be," answered the boy. My sakes! them chillen of Egypt had a mighty easy time 'long of the trouble I've seen with that ar' ole trash. His name is Tim Conovor, reads that way over the do'; but I've called him Ole Pharo ever sence you told us about him. My, but didn't Moses plague him good! Wish't I was Moses"

"Then what are you taking me down there for?"

"Well, you see he's powerful sick, and I yeard the men say he wouldn't las' much longer. That's what made me so tickle this mornin'. 'Twas me made them fellers cut up so, Miss Wilson."

Solomon looked at his teacher with a confiding air, and was a good deal disturbed when she said,

"I know it very well; you are usually the one who makes trouble; but is it possible you were glad that this poor man was going to die?"

"I reckon you'd be glad, if your mammy sold yer for whisky. Goin' on three years an' ye never had enough to eat, or went to sleep a night without a lickin.' Why, Miss Mary, you just ought to see my back! ain't a spot left big enough to make the track of a whip on. Course I'm glad; anybody'd be glad."

"But what do you want me to do?" persisted Miss Wilson.

"Well," said Solomon, "when you told about Stephen prayin' fer them ole murderin' Jews, and they pluggin' rocks at him till they killed him, I reckoned I might as well forgive Ole Pharo, seein' he's goin' to die anyhow, and he never really killed me yit."

"And you really do forgive him?"

"Oh yes! I'll forgive him; but I don't know about the Lord's forgivin' him,' cause I yeard a woman say he was sure to have a mighty hard time settlin' up with the Lord fer all his wickedness. An' if you'd just ast Him to let my 'count all go, maybe He'd let him off easier."

They entered a dirty alley, and a policeman who was half asleep on the corner came slowly sauntering after them, to Miss Wilson's great relief.

"This yer's the place," said Solomon, leading the way through a saloon where several men were drinking, to a low shanty in the rear. A slatternly woman was trying to set the house in better order, and through the open door of a bedroom came a low sound of voices.

"You can't go in," said the woman, wiping a chair for Miss Wilson; "the priest is with him."

They waited a moment in uneasy silence. "Miss Mary," said Solomon, "what was it that Stephen said about forgivin'?"

"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," whispered the teacher.

"That's it: would you mind sayin' it out for me good and loud."

"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" repeated the clear voice of the teacher, and then as her courage rose in the presence of this great extremity she added: "God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Presently the priest came out from the bedroom. He was an old man with a sorrowful face, and he bowed respectfully to Miss Wilson.

"How is he?" she asked.

"In the hands of God, who is more wise and more merciful than you and I, young lady," said the old priest gravely.

"He's dead," announced Solomon, looking in at the door. "I'm powerful glad I let him off from my part of the 'count."

The policeman escorted Miss Wilson back to the borders of respectable society, and she went home saddened, yet encouraged.

They do listen, after all," she said to herself," "and now and then a seed does find soil enough to grow. I never shall despair again, if I only can remember the promise, 'It shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.'"

About fifty miles from Shanghai, in the city of Quin San, there is a little church. One of the members is a boy sixteen or seventeen years old now, who, before his conversion, had formed the habit of drinking wine. He soon saw that this was sinful, so after asking God to help him, he decided upon this plan to overcome the habit. A small wooden box was made, closed all around except a hole in the top, and every day at the usual hour of drinking wine, "wine man" inside (as he called his appetite) would bite him and want wine. Then he would run to the box and put into it the money he used to spend for wine, exclaiming, "There, now! you can't get any wine today, for your money has gone into the box." Each day this process was repeated, until he ceased to want wine; and when the little box was opened, he was surprised to find how much money was there, all of which was then given to the church as a thank-offering to God, who had saved him from a wicked habit.—Interior.

"We are not worst at once. The course of evil
Begins so slowly, and from such slight source,
An infant's hand could stem the breach with clay.
But let the stream grow deeper, and Philosophy,
Aye, and Religion, too, shall strive in vain
To stem the headlong torrent."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I wrote you last week about the Bethesda Mission and what the W. C. T. U. ladies were doing there for the children of Chicago's "Black Hole." I wish you could look in upon them in their kindergarten, industrial and Sunday schools and Band of Hope. You would be surprised to hear their bright answers. I am afraid good Dr. Prince could have puzzled some of you too, by the questions I heard him ask one Sunday. One day the superintendent of the Band of Hope was telling the children about alcohol and what awful things it made people do. She told them, too, that God said no drunkard could be with Him in heaven. "Where will these drunkards go?"

A little mite of a darkey girl raised her hand, shaking it just as little folks do who want to tell something very, very much, and called out, "I know, teacher, I know."

"Well, what is it, Amanda?"

"They gits into the station."

You see these children know all about the police, the station and the "Black Maria" that carries their fathers and mothers away to the "Bridewell," but they know but little about anything good. Now the ladies who teach the children down at the Mission say you little soldiers of the Prevention Army can help them ever so much by sending clothes you have outgrown or can spare these little brothers and sisters of yours, who are many of them so ragged and dirty. Dresses, aprons, coats, pants, vests, any garment that children from three years old way up to fourteen can wear. Then you may want to send them some of your own money to buy cloth for the little girls who are learning to sew to make into clothes for themselves. In the industrial school and kindergarten you know they learn to make ever so many pretty things, and to draw. Perhaps you would like to send them pictures, and scrap books in which to paste the pictures, and paper for drawing, pieces for the girls' patchwork, or anything else you think they would like for their work.

Do you know that a few weeks ago there was just the nicest young lady came all the way from Maine to see and study about all the nice things the ladies in Chicago do for these poor little waifs who have nothing pleasant or good in their lives except what is given them in just such schools as that at Bethesda Mission. She went down to the "Mission" one Saturday and the ladies said she was so interested that she sat the whole hour teaching nine little colored boys how to draw, and the boys, why they were as interested and behaved as nicely as boys could.

"Who'll be the first to follow Jesus?" (for you know when you help these "little ones" of His you are helping Him) in sending to the Bethesda Mission something to help in the work? You can send to

Dr. I. M. Prince, "Bethesda Mission" 129 Fourth ave., Chicago, and you may be sure the doctor will be very glad to give your little packages to the children.

Captain Deborah.

"IT IS I! BE NOT AFRAID!"

St. Mark vi: 50.

BY ANNA HOLYOKE HOWARD.

The night was dark on Galilee,
The wind blew high across the sea,
Weary and faint a patient band
Toil with the oars to gain the land.

But see! a white and spectral form
Walks on the waves amid the storm,
With quaking hearts they cry with fear—
For lo! the awful form draws near.

But hark! who answers to their cry?
No foe that voice. The Lord draws nigh;
He speaks to cheer not to upbraid:
"Lo, it is I; be not afraid."

Our human hearts, oft faint and fear,
Oppressed and sad, while ills draw near,
Ah, often heaviest clouds that rise
Are only blessings in disguise.

WATCH THE BOYS.

BY MARIETTA A. CASSELL.

They laid him down with happy smiles
In his tiny, curtained bed;
They gently smoothed the pillow fair
Where reposed his little head.
And loving words from every one
Gave greeting of joy to the first-born son.

They watched around him day by day,
Till the little limbs grew strong;
They taught in simple, childlike words
Of the ways of right and wrong.
And loving hearts kept record sure
Of each baby action so sweet and pure.

They laid him down, with faces grave,
In his coffin, cold and dread;
No loving hand to spread the pall
O'er the strangely silent dead;
No word of hope—in speechless awe
They gazed on the face they should see no more.

Far, far from home, in foreign soil,
He was hid from mortal eye;
No record of his life on earth,
But 'tis written up on high—
The story of a drunkard's shame,
His wasted life and his blighted fame.

Please notice,

"Loving hearts kept record sure,
Of each baby action, so sweet and pure."

Did those "loving hearts keep record sure" of each boy action that was not so sweet and pure? And still farther on in life, did those "loving hearts keep record sure" of each young man action, that was still less sweet and pure? If they had instilled true temperance principles into that young life through home influence, the church and the temperance societies, would he have lived that wasted life and filled a drunkard's grave? Ah! we think and hope not

Did you ever think as you see the red-faced, blear-eyed drunkard, reeling along the streets, that he was once a little tender, soft, beautiful baby, fondled and kissed by loving parents? and that if he had been properly taught when a child he might today be filling some useful station in life?

We are all more or less creatures of circumstance, therefore, I think it one of the most important departments in the temperance work to thoroughly educate the children so that when they are old they will not depart from it.

I think the main secret of the Catholics having more devoted followers than the Protestants is that they take their little children as soon as they can talk and teach them their catechism and forms of worship.

I have often wondered when I have seen such small children going through their long ceremonies, how they could remember so complicated a form without making a mistake, but I know it is only by constant drill, and faithful persistent teaching on the part of their leaders. Children as a general thing are very pliable, and can be taught almost anything, and earliest impressions are the most lasting. So the strongest temperance principles we can most forcibly instill into the minds of the children while they are young and tender, will be longest retained. We must deeply impress them with the idea that alcohol is a narcotic poison (children are usually very much afraid of poison), and teach them that this poison if taken into the stomach will irritate and inflame the vital organs, the blood, and all the important nerves of the body, that it deadens and paralyzes the intellectual, moral and spiritual faculties, and that all intoxicating liquors, such as whisky, wine beer, and cider contain this alcoholic poison.

"What," say some of my friends, "do you teach the children that it is wrong to drink cider?"

"Yes, most emphatically, yes."

Let me say right here, that it was that very cider question that kept me out of the W. C. T. U. six months after it was organized in our town. I thought they were altogether too radical, because they put cider on their pledge. Now I am as radical on the cider question as any one else dare be. Why? because upon study and investigation I find it contains as much alcohol as beer, and in some of its stages as much as wine, and that it is more liable to be given to children than any other intoxicating beverage, and that more alcoholic appetites have been created, fed and developed in that way than any other, especially where the child is cursed with an inherited appetite. For I firmly believe that many a poor child is born into this world with this fearful birthright. No one doubts the existence of the inherited tendency of consumption and other diseases. So why doubt the transmission of this dreadful appetite from parent to child?

Now the only safeguard for any poor child endowed with this baneful inheritance is total abstinence.

One inheriting this alcoholic appetite should not tamper with intoxicants in any way, shape or form, for this natural tendency will be speedily developed into that uncontrollable appetite

"That kills the soul immortal
And clouds the intellect divine."

* * * * * *

"Yet this foul insatiate monster
Is empowerd to walk on earth;
Enter homes, a guest unwelcome,
Sit beside us at our hearth,
Shatter fondest hopes we cherish,
Poison our domestic joys;
With his wanton smile alluring
Rob us of our noble boys."

This is no monster away off in a heathen land in thought of which we can fold our hands in idle indifference believing ourselves out of its reach. It is right here in our midst, crouching at the door of every home, anxiously awaiting to snatch our very own dearly beloved boys, as they leave the influence of that home, and drag them down to sin and death with myriads of others.

"Victims of his fiendish will." Oh! I wish I could arouse every body to the importance of immediate and continued action in this matter of educating the children.

We must improve every opportunity of educating them in the home, in the schools, in the Sabbath schools, as well as in the temperance organizations.

We must educate, educate, EDUCATE everywhere.

For in the children of today lie our future statesmen and legislators who will make and control our laws, and it is only by law that we can effectually eradicate this drink system.

Now we want men of good strong convictions and indomitable wills. Men who hold principle higher than party. We must have men with redhot energy that are full of life and spirit, and who will unflinchingly work for the general good of humanity, for home protection and for prohibition and not for their own selfish and personal ends.

Now to get such men we must educate them from the children of the present generation. The children are all on the right side to start with, but we must marshal them into line, so that they will march boldly into the stronghold of the enemy, tear down the flag of King Alcohol where he now reigns supreme and plant prohibition in its stead.

"In the distance shining softly
Like a beacon light from home,
I see the star of Prohibition
Beckoning to us thro' the gloom.
We will neither faint nor falter,
God is just, and right is right;
We will conquer, we must conquer,
In this glorious temperance fight."

A TRAGEDY OF 1884.

BY ONE OF THE W. C. T. U.

Leading a life of ease, in a home of luxury was a loved Christian woman, whose charity, kindness and hospitality endeared her to our community. Her husband has indulged in the social drinking habits of the time, until his mind is darkness, his speech unintelligible, and the ravings of a madman often displace the courtesy which once marked his gentle manners. But after years of patient endurance, the agonized wife has sought peace in death, and by her own hand ended her troubled existence. Near her body was found a slip of paper on which she had written, "I am a victim of whisky."

With sorrowing hearts we turn from our "victim" to those who still bravely live on, and say, "we are earnestly working and praying for you, and in God's own time the burden will surely be lifted."

THE Prince of Wales in his official capacity of Grand Master of Freemasons, has consented to issue a warrant for a total abstinence lodge in London.

MARCH 2. LESSON IX. 1884.

TOPIC: PAUL AT ATHENS.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 17: 22–34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In him we live, and move and have our being. Acts 17-28.

TIME.—A. D. 52.

PLACE.—Athens in Greece.

1. Ignorant worship is nevertheless accepted as worship. If this be not the teaching of St. Paul's words "whom therefore ye ignorantly worship," then are they worse than sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." I would have been the greatest insincerity, (of which Paul could not have been guilty), if he had tried to gloss over an utterly empty service with such words. Everywhere in the Scriptures there is a recognition of a certain true element in even heathen religion. Prof. Max Muller in his "Chips from a German Workshop" shows by faithful transcriptions of the earliest heathen writings, that the heavenward side of man's nature had its bright gleams away back in the far off ages, the times of the ignorance which God "winked at." And though now He commandeth men everywhere to repent, though now the true light shineth and lighteth every man that cometh into the world, still we must believe that God recognizes His own truth even though it gleam faintly through obscured media and leads, even by the dim light, the trusting soul to Himself.

2. A pregnant hint to all reform workers is given in this address to the politely gainsaying Greeks. To start upon our points of agreement, to work out from these to a clear presentation of our points of difference and to follow with an argument that shall undermine the latter, is true wisdom in bringing our cause to the notice and attention of our opposers. Paul meets the men of Athens upon their own ground, quotes their Scriptures in support of his own, and so leads them on to a consideration of much which they would have rejected at the outset, had he attacked rather than conciliated them.

3. There is no evidence that Paul spent any great length of time in Athens. He could endure persecution, but not the polite indifference of this materialistic people. Their courteous word "We will hear thee again of this matter," was a dismissal in fact, and Paul departed from among them. The hardest of all foes to meet is indifference. General apathy is said to be a worse enemy on the field than brutality or strategy. Nevertheless, in spite of all—a Grecian councillor, a member of the senate of Athens—Dionysius the Areopagite believed, as did also a humble woman named Damaris, of whose position and circumstances we have no record. The seed was sown, and Paul went his way, perhaps doubting if he had accomplished enough to pay for the journey, but in time the chief temple of Athens, the great and beautiful Parthenon, became a house of Christian worship, and the image loving Greeks, transformed by the new religion of Him who "dwelleth not in temples made with hands," were so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Paul's sermon, that their repugnance to images became in a few years the chief cause of the schism between the Christian church of the east and west.

IN one of our largest cities containing a great proportion of beer drinkers, I had occasion to note the deaths among a large group of persons, whose habits in their eyes, and those of their friends, were temperate, but they were habitual users of beer. Something under middle age, they were of course, selected lives. For two or three years nothing remarkable was to be noted, but presently death began to work until the group had dwindled down to a mere fraction. The mortality was astounding in extent and still more remarkable in the manifest evidence of cause and mode. There was no mistaking. The history was almost invariable: Robust apparent health, full muscles, fair outside, increasing weight; then a touch of cold, a sniff of malaria, and instantly some acute disease with typhoid symptoms was in violent action, and ten days or less ended life. It was as if the system was within eaten to a shell, and at the touch of disease there was an utter collapse. This has been my observation of beer drinking everywhere, peculiarly deceptive, thoroughly destructive at last.—Col. Green, Pres. Ct. Mutual Life Insurance Co.

STARCH factories in Maine pay from ninety-five cents to $1.05 per bushel for potatoes to be converted into starch, Aroostick Co., the largest of which made up ninety-eight thousand bushels of potatoes last year into three hundred and ninety-two tons of starch. In this way they are paying off their mortgages. This is better than giving it to distilleries and breweries. Massachusetts may follow.

SAINT AUGUSTINE called wine drinking "the whirlwind of the brain, the overthrow of the sense, the tempest of the tongue," and Seneca declared that to imagine that a man can "take much wine and retain a right frame of mind is as bad as to argue that he may take poison and not die."

THE CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE.

Christianity is God's great gift to sinful, suffering humanity. It is the heaven-sent and heaven-helped antagonist of whatever tends to injure or debase mankind. Let any custom, usage, law, institution or occupation exert an injurious influence upon society effecting it physically, mentally, or morally, the religion of Jesus Christ is its persistent, uncompromising and exterminating foe. It is a radical, belligerent and innovating religion, and only through irrepressible conflicts and righteous revolutions, can it finally fulfill its mighty mission to establish, "peace on earth and good will toward men."

It is inexorably at war with all shades and shapes of evil doing, with all plans and parties that seek personal gain and selfish ease at the expense of the public welfare. It must and it will advance, and assail, and condemn, and destroy as long as there is any phase or fruit of sin to combat, or form of good to achieve.

It is beyond the power of the strongest intellect to measure, or imagination to conceive of the horrors, the infinite horrors of the rum traffic.

Intemperance is pre-eminently the shame, the curse and the crime of the nation. It is a fearfully black stain upon our civilization, and the most potent hindrance to our financial, intellectual, social, moral and religious prosperity. It is an enemy that assails religion at its vital points, and whose complete success would be the world's damnation. "There is not a sinner on the face of the earth so unlikely to be savingly effected by the influences of the gospel as the habitual drunkard," unless it is the man who is getting rapidly rich in the liquor traffic.

"The salvation of a thorough drunkard," or a successful liquor dealer, "is one of the mightiest miracles of Almighty grace."

The church, therefore, is not to be an idle, unconcerned spectator in the gigantic conflict with this powerful foe, this cause of more crime, suffering, sin, deaths and damnations than any other evil. She is not for the sake of apparent present policy to seek to maintain a neutral attitude, but must be an active participator in the fight if she would be true to God and the interests He has committed to her keeping.

Her pulpits should be temperance pulpits. With God's word as his text book, pronouncing a fearful "woe" upon the trafficker in ardent spirits as a beverage, and excluding drunkards from the kingdom of heaven, God's ambassador must be emphatic and frequent in his expositions of the sin of the liquor traffic.

The church should banish from her communion table all intoxicating wines. She should never put a temptation in the path of one struggling for victory over a terrible appetite and still chafing in its chains. She should never deprive such, knowing their weakness and danger, of the enjoyments and benefits of the Lord's Supper by using the ordinary wine of commerce. She should not substitute the product of the vat for the appointed "fruit of the vine."

The members of the church of Christ, whilst seeking to save the victims of the inebriating cup, should seek by every honorable way to prohibit a traffic that has so many victims.

An ounce of prevention, here, is worth a ton of cure. Each believer, empowered with the right of suffrage, should vote always as he prays. Each should, with life and lips, proclaim the gospel of total abstinence and total prohibition.

---

The prohibition campaign in Massachusetts is gaining in extent and organization each day. The constitutional prohibitory amendment convention of February 7, held in Tremont Temple, Boston, is spoken of by a correspondent as one of the grandest that city has ever seen. There were 132 towns represented by 730 delegates, and over $4,000 raised to carry on the work another year. Dr. A. H. Plumb presided, and made a most masterly argument. Dr. Dorchester gave a fine address.

John B. Finch was the orator of the morning, and a young Catholic, Mr. Watson, president of the Catholic Total Abstinence society of Essex county, who has great enthusiasm and magnetism and is a leader among his people. Miss Phoebe Cozzens, of St. Louis, spoke admirably in the afternoon.

Letters were read from Joseph Cook, who gave the subject some of his telling words at the Monday prelude, the day before, and other lesser lights twinkled before the audience. There seems to be more unity of aim and action among temperance workers in Massachusetts than for many years.

---

The great floods of the Ohio, the Wabash and other mountain-fed streams have wrought sad havoc in the Ohio valley. Nobly does humanity on its feet, respond to humanity laid low. The Red Cross society with such women as Clara Barton and Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett "at the lead," has been a channel of continuous blessing and service.

The great floods of intemperance know little variation the whole year round. The rise and fall of their devasting powers are scarcely seen. Everywhere a sad and sorrowful level of desolation is presented. And the W. C. T. U., the society of the White Cross is as constant and unvarying in its ministrations as is the woe of the curse. "All at it and always at it" is the watchword.

A GOOD work is to be wrought for us by the Rev. Dr. Gray, president of Little Rock University, whose experience in illustrating important facts on outline maps, makes his promise to furnish a temperance map of the United States for use at our next national convention, one of more than ordinary value. In order to secure the largest possible collection of facts he asks that our constituency shall furnish all available statistics bearing on the following points of investigation:

1. Number of saloons in each state.
2. Amount paid for license in each state, both state, municipal and United States.
3. Running expenses of the churches in each state. (Say ten most prominent.)
4. Amount of school expenditures for each state.
5. Percentage of criminals who trace their condition to liquor.
6. Amount of liquor drank annually in each state, or per capita.
7. Number of deaths annually in each state traceable to intoxicating liquor.
8. Number of gallons of liquor manufactured annually in each state.

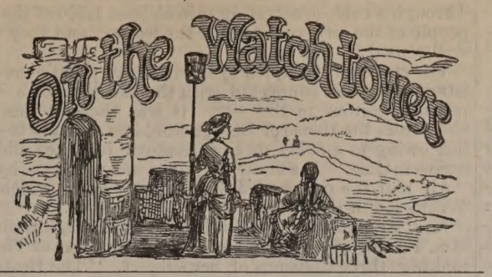
THE daily newspapers are reporting the extreme discouragement of the whisky manufacturers and dealers concerning relief legislation by the present congress. It is said that a prominent western distiller has returned from Washington with the determination to devote his energies toward as much of a preparation as is now possible for the crisis in the whisky market. He agrees that there is now no hope of any extension of the bonded period.

However, this may be, it will not be wise or well for temperance people to relax their exertions just yet. A lull of effort on our part is perhaps just the gain desired and intended by the craftiest of crafts, in this wily abandonment of hope.

A VOTERS' union is the latest organization in Ohio. It is officered by such men as the Hon. Mills Gardner, the Rev. Frederick Merrick, D. D., G. E. Thrall and G. M. Peters. Its effort will be, with that of the Ohio W. C. T. U., between which and itself there is perfect harmony, to secure resubmission of the prohibitory amendment, so dubiously defeated last fall. A strong concentration of voting power will be gained by the co-operation to this end, which will doubtless make itself felt at the polls in November, if the present legislation and the party conventions do not enact and embody the expressed will of 3,500,000 citizens.

KIRKWOOD seminary, near St. Louis, under the charge of Miss Anna Sneed, a true W. C. T. U. woman, has a class of twenty-five young ladies studying the text book, Alcohol and Hygiene. It augurs a better day for "native land" when young women give themselves earnestly to such important investigations.

A FULL report of the thank offerings receive at national headquarters is promised by Miss Pugh, for next week's issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.



Miss Elizabeth Greenwood who has been doing fine service in the provinces of Canada, for the W. C. T. U. is described by a Canadian letter writer as "a slender handsome young lady" whose addresses for graceful eloquence and persuasive power, surpassed all expectations. Her labors in Montreal, with both children and their elders are fully appreciated by the people.

The Temperance League of the M. E. church is the name of a new temperance society at Warehouse Point, Conn. Its "battle cry" is a good one, "Churches and school houses all over our land, no saloons any where."

* * * * *

Mrs. Leavitt, superintendent of work on the Pacific coast, was a prime mover and worker in the semi annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of which Mrs. Hobart, now sojourning there writes so fully in the correspondence columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. Though for two weeks travelling in unceasing rain, and speaking to rain frighted audiences, she went to her work at convention with unabated zeal and undaunted courage, like the bravely persistent woman that she is.

* * * * *

The National American pays tribute to the W. C. T. U. of St. Louis by calling attention to the perseverance of its saints. One day when the mercury was down in the twenties below zero, the editor desired greatly to communicate with the society, but though the day for its regular session, he had no thought of finding the members at their post. He was mistaken however, the brave little band fearing

"Neither summer's heat nor winter's cold
Since both are subjects to the King's command."

There used to be a great query "Where do the pins go?" Now it is, "Where do the old shoes go?" The Philadelphia Record tells a tale of horrors about them:

It is said that they are boiled in pure spirits and allowed to stand for a few weeks, the product far surpassing the Jamaica rum made with essence, burnt sugar and almonds. A gentleman who doubted the truth of this story stopped recently at a low grog shop in the neighborhood of the factory spoken of, and inquired if they had any rum from old shoes. "No," said the barkeeper, "We don't keep it much now; but we have had it, and we can get you some if you want it."

I have always wanted to see and hear Miss Field, of China Mission fame, but now desire it more than ever. One hundred and fifty young men were at a workhouse clinic in Philadelphia at which three women, students of the Woman's Medical College by appointment presented themselves. The one hundred and fifty young men tried to jeer them out, whereupon Miss Field, great, dignified, masterful spirit that she is, rose and said:

Gentlemen, I have been for eighteen years a missionary in China. The Chinese have no medical science, and superstitious rites are chiefly relied on in the treatment of disease. All the people are in need of medical aid, but the women are the neediest. A Chinese woman would under no circumstances go to a male physician for the treatment of any disease peculiar to her sex. She would suffer lifelong agony rather than violate her sense of propriety. Her father, her brothers, and her husband would even let her die rather than let her be treated by a male physician. Full of sorrow for the sufferings of these women, I have been looking in Christian America to see what hope of help for them might be here. I have been glad to find that in some of our great medical schools earnest and self-sacrificing women are fitting themselves for a work of mercy in Asia and other lands. Unless such women learn to do such work well there is no physical salvation for those afflicted ones. And, in behalf of those women, who have no medical care while they so sorely need it, I ask from you the courtesy of gentlemen toward ladies who are studying medicine in Philadelphia.

Young manhood then rose above hoodlumism and Miss Field was greeted with ringing cheers as she took her seat.

Some Missouri editors are saying that almost anybody would give a hundred dollars to get such a letter as Mrs. Clara Hoffman wrote Judge Ritchey in response to his gift. Well, then, just pay over gentlemen. The W. C. T. U. has a patent on that letter.

Girls, no court will sustain your plea for divorce on the ground of drunkenness, if you marry a drinking man. The Iowa supreme court speaking of a woman who acted thus foolishly says: "This woman married a drunkard, and she must discharge the duties of a drunkard's wife." Think of it. What are the duties of a drunkard's wife? Can you fulfill them?

Our United States senators must have been packed in ice during July and August 1883. The bills of senate expenses shows that each senator consumed 3000 pounds during that heated term, also that each senator averaged three quarts of Apollinaris water per diem, and lunched daily on seventeen two grain quinine pills. Can it be that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet?

No sadder message ever came over the wires, from a mother's broken heart than this:

I thought in an instant of the joy that must come to the gentle woman whose generous Christmas gift made it possible for Mrs. Skelton to be with her poor boy during his last days.

Louis Skelton was a young man of rare beauty of character. As gentle and pure hearted as a woman, as earnest and true as a Christian, as brave and dauntless as a veteran soldier, he was one whom the world needs. Life was full of promise for him and he full of plans for life. His stricken mother and sorrowing wife will be borne up on high by many prayers.

Thou art dismissed the strife, enter upon thy rest.

Here is a hint for the Christian agriculturist. One of Illinois' best men, a citizen of whisky-ridden Peoria—of course you guess—I may as well tell. It was William Reynolds, president of the state Sunday school association, was invited to subscribe to the fund raised for the county fair. He immediately set down a good round sum, as he generally does, on condition that no intoxicants should be sold on the grounds during the fair. Several others followed his lead. Result: These subscriptions were never collected.

MISSOURI.

Nevada.—The W. C. T. Unions of the twelfth district met in Nevada January 31, 1884, for the purpose of organizing a district convention. Besides those from our own district, visitors were present from Carthage, Pierce City and Webb City, who added very much to the interest of the meeting. The convention was presided over by our loved and efficient state president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman Kansas City, Mo., who is a host against the forces of evil in our state. She is doing a grand and noble work. It was the first meeting of our unions, and we were surprised at the talent and ability the ladies possessed. The district was organized with the following officers: Mrs. J. W. Ingraham, Nevada, president; Mrs. Willet Gardner, Schell City, secretary; Mrs. Dr. Wood, Lamar, treasurer; with a president in each county seat. Mrs. Hoffman's address, the last night, was the effort of a "master mind," delivered in an impressive manner to a large and appreciative audience. We keep up two societies in Nevada, one of the young and the other of married ladies, and both are doing good work. We observed the day of prayer for the national convention, also the tenth anniversary of the crusade. The young ladies have established a reading room, and are carrying it on successfully, and we have bright hopes of the good we may do in the future.

Mrs. H. H. Bowman, Pres. W. C. T. U.

Macon.—The temperance revival that was inaugurated here week before last by the advent of George W. Woodford in a series of very interesting meetings continued up to Sunday night, when he delivered his closing address. There has been no such interest manifested in the temperance work in the history of Macon. No advocate of the benefits of temperance and evils of intemperance, has presented the subject in such a forcible way, and with such irresistible power and attraction as did Mr. Woodford for ten days and nights.

Over 500 persons took the pledge during his labors here. A W. C. T. U. has been organized with forty-six members, and already the ladies of the society are manifesting great zeal in their work, and are planning to accomplish much. They purpose establishing a reading room, which will be supplied with a library and numerous periodicals, where our citizens young and old may spend their leisure hours. For this purpose they have already received liberal subscriptions from our citizens, and will call upon others with the purpose of raising from $500 to $1,000.

Auxiliary to this movement a "Band of Hope" society was organized. The church was crowded with men, women, and children. About two hundred children took the pledge to abstain from use of liquors and tobacco. D. H. Payson was elected vice president, and Daisy Fletcher, treasurer. The W. C. T. U. holds meetings every week, and all the ladies of Macon are requested to unite and take part in this work.

Mrs. S. G. Bbock, Pres.

Mrs. O. V. Eggleston, Cor. Sec.

Joplin.—I am glad to write you of our glorious temperance revival. Messrs. Holt, Critchfield and Woodford, have each given us a week of earnest work. Mr. Woodford's work is pre-eminently gospel work, leading those who have signed the pledge, to look to One who is stronger than they for help to keep it. We held meetings continuously from the 12th of December for seven weeks. Now, we have a meeting once a week with crowded houses, and new accessions are constantly being made to our ranks. The pledge signers now number 1150.

The children have a meeting once a week, and hundreds attend. The two daily papers, each give us a half column weekly, and temperance items are constantly being sent them, which they publish. The whole country about is being aroused on the temperance question Messrs. Holt, Critchfield and Woodford are still in the district, and we look for a glorious fruitage at no distant day. Mrs. J. C. Plumb, Sec.

Lamar.—The temperance wave has reached our town, and we feel the effects of the cold water. Last May, Mrs. Mary M. Clardy visited our town and organized a W. C. T. U. We now have thirty-five members. On Nov. 23, a union prayer meeting was held, and the following Sunday night a temperance mass meeting in the Methodist church in honor of the tenth anniversary of the woman's crusade. January 10, Brother George Woodford began a series of lectures with good results. Brother Critchfield came, and labored with success. More than six hundred persons have taken the pledge. Many are men who have been addicted to strong drink. We have a Band of Hope, two hundred members, pledged against profanity, the use of tobacco and alcohol. Temperance meetings, held weekly and monthly, are a part of our proceedings, and the work goes on. Mrs. Belle Jones.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville.—The audience which greeted Mrs. J. Ellen Foster at Masonic Temple was one of which that eloquent and noble woman may not only feel proud, but one that did honor to the temperance cause in Louisville. Through a cold, penetrating rain at least 1,600 of the best people of the city went to hear the lecture, and they were well repaid for the trip.

The stage was occupied by a number of prominent ministers and ladies connected with the two Women's Temperance Unions in the city. It was thought that the choir from the House of Refuge would be on hand to sing, but owing to a delay on the street-car line they did not arrive in time. The audience joined in singing the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' Name," after which Dr. Willits led in prayer.

Mrs. Munnell, president of the W. C. T. U., introduced Mrs. Foster, who spoke upon "The Accretions of Time," making three divisions of her subject, "The Brutality of the Rabble" and "The Mistakes of Citizens" and 'The Necessities or Exigencies of Political Parties." She first told how everything had been slowly working up to the present temperance movement through the cycles of ages, and how step by step science and religion had brought the alcohol question to a point. She then took up the second head, and said that the character of the population makes total abstinence a necessity. There are men who do not know that alcohol is poison; do not know the effect it has upon them or their children. For this class prohibition should be made compulsory. All railroad and other large corporations are becoming great total abstinence societies. When an applicant comes for a position he is asked if he is a drinking man; if he takes a drink now and then; if so, they do not want him. This is not because the road superintendent cares more for one man than others, but because he must look out for the trains in his care, and must have men he knows are reliable and can always be depended on. And you can't depend on the man who drinks. Why, the other day I heard of a distiller that declined to hire an engineer because he admitted that he took a drop now and then. They wanted a sober and reliable man. Insurance companies won't insure men who drink heavily because of their great mortality.

The brutality of the rabble has done more to aid the cause of prohibition than anything else. Crimes committed by people under the influence of liquor are the most atrocious. Then no class of men are so often or so openly breaking the law as the liquor seller. I have nothing to say against these men as heads of families, as husbands, as fathers or brothers; but as liquor sellers they are law breakers and outlaws, and should be treated as such. I say put down the saloon, and there will be no place to obtain the poison and no drunkenness. She then related in a peculiarly graphic manner how ten years ago her home had been burned to the ground, the work of incendiaries, members of the common rabble, because her husband had dared prosecute them for violating the prohibition law. But they did not hurt the cause any. That act has done more for the temperance cause than anything the rabble could do, and perhaps it had more to do with my appearance here today than you think.

The questions of prohibition and temperance were then considered from a political point, and prohibition was put forward as the ground upon which the next presidential battle should be fought. After showing how free trade would not do to fight over, she explained why every true republican and every good democrat should rally round the prohibition flag, while the bad ones could rally round the beer keg.

Mrs. Foster closed by speaking for the women of this city. There are two woman's temperance organizations here, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union—the one composed of wives and mothers, the other of daughters and sisters. There are no nobler women in the city than these. Give them your assistance. I appreciate your kindness to me, and love you all for it, and I know you love me—but please show it by helping these two glorious organizations.

That the large audience was pleased with her address was evidenced by the frequent applause, and that it was thoroughly interested by the fact that, although the lecture lasted two hours, not more than a dozen people left their seats before its close. Mrs. Foster will visit the legislature at Frankfort this week.

IOWA.

Grinnell.—We have been both entertained and profited by the labors of Miss Lucia E. Kimball, national superintendent of Sabbath school temperance work in the W. C. T. U., amongst us.

She has been for several years engaged in this department of work, with wonderful success.

Sabbath, Jan. 13, we had a union meeting of all the Sabbath schools, and all were invited in the afternoon. Her illustrations were apt and to the point, many from the Bible, comparing intemperance to the giant Goliah, etc. She held the children in rapt attention for over an hour, and also the adults.

Her practical lessons on the poisonous nature of alcohol were highly instructive and convincing.

In the evening a union meeting of all the churches was held in the same house, and the large audience room of the stone church was filled to overflowing at both meetings. Her address was forcible and convincing, carrying her audience with her.

Both of our local papers highly commended Miss Kimball's work, and I quote a few lines from one:

"The excellence of her address cannot be overstated in words. The style of her argument convinced her hearers that the half has not been done in the matter of gospel temperance, especially in the matter of the thorough training of the young. Here is the hidden power by which the land is to be carried for temperance." Monday morning by special request of President Magoun she led the devotional exercises at the college chapel. Her Bible readings are touching and tender. From here she went to Newton, and held two meetings there Monday. We invited her to return and be with us Wednesday. In the afternoon she addressed a woman's meeting. A large number were present, and she gave us an earnest and practical appeal and many useful hints and suggestions in regard to plans of work in Sabbath schools and amongst the children and youth. At four p. m. she addressed the young lady students at the college. In the evening we had a temperance conference meeting, which was opened by Miss Kimball with Bible reading and prayer, after which she talked in her easy, conversational way. Questions were proposed and answered to the edification of all present.

Her praises are universal, and we certainly have enjoyed a rich treat in her labors in our community. We trust that the influence thus exerted may be felt in the years to come, and that the good seed sown may bring forth fruit an hundred fold, and that it may stir us up to renewed energy to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. One great need of the hour is a more thorough training of the children and youth in temperance principles not only in Sabbath schools but in public schools and wherever they can be reached, that in the future we may have men of courage, men who will meet the requirement of Garfield's standard: "Men who have the courage to look the devil squarely in the face and tell him he is the devil." ## NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Plainfield.—One of our dealers in liquid fire is said to have made $7,000 last year. He did not give us the moral footing up however. The Band of Hope are working wisely. They have a class for instruction in sewing and all kinds of fancy work, mending and darning, for which the ladies charge twenty cents a lesson or six for one dollar. The members of the Band had a grand holiday festival with a large tree filled with good things, and speeches by Rev. Mr. Yerkes and Rev. Mr. Raymond. Mrs. Vanderbeck and her associates are looking after the boys as well as the girls temperance wise. The W. C. T. U. of this city are also at work. A pretty town in this state has been no license for two years, but now a change has come. The licensing of hotels and saloons is thought necessary for the public good, so three men distinguished for temperance and good character, for a consideration were permitted to open a saloon. One of the fruits of these respectable legalized destroyers of the bodies and souls of the tempted, was, the turning out of doors at night this bitter cold weather, a wife, whose husband bought his frenzy at the rum shop of one of these legal demonizers. A kind neighbor took her in and the man was arrested.

"Oh, people torn and rent
By this foul Oligarch's intent,
Where are your statesmen: have ye none?
Souls on whom the light hath shone,
To see the perils of the time,
And with a hero's heart sublime,
Strike at the Drink power, ere we all
Go down, as goes a broken wall."

English and Mabee are hard at work in our state and the red ribbon army are standing to their colors. It is emblematic of the precious blood which alone can redeem the soul and body of the inebriate. It is stated on good authority that we have a governor who will regard the will of the people as supreme law, and if the people want prohibition he will not say them nay. Want it? Yea, the cry comes from thousands of broken hearted wives, husbands and children, with tears and groans—"Give, O, give us prohibition, ye rulers of our state!"

Millville.—The W. C. T. U. committee on petitions reports that they were most favorably received by the citizens generally, scarcely any one objecting or refusing to sign. The petitions bear the signatures of the mayor and all the councilmen, the marshal and all the policemen, the members of the board of education and all the teachers, the pastors of the churches, and the physicians, except one. The merchants and manufacturers, the glass-blowers and other tradesmen were almost a unit on the subject, and the same is true of all departments. The unanimity was remarkable. Not a representative man, whether of the city, county, state or nation, objected, and but one professional man. And to the credit of the people, be it said, that they looked intelligently at the wording and object of the petition before singing, and the people who looked into the matter, were the people who signed.

Newark W. C. T. U. are negotiating for the purchase of a building formerly occupied as a theater which is especially adapted to the needs of the ladies with their constantly increasing numbers at their daily meetings. Ten years they have labored under crushing disadvantages, owing to want of room. We hope the good Christian people of that city will provide the needed cash for said purchase. They will receive gratefully cash from any quarter.

The skating ponds are a source of danger, not so much from ice and water, but from liquor distributed by some son of Belial to the young people,—more than one has been intoxicated and some times the boys or girls smoke the filthy cigarette. In all our pleasures Satan is on the alert.

Our state president is off on an up-Jersey tour taking observations, on the lines, planting seed for future gleaning. The revivalists Mabee and English have been to Chester and gladdened the hearts of Christian workers, and now are at Somerville trying to bring into the kingdom of our Lord the fallen and the helpless slaves to alcohol.

BERLIN.—The revival services continue with great interest. Mrs. Carr, president of Camden W. C. T. U., has been with us two evenings. A number have found peace, and many are anxiously seeking the Lord.

SEABRIGHT. — The temperance people are pushing things and they do not intend to stop short of entire prohibition of the liquor traffic.

HOPE.—A temperance reform club has been organized in this town, of sixty-three members, all in working order.

WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING.—The public meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Wheeling held in Fourth street M. E. church, Feb. 1, at three p. m., was a very enjoyable affair. Mrs. T. T. Hutchinson, president, presided. The meeting was opened with the usual devotional services, and good music gave a pleasing variety.

The first address was by Dr. D. A. Cunningham, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, which was listened to with close attention. He rejoiced in the fact that there was such an organization as the W. C. T. U. in our city; it had his heartfelt sympathies and prayers. He referred with pleasure to the establishment of a temperance lunch room in our city, and said the good already accomplished by it, was such that it would be a matter of regret if ever the work had to be abandoned.

Rev. E. S. Hart, of the Disciples church, then made a happy little speech. He referred to his connection with the W. C. T. U. in Illinois and Ohio, and said some of the best scenes of his life were in this work. He then spoke of the ravages intemperance has made in our land, robbing the church of its purity and glory. It has taken the brightest minds, it has put bribes in the hands of judges, it has even dragged ministers from the pulpit. So the ladies have fittingly inscribed on their banner, "For God and home and native land," saying, God helping us, what may we not accomplish for the uplifting of mankind?

Dr. J. E. Smith was the next speaker. He said: I suppose all men, and especially ministers, are ready at all times to say something for temperance. Everybody who knows me, knows that I am a radical on this subject. I hate conservatism. Conservatism on the temperance question means surrender. Conservatism sent Daniel to the lion's den; it sent the Hebrew children to the fiery furnace. Conservatism on the temperance question means compromise. No Christian man can have any such feelings. This temperance work has been like the waves of the ocean—it has ebbed and flowed—but each time the waves came back with greater force. There have been mountebanks in the work, and there has been a class which thought the church did not go fast enough for them, and so they denounced it on all occasions.

Now is the successful age in the temperance work, because it builds on the solid rock of religion; it believes in prayer to God. That demon which is ruining the world is met by this other power, the W. C. T. U., which is for the defense and protection of home. The destroyer on the one side, met by the Savior on the other side, met by this power which gathers together the wrecks of humanity, and reaches down and brings them up to the platform of Jesus Christ. In physics as in morals, works the least significant are the most important. If you wanted to know how to form an island in the middle of the sea, and would ask men how you should do it, they would suggest that you take earth from the hills and rocks from the mountains and put them down into the sea. When God wants to make an island He builds differently. He takes a little insect and puts it in the bottom of the sea; age after age it works on, quietly, but surely, till one day the keel of a ship scrapes over something, where the chart shows no obstruction; and soon an island rises above the highest wave, an island on whose soil the monarch of the forest rears its head. So, if you go and ask the men who have all their wealth in the liquor business, what they dread most, they will tell you votes. But a quiet little woman walks down the street—you never dream of any power there. Ah, that quiet little woman has a faith that takes hold of the arm that moves the world.

These women of the W. C. T. U. are working like the coral insects; praying at home, influencing the minds of husband, brother, lover, friend, training the minds of the children, till they grow to hate the very name of liquor—till a sentiment grows that moulds the legislation of our country. No; not least among these influences is this W. C. T. U. They meet every week for prayer to God to help in overthrowing this evil. History repeats itself. Twenty-five years ago, cries and prayers were going up to God from His children in bondage. Abraham Lincoln wrote the proclamation which emancipated three millions of people. The groans and tears which are now going up for release from the bondage of intemperance will be heard by the God of Sabaoth, and total prohibition, forever and ever will be His answer.

Before the closing hymn was sung, Dr. Smith read a note just received by the secretary, from our noble friend, Mr. Henry K. List, of this city, stating that he was called away by the illness of a relative, but insisting that a collection be taken for the W. C. T. U. work and giving twenty-five dollars himself to start with. The doctor told the people they could follow this worthy example by giving their contributions to any of the members of the W. C. T. U.

After the hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Clancy.

CALIFORNIA.

From Tustin we learn that their union, organized September 13, 1883, has grown from 6 to 15 members, meeting twice a month. An effort is being made to introduce temperance instruction in schools. Temperance literature is being bought, read and circulated. The cause seems advancing in that community.

Hueneme reports a good meeting on anniversary day, the union and Band of Hope taking part in the mass meeting of the evening.

Mrs. Fulton, president of the San Bernardino W. C. T. U. writes an interesting letter in the midst of family affliction. She has our sympathies. This union was organized by Miss Willard last spring and has twenty-five members. Good work is being done with temperance literature by their zealous and efficient superintendent of that department. Mrs. Fulton says: "We have, with the aid of several clergymen in town held a union temperance service one Sabbath evening of each month. We have had many discouragements but believe that if we weary not in well doing, we shall in due season reap the reward of our labors. The work which needs to be done is very great, but the laborers are few."

OAKLAND.— The W. C. T. U. met at their rooms on Monday, Jan. 14. Mrs. Sublette, the president, opened the meeting by reading the 147th Psalm. Several ladies from eastern cities were present and a goodly number of the members were in attendance. Arrangements were made for the organization of the cadets of temperance, and a committee appointed to take the matter in hand and see it carried to a successful issue. It was reported that ten dollars had been appropriated from this union as a thank offering to the National Union in commemoration of the woman's temperance crusade. A committee was appointed to see that temperance text books were introduced into the public schools during the year. Delegates were appointed to attend the temperance convention to be held at San Jose, Feb. 8 and 9. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the ladies present:

WHEREAS, Intemperance exists to an alarming extent in our country, bringing in its train poverty, disease and crime, and whereas the dealers in intoxicating drink are filling our prisons and almshouses with their victims, and claim the right to sell, though it makes thousands of men demons, thousands of wives more than widows, thousands of children more than orphans; and whereas, they have banded themselves together to control the political affairs of the state and nation, and to dictate who shall make and enforce our laws, and even who shall sit in the seats of justice, therefore be it

Resolved, That in this contest now being waged between the forces of temperance and intemperance, in which the present and future welfare of country, and of home is at stake, woman would be false to herself, her home, to society and to her God, if she stood idly by and made no effort for the triumph of the temperance cause.

Resolved, That we urge every woman to strive by all laudable means to create and foster a temperance sentiment in the community, and especially to instil in the minds of the young temperance principles so that when those who now do battle for the right shall have passed away, there shall come upon the stage of action a generation temperate, pure and brave, over whom evil habits, and organized wrong can have no power.

Resolved, That we strongly recommend the introduction of temperance text books into all our schools as an efficacious means of influencing the young in the right direction, and that we urge on those having the charge of the religious and mental training of our youth the importance of impressing on their minds the danger of indulging in alcoholic beverages.

After singing the temperance doxology, the meeting adjourned for one month.

CANADA.

The Hamilton (Ontario) Young Ladies' Christian Temperance society is evidently a live institution, judging by the good works it is conducting. Last year it had 300 children under instruction, and distributed 8,620 leaflets to children. There were 88 deposits in the girls' sewing school, and 50 in the boys' night school. A temperance library of 57 volumes had been bought. The sewing committee reports at present a staff of nine teachers, besides a superintendent and a lady to take charge of the work. 130 pupils are on the roll, of whom 97 are bank depositors. 135 boys regularly attend the night school. Many of them had to begin earning a living at a very early age, and some of them, 15 or 16 years of age, do not know their alphabet. The boys show great application to their studies, and a growing self-respect. A balance of $34.37 is shown in the report of the society's treasurer.

MONTREAL.—The Dominion Temperance Alliance of Canada held its annual meeting Jan. 26 in Great St. James street M. E. church. Miss E. W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Prof. G. L. Foster M. P., of New Brunswick, were the speakers from abroad. A magnificent audience assembled, and the enthusiasm reached a high point.

The first addre s after several resolutions, etc., was made by Miss Greenwood. Of this address Prof. Foster said: "I congratulate you upon the splendid oration to which you have listened, in which beauty and strength of language, grace of delivery and power of thought were combined in a manner that noman can hope to attain."

Prof. Foster also made a convincing and logical address.

Sunday evening 3,500 people were packed in St. Jame street church to again listen to Miss Greenwood, and many were unable to find standing room. On Saturday she addressed 800 children, representing the Montreal Bands of Hope, and Monday gave a Bible exposition in the Pearl street Baptist church. Of these meetings the Montreal Herald says: "Miss Greenwood's discourses are a rare treat; she is at once a most pleasing and commanding speaker."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The recent two weeks' tour made through our state by Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston, was eminently successful in every respect. She was greeted everywhere by large and enthusiastic audiences, and won all hearts by her clear reasoning, earnest appeals and rare eloquence. The universal testimony was that her addresses were above criticism. Through her efforts, weak unions were strengthened, new ones were organized at Plymouth, Newmarket, Lake Village, Whitefield, Plymouth, Laconia, Tilton and Suncook and over three hundred new members were added to our list, and thirty-nine dollars to our state treasury. But not until "the unfoldings of eternity" shall we know the result of the deep undercurrent of interest and responsibility in this great question of the day that has been awakened among our thinking people by her timely coming among us.

She was accompanied by the state corresponding secretary who assisted somewhat in the organizing, and also formed a union of forty members at Meredith.

C. R. WENDELL.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

TALEQUAH.—Mrs. Emma Molloy has been working here in the interest of temperance. We have struggled bravely against this evil for a long time, without seeing much accomplished, but God has wonderfully blessed us within the past three months. We raised money and sent for Mrs. Molloy; she came, and the result is, the whole country is stirred on the subjects of temperance and religion. Many drunkards have been reclaimed. I am so anxious to help keep all these dear souls and the only way to do it is to keep them at work. There is plenty to do, and we are doing something and desire to do more. MISS KATIE ELLETT, Rec. Sec.

ARKANSAS.

TEXARKANA.—Under the direction of Capt. J. F. Linscott a W. C. T. U. was organized in Texarkana, Texas and Arkansas, January 7, 1884.

At that meeting there were five ladies present. They consecrated themselves to the cause of temperance. They have met weekly, praying for God's blessing and power. The interest is growing. The union now numbers fifteen. A club of ten subscribers is being made up for THE UNION SIGNAL. Arrangements are on foot to organize a Band of Hope. We are trusting in God.

MISS ABBY WHITCOMB, Sec.

NEBRASKA.

LOUP CITY.—A W. C. T. U. was organized here Tuesday, January 22, in a most pleasing and satisfactory manner, with twenty-one members. We have a field for labor unexeelled, and surely the work has been undertaken none too soon, for the demon, King Alcohol, has indeed a strong hold upon our community. We have one satisfaction, however, and that is that his hold has been loosened in less favored communities.

ALLIE C. WILLARD, Cor. Sec.

NEW YORK.

TROY.—On the afternoon of Dec. 22 the W. C. T. U. held a delightful and solemn meeting. Mr. J. H. Kellogg was present and made an address pertinent to the occasion. A check for $50 was received from Mr. Frank Thomas (a bequest from his wife, the recent president) One tenth of this amount was added to the smaller offerings handed in, and the sum of $20.55 was sent to the National treasurer.

On the 20th of January Miss E. W. Greenwood brought the subject of scientific temperance instruction in our public schools before a large congregation in Rev. Mr. Farrar's church. Many school commissioners and educators were noticed among the audience. Miss Greenwood's portrayal of the evils of intemperance brought tears to many eyes, but in agreeing to the remedy which she pointed out, nearly all present were willing to rise to show their faith that temperance teaching in the public schools would be a power for good.

The annual temperance meeting held by the ladies of Troy was of great interest. The jail report for the year, and the pledges signed by a large number gave evidence of labor rewarded.

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY.—Our county convention was held on Thursday, Feb. 7, in Jamestown, the metropolis of the county. During the forenoon the delegates were received at Temperance Hall.

After a devotional meeting conducted by Mrs. J. H. Clark the convention was opened at two p. m. by the county president, Mrs. M. Bailey. An address of welcome was given by Mrs. E. H. Danforth, president of the local union. Response by Mrs. E. Putnam of Ellington.

We have seventeen unions and most of them reported earnest aggressive work in the lines of National plan.

All who had been circulating the petitions to our legislature for scientific temperance instruction, reported pleasing success, being seldom refused a name.

An interesting letter was read from Miss B. B. Heaslitt, our sister who is "organizing" in central New York.

The evening sessions opened at 7:30 with a crowded hall. Short miscellaneous exercises, music, recitations and Band of Hope songs were followed by interesting reminiscences of crusade days, given by Miss Stevens of Fredonia, and Mrs. M. Bailey of Jamestown. These are the pioneer W. C. T. U's., as from here Dio Lewis went to Ohio ten years ago.

Dr. H. L. Hubbell and Rev. W. G. Williams gave their testimony to the great good already done and that yet to be accomplished by the W. C. T. U. and sounded a clear note for prohibition.

Thus ended a pleasant and profitable convention.

PENNSYLVANIA.

FREEDOM.—Our union is only a little more than a year old and we are not very strong yet in numbers, yet we are encouraged to go on, knowing that we are doing something for the Master and that our labor has not been in vain. Our most successful work is among the children. Every week we can see there is more interest manifested. The Band of Hope is ten months old and numbers about one hundred and thirty; the infant class numbers fifty-two. It meets every Sabbath afternoon and there is always a good attendance. We have also a young men's league and young ladies' union. We distribute Cook's papers in our Band, raise money by collections taken at each meeting.

We find there is much to be done to interest parents, as many of them are opposed to total abstinence, thinking their children can use some intoxicating drinks moderately without harm.

We circulated petitions for constitutional amendment, that is about all we have done in the way of influencing legislation. But very few of our women desire the ballot. They need light on the subject. I trust the time will soon come when they will consider the matter rightly as it may be the only way we can reach the desired end.

ANNA JACK.

COLORADO.

LONGMONT:—A splendid audience of Longmont's best citizens, greeted Gov. St. John in Dickens opera house. Not many of them had ever seen him before, although everybody had heard of him, and knew something of the grand fight he has made in his own state of Kansas against the liquor traffic. Naturally there was a strong desire to see and hear the man, who has gained a national reputation as a temperance worker.

Ex-Governor St. John is one of the most forcible and convincing speakers to whom it has ever been our privilege to listen.

It is not putting it too strongly to say, that his argument for constitutional prohibition is absolutely unanswerable, backed as it was with such an array of facts with which he was personally familiar. Prohibition has proved a grand success and an inestimable blessing in Kansas. Why then should it not prove equally successful and beneficial in Colorado? Can anybody tell?

The ex governor also addressed the ladies of the W. C. T. U. in the Congregational church.

ILLINOIS

EXECUTIVE MEETING OF FIFTEENTH DISTRICT.

Most enjoyable and profitable was the session of the Fifteenth District Executive held in the hospitable home of their dearly loved and highly venerated president, "Mother Jenkins," at Georgetown, Jan. 29. Broad and deep were the foundations laid for the work of the present year in this district. Justly do Mrs. Jenkins and her loyal women feel that their adoption of the practical financial plan adopted by six districts last year (of which the fifteenth was one) and recommended for adoption throughout the state at the Alton convention, has put them on a sound working basis. At their last annual convention the district voted to raise $1,000 for state and district expenses. This entire amount was apportioned among the twenty-nine unions of the district at this executive meeting in amounts so just and equable that there is very little probability of shrinkage, and Mrs. Jenkins expects to raise $200 more from territory now unorganized. Evangelistic, juvenile and young ladies' work, camp and grove meetings were given especial attention in the deliberations of the executive. Mrs. Jenkins is planning to hold gospel meetings of two or three days duration, with each union in her district, and proposes to have a camp or grove meeting in each county. Twenty of the twenty-nine unions in the district have Bands of Hope, and many more are to follow. As several fairs are held annually in ths district it was decided to have each union appoint a committee to see that all liquor is banished from the grounds; that premiums are not offered for domestic wines, and that suitable literature is provided for gratuitous distribution.

In the evening a public meeting was held in the Quaker church. The evening was very unpleasant and the notice short but a good audience gathered. Miss Mary Pratt, of Hoopeston, and Mrs. Eliza Cain, of Danville, made telling speeches, so enlisting the interest of those who heard that nine ladies and seven gentlemen were enrolled as members of the Georgetown W. C. T. U. and the hearts of the almost discouraged faithful few wonderfully cheered. As Mrs. Jenkins writes of this executive so may it be said of every W. C. T. U. executive convention or other meeting in our state; "The meeting was very much blessed to us, and we are having a great addition to our membership."

CARLINVILLE.—Our union has sustained a sad loss in the death of Mr. Chas. Sewell, which occurred on Friday Feb. 1. Mr. Sewell signed the pledge about five years ago and entered heartily into the temperance work. Three years ago Charles Holt organized the first Reform Club here and Mr. S. was elected president, continuing in that office as long as his health would permit. About that time also, under the labors of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, he also made a profession of religion and united with the Presbyterian church. His life since that time has been a consistent Christian one. Generous and sympathizing he was always ready to assist the unfortunate. No sacrifice was too great for him if he could only help some poor fellow to break away from intemperate habits. To the W. C. T. U. he was a most faithful friend, one on whom we could depend; a constant attendant at our gospel meetings, and ready when called upon to add his testimony to the blessed influence of the reform work in his own life. Our hall was appropriately draped by the Reform Club and W. C. T. U. uniting in the work.

Our union is still "holding the fort," sometimes discouraged, sometimes hopeful, always trusting. The way out of financial difficulties was opened today by a friend, husband of one of our sisters voluntarily assuming the payment of rent for the hall for one year. May the Lord prosper him.

MRS. S. S. HUNTER.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—The number of unions reported since the annual meeting is as follows: First district, 1; fifth district, 2; sixth district, 2; eighth district, 1; ninth district, 2; eleventh district, 2; twelfth district, 4; thirteenth district, 1; fourteenth district, 1; sixteenth district, 1; seventeenth district, 6; eighteenth district, 1; total 24. —Mr. Alexander Cooper is doing good work in Sheridan. Twelve men came forward for prayers the first night of his work Send applications for him to headquarters.

—A Y. W. C. T. U. was organized at Vandalia Feb. 11, with the following officers: Mrs. Nellie Brown, president; Miss Josie Fitzgerald, secretary.

—Mrs. Jennie S. Baldwin, Perry, is now the treasurer of the twelfth district.

WYOMING.

LARAMIE.—The W. C. T. U. hold weekly meetings which are well attended, and much interest is manifested. Arrangements have been made for a visit and lecture by Governor St. John, of Kansas, and steps taken to provide for some religious instruction and exercises for the convicts of the penitentiary, if the consent and co-operation of the United States Marshall can be obtained.

Communications were received from the Red Cross Champions and the Good Templars accepting their invitation to co-operate with the W. C. T. U. in endeavoring to secure temperance legislation and in advancing the interest of temperance generally. These organizations have, as we are informed, sent petitions to the legislature upon this subject.

UTAH.

THE semi-monthly literary and musical socials of the Ogden, Utah, Library and Reading Room Association are proving not only edifying but extremely interesting in every other way. The library opened with about 200 books, and since then additions have been made in various ways, which raises the number somewhere in the neighborhood of 400, a rapid increase for so short a time. Of the great good which this praiseworthy institution is making, no one need ask a question, and all praise is due to the ladies of the W. C. T. U. and their willing coadjutors in effecting its establishment and conducting it so successfully.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE temperance work of the south goes bravely on. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson have gone to attend W. C. T. U. conventions in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, and Florida; Miss Henrietta G. Moore, of Ohio, to help organize, and Mrs. Angela C. Davis, of Cincinnati, a most magnetic speaker, is working in Alabama in the interests of the W. C. T. U. Thus the best gifts are brought to the altar and the hearts of the dear women everywhere are awakening to labor for the salvation of home.

A GRAND temperance revival at Garrett City, Indiana, had its climax, recently, in raising a splendid prohibition pole, from which now proudly waves an elegant prohibition flag, with a beautifully wrought W. C. T. U. streamer. The occasion was full of enthusiasm and long to be remembered. It will be remembered that Miss Jennie Smith and Miss Sherman but recently set this glorious reformation going in Garrett City.

IN reply to Mrs. Dr. J. C. Thomas, state president of Maryland, the police commissioners, state that they have no power to appoint matrons for police stations. They promise however that women under arrest shall only be searched by women, and that in future a different conveyance shall be provided to carry women so sentenced to the jail. A step in the right direction which we hope is a token of better things to come.

MRS. MARY F. SHIELDS, of Colorado Springs, visited Wyoming, New Mexico and Arizona territories, under a commission from Miss Willard, and in four weeks held conventions in all three, so that at the Decennial celebration "not one faileth" was the fact as to every state and territory of the nation, the W. C. T. U. being organized in them all.

A Y. W. C. T. U. was organized at Georgetown, Ill., Feb. 5, "For which," writes the district president, Mrs. Jenkins, "I praise the Lord. I have great confidence that it will be a tower of strength to the work in our town. This is the first Y. W. C. T. U. in the fifteenth district, but, God helping us, we will have many more before the year closes."

MRS. J. H. JOHNSON, whose pungent articles are so familiar to readers of the Freeman, has been appointed vice president at large for West Virginia, a woman thoroughly devoted to the temperance cause, and whose ability is equal to her zeal. She will do work that will tell. We shall doubtless hear of many new organizations.

THE W. C. T. U. of Maryland, have prepared an appeal to the legislature, now in session, asking that a law enforcing upon the public schools of the state, introduction of text books upon hygiene and nature, and effects of alcohol upon the human system, be enacted.

VIRGINIA, Richmond, W. C. T. U., is active in juvenile and other work. Mass meetings were held two weeks in succession with encouraging results. All forces are uniting in the effort to secure local option.

A NUMBER of new unions have been formed in North Carolina. Miss Newby is expected to work through the state, and a special request comes for a visit later on from our national organizer, Miss Moore.

CARLINVILLE, Ill., Band of Hope is thriving under the leadership of Miss Lawson. An entertainment recently given by the band realized fourteen dollars and a large increase in interest.

FRANCIS MURPHY will hold Gospel meetings in Mrs. R. G. Peters' $25,000 "W. C. T. U. Hall," Manistee, Mich.

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Signal Notes.

ACCORDING to a Chinese tradition it rained gold for three days after the Emperor had forbidden the use of intoxicants.

EIGHT of the cities of Massachusetts voted against the granting of liquor licenses. In some of the towns that had tried license, they went back gladly to prohibition.

EVEN conservative Spain is about to extend the franchise. King Alfonso, in his speech before the Cortez, recommends giving the ballot to all citizens, who pay taxes and can read and write.

AT Plainfield, (N. J.), applicants for license to sell intoxicating liquors must advertise notice of their intention to make application, and the notice must be signed by the freeholders who favor the petition. Many of those signing applications use an "X."

Pilgrim's Progress.

A large edition of this intensely interesting and instructive book has been placed at our disposal by the publishers, and we are enabled to offer it to ou subscribers at a wonderfully low price.

The author's biographer, speaking of the circumstances under which this book was written, says:

Although cut off by his protracted confinement from all opportunity of public preaching, he was, in the overruling providence of God, more extensively useful than while in the enjoyment of unfettered liberty; for having during his leisure hours exerted the extraordinary talents with which he was endowed, he produced the PILGRIM'S PROGRESS—a work which has been more extensively circulated, and done more good in the world than any other book except the Bible alone."

The great popularity of this book is shown in the fact that it has been translated into every language on the continent of Europe.

It should be in every family. Parents can give no better instruction to their children than by laying before them a copy of this excellent book.

Sunday School and Band of Hope Teachers and Superintendents cannot do better than supply each scholar with a copy.

Board covers, 127 pages, printed on small but very clear and easily readable type on white paper.

THE PENOGRAPH.—For more than thirty years inventive genius has industriously labored to produce a perfectly automatic fountain pen. Numerous devices, possessing various degrees of merit, have been patented and extensively sold; and most of them have worked splendidly till one or more of their delicate parts gave out and had to be repaired. But all defects hitherto encountered have been remedied in what is termed the Penograph. In the Penograph all small and complicated contrivances are dispensed with. Although the pen appears to be small it will write just as well as the largest. It is capable of producing the finest hair lines as well as heavy shaded strokes. The pen is of solid gold, first quality diamond pointed. With fair usage it will last a lifetime. The case is vulcanized rubber, handsomely finished. In our opinion the Penograph, as illustrated above, is well calculated to supercede all other writing pens and pencils in daily use. Its flow of ink is automatic and free, but never too profuse. It sheds ink when in use and stops when the pen ceases to move. It needs no wiping and no dipping for ink. It is carried in the pocket always ready for use on any kind of paper. It costs no more than is usually charged for a first class gold pen and holder without the fountain. It is fully warranted and may be returned if it fails to meet the expectations of any person who shall read the above. Price $3, postpaid. An extra pen will be given to any subscriber who shall send us $9 for a club of three Penographs. All postpaid.

We offer the above Penograph as a present to any one sending us four new subscribers at $1 75.

Miscellaneous Selections.

"My own observation has shown that when parties are addicted to the free use of beer, their powers of resistance are much reduced when attacked by disease." —Dr. W. C. Richardson.

A company has been organized in Copenhagen, with a capital of 100,000 crowns, to furnish coffee and eating houses in which good provisions will be furnished at low price. All liquors will be banished from them.

Since the sale of liquor was prohibited in this town five years ago, the amount of trade has increased from $200,000 to $500,000 and there is not one merchant in thirty who would not vote (on purely business principles) against the reinstatement of the liquor traffic.—Carrollton (Ga.) Enterprise.

When the liquor dealers assembled in Quincy, Ill., in what they call a "protective association" for the maintainance of their rights, one of the first things they did was to make an attack on the churches' A certain Hon. E. H. Turner declared that the churches did more injury to mankind than all the brewers and distillers ever did. It is natural, appropriate, and in every way fitting, that men who are engaged in the liquor business should attack Christianity, advocate Sabbath breaking, and give aid and comfort to all the lawless and dangerous elements in society. We are glad that the temperance fight is so hot that these outlaws are compelled to hoist their true colors.—Advance.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 9. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 29, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

BRITISH Columbia has just enacted school suffrage for women, and made them also eligible as school trustees.

BUFFALO liquor dealers have combined to boycott every man of whatever occupation, who opposes their traffic by heavier tax or legal restriction and prosecution.

SWEDEN has a law that we commend to legislators desirous of reaching the drunkard but not the manufacturer and seller of drink. By this law, a man drunk thrice, loses the right to vote.

THE senate of the Iowa legislature has passed the Donnan bill restoring the original prohibition of wine and beer to the prohibitory statute, already in force forbidding the manufacture and sale of all distilled liquors, and providing for the application of suitable penalties to all infractions of the law. The fight begins this week in the lower house. Pray mightily all good people.

THE Duke of Albany seems a most enlightened princely personage. In a recent speech on public education he pleads for the introduction of the teaching of cookery in the national schools, commends the wide extension of the coffee house system, and urges the early training of English children in habits of economy and frugality as a direct flank upon the great enemy drink, "drink, the only terrible enemy whom England has to fear." These are rare words from such a source, full of prophecy of the day when kings shall reign in righteousness and princes rule in judgment.

APROPOS to the above is the "open letter" sent out by the W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, commending Miss Juliet Corson "as a practical teacher of cookery" and "her beneficent work in leading women to give more attention to the preparation of good and wholesome food," but protesting against the use of wines and spirituous liquors in cooking.

L. L. D.—THAT honored affix tolerated by even eminent men, when all other titles fail, is said by the Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, to signifiy in these latter days of class legislation and oppression, League of Liquor Dealers. He deprecates the unmeasurable power of this institution which he designates as the "power of margins over masses." Even the Chicago Tribune applauds his characterization of this insolent dictator to parties and governments, and calls upon American statesmanship municipal, state and national to abandon the policy of ignoring "this tremendous liquor question." Is this said also among the prophets of prohibition?

THE New York Herald grows funny over the anomalous case of a law-breaking saloon keeper haled to justice in the city courts and punished to the limit of the law. Sunday selling was the offense upon which the judge sentenced the offender, one Sandy Spencer, to the penitentiary for thirty days and imposed a fine of one hundred dollars, saying as he did so: "It is not a very heinous offense, but it is one that must be met by proper punishment." The Herald says:

> It were bootless to inquire by what extravagance of despotism Spencer had incurred his fate. Whether he had refused an eleemosynary drink to the patrolman, or refused in the pride of his heart to square the Captain, or thrown his influence against the successful candidate for alderman in his district, he has fallen under the ban of the law as if he were a mere citizen engaged in an ordinary occupation and taking no interest in politics. A liquor dealer in jail is the modern and New York counterpart of Lear in the storm, of Napoleon at St. Helena, of Charles I. with his head off.

SOME "wise saws" of the ancient Chinese have come to light. They not only deserve a using at this day but serve to point and emphasize the fact that modern science is only reviving "the thing which hath been." For instance take "Wine is a poison, passing through the heart," and read it by scientific light alone; place beside it Dr. Richardson's researches concerning the destructive effects resulting from increased action of the heart induced by the alcohol of wine. Read it in he light of morals additionally considering the black list of crimes, springing from hearts debased and crazed by its use, and it becomes still more a modern truism. Here is another:

> First, men swallow wine, then the wine swallows wine; last wine swallows men.

And the saw may be freely rendered as follows:

> First the man takes a dram,
> Then the dram takes another dram;
> At last the drams take the man.

Could any epigram be more appropriate or complete?

THE Dutch in America are hoping to take Holland yet again. The only temperance society in the United States, carried on by Hollanders is an institution of this city, numbering over sixty members, all tried and true. Gradually it is winning its way in the Reformed church, pastors of this denomination coming long distances to speak as earnest temperance advocates under the auspices of the society, to the large gainsaying constitutency of the church. A deputation has been sent out to a suburb of the city called Roseland, inhabited by a large Dutch population, and there a new society is in process of organization. An invitation has been sent from Roseland asking that a W. C. T. U. be formed there also. In this work, the prime mover and "persevering saint" is Mr. George Berkhoff, a Hollander of the best type, physically, mentally and morally, whose faith and works have wrought mightily to the pulling down of the stronghold of ancient customs and steady practice.

In this connection it is pleasant to note the fact that the Christian Herald, a religious weekly published by a Christian physican, Dr. Oggel, in Pella, Iowa, and in Hollandais waits the help of temperance people to become a temperance missionary to the Hollanders of this country, and so to supply a want as yet unfilled by any periodical in the language. A few hundred dollars placed at his disposal now would enable him to send the paper gratuitously to the homes which will not invite it by subscription. It would be a valuable instrumentality and the only one that is now at our service.

WE have been led to think that only King Gambrinus disputes with Kaiser Wilhelm the empire of Germany, but it appears on good authority that King Alcohol himself shares the imperial throne, the government being largely interested in the manufacture of whisky, and, in fact, the entire nobility of Germany, as far as it has any real-estate interests, being interested in liquor distilling.

The Berliner Tageblatt, a prominent liberal organ, in speaking of the spread of whisky drinking all over Germany says: "If there are any devils, the whisky devil, this product of modern civilization, cannot be the least important, for he has ruined more human existences than any other Beelzebub before him. The effects of whisky, whose production keeps our very pious and religiously-inclined high-tories quite busy—they call whisky distilling a branch of agriculture—are far worse than the effects of any other vice. Perhaps opium may be still worse, but this drug is fortunately still comparatively unknown in Germany. But all the more familiar with us are the symptoms of delirium tremens and the preparatory stages of alcoholism. Wherever Germans, especially North Germans, go, they are sure to be followed by this most terrible visitor, whisky."

The battle closes in around kingdoms as well as republics—in confederate Switzerland, imperial Germany, and democratic America. The blessedness and best of all is, that this battle is not ours, but God's.

"THE UNION SIGNAL."

BY MRS. L. H. WASHINGTON.

I've read its latest number through,
Eagerly, as I always do,
Rejoicing that there is unfurled
A Signal true, to all the world,
Warning, that doom and ruin stand,
At door of "Home and Native Land."

I've paused o'er many a cherished name,
Have viewed the wondrous gentle flame
That melts all creeds to pliant mould,
Formed when the blessed Master told
Who should accounted worthy be,
Even those who "did it unto me."

Although the hour be late at night,
I take the pen and haste to write,
(Even while midnight oil must burn),
That dear old workers all may learn,
Of one who went ten years ago,
With firm resolve to face the foe;
Who ne'er has learned the cause to yield,
Though changed her home to distant field.

One who through screened or prison door
Saw visions, all undreamed before,
Who learned anew the power of sin,
As these dark haunts she entered in,
Sweetly sustained by Him who gave
His precious life from sin to save.

What hath the crusade done for me?
Shown doors of opportunity;
From restful home of quiet ease,
Where friends, and self, I wrought to please,
Led out to heights grand and sublime,
Displayed new charts for life and time.

As now I glance adown the years,
Recall the songs, the prayers, the tears,
In church, in prison, and saloon,
What wonder there has come so soon
To be one mighty praying band,
Whose faith and works circle our land.

As I have read the annals through,
Recalled the old, received the new,
Which span the wonderful decade;
The then and now of our crusade,
The record glows with this one thought:
Behold the wonders He hath wrought!

The prayer of faith, it does prevail;
We gathered then at marts of sale,
We 're coming in this later hour,
To plead our cause in halls of power;
And while we come with voice of love,
Bearing the emblem of the day,
We also rear on banners high,
Our matchless eagle of the sky.

Shall the proud pinions trail in dust,
That hover o'er each sacred trust?
Remember, mightier than the sword,
Is declaration of our Lord:
The nation that forsaketh me,
That nation shall forsaken be.

BEER—THE FATAL BEVERAGE.*

As Spurious as Oleomargarine, and as Deadly as Prussic Acid.

BY JACOB SPAHN.

These, then, are the circumstances:

In 1877, having some money to invest, I became a stockholder in one of the large breweries of the city of Rochester. This city is noted, among drinkers, for both the supposed and the alleged purity and excellence of its beer. A number of men had grown rich from the sale of the article there, and various companies for its fabrication were making money fast; so the outlook for myself and my investment appeared very prosperous. And during all this period I labored under the impression that what was put in the market by these lucky people and flourishing concerns, for general consumption, came up to the extraordinary claims made in its well patronized behalf, and was in all respects whatever it was alleged to be by the industrious venders and the affluent producers.

When the brewing company in which I invested was organized, my colleagues among the stockholders thought well enough of me to elect me into the board of directors, and these in turn thought so highly of me as to make me the secretary of the corporation, which, at that time, was looked upon as a flattering promotion. I had, prior to this, officiated for years as the attorney for several other breweries in the same beer-noted locality. My acquaintance with certain branches of the business was therefore extensive. My acquaintance with the personnel of the beer industry at Rochester was indeed complete. I had access to various of the breweries at all hours. But I never improved the opportunity thus obtained for rigid inspection or scrutiny of anything in or about the manufacture of beer, and what information has since come into my possession concerning American breweries, their products and their methods, fell to my lot in a manner most casual and accidental. But nevertheless it fell to my lot, and now I control it as absolutely as anything else that ever came under the purview of a man's five senses. I feel, moreover, just as positive in relation to my beliefs, convictions and utterances (any boisterous assertions from beer parties in interest to the contrary notwithstanding) as any man would feel who had seen, touched, smelled and tasted the particular article in dispute; who had watched at divers times the various stages of its decoction (this expressive term is used advisedly); who had inspected the material ingredients of the same, and who had heard frequent and damaging admissions concerning these very ingredients from brewery functionaries connected with that concoction, and so was in an indisputable position to know all he related.

I might state that up to six weeks ago I was what is generally understood to be, in convivial circles "a moderate beer drinker." I am a moderate beer drinker no longer. In fact, I do not touch the beverage at all. And this after a daily indulgence in the same stretching over a period of several years. While possessed of no affinity for total abstinence and even while on record as a partisan of the liquor traffic, I stand today in the anomalous position of a man assailed for his convictions by that very traffic because he has raised his voice against the dishonest methods by which the brewers of his own locality impose a spurious, harmful and dangerous beverage upon the confiding consumer. These brewers are now formally charged with the adulteration of their staple by one of their friends and former firm allies. He has arraigned himself against them, their system, their wares, their false pretenses and their decoction, and become totally abstemious, on the merits of the case, and is, with due consciousness of the magnitude of the encounter invited, ready at all times and places to display the courage of his convictions upon the baneful industry.

Let me detail how the singular revolution occurred. About the month of June, last year, I was unaccountably taken down with nervous prostration, coupled with an asthmatic difficulty—a trouble in breathing that rendered my nights sleepless and alarmed me to the extent of consulting a physician. I had had spells of the same kind before; none, however, so protracted and alarming. I did not know to what to attribute the same. They were apparently unaccountable. The man of medicine, when called in on the last occasion, sounded me, found all vital organs in good health, and learning that I was neither a smoker nor a drinker of distilled liquors, but knowing that I took beer daily, startled me by holding that the mild and seemingly innocuous refreshment was alone responsible for my then serious physical plight, and had been the cause of every previous attack. He advised me to give beer up instanter! Did I obey? No. I was certain he erred. Besides, I had the firm assurance of brewers whom I informed of the cautious doctor's advice, that there was nothing in beer conducive to sickness, even when beer was partaken of in excess—mark, dear reader, that! So I threw the injunctions of physic to the winds, though I reduced the amount of beer I took daily to nearly half of what I had been accustomed to take. But my symptoms persisted. Indeed, it would appear that in proportion as I reduced my daily allowance of beer, the horrible asthmatic difficulties increased. I grew less capable of mental and physical exertion, until one evening during the present winter there was an attack, apparently superinduced by an effort to drink a cup of beef tea, that so nearly approached strangulation that a domestic was hurriedly dispatched for a physician. The symptoms of this attack were convulsive, a spasmodic contraction of the bronchial tubes, a disturbance of the function of swallowing, with a blanching of the complexion, profuse perspiration, and a trembling of the limbs, much akin to that marking the awful paroxysms of tetanus and hydrophobia. The doctor soon came, made what seemed to me a perfunctory examination, addressed some questions and advised—what?

Total abstinence from beer. He was not the physician whom I had consulted for the first attack.

"Why total abstinence from beer?" I straightway asked him.

You see, dear reader, the pleasantly consolatory assurances as to the the purity and harmlessness of beer made to me by the brewers were still fresh in my memory, still rang in my ears, and still owned my belief and confidence, and I avowed as much. But the doctor, with a quiet smile, dispelled these agreeable fictions.

"My dear Major," said he, "the beer brewed nowadays is bad. Strange stuff is put in it. It's no longer water, hops and malt. Avoid it as you would a noxious drug. It is, in the main, drugs; as bad as any poison, and you'd better not have recourse to it for adipose or stimulation. If you want to live long in this world, if you want to enjoy good health, you must cut beer out of the list of things you eat and drink. It is, as now fabricated, the deadliest foe to the resisting powers of nature against disease that human ingenuity has ever devised."

"Is this actually your conviction on the subject?" I exclaimed.

"Emphatically," he answered. "You are suffering from nothing but bad beer, spurious beer; and to prove it I will prescribe, not medicine, but abstinence from the deleterious mixture. You must wean yourself entirely from it and you will grow well again. A little exercise of will power is all the prescription you need; exert that, and speedy restoration to health follows."

He departed. I was thunderstruck. Then I became thoughtful. Finally I grew puzzled, for the physician himself had often partaken of the beverage in my presence. At this juncture packages of strange goods came into my mind—packages I had observed in various Rochester brewery shipping offices during cursory business visits—bales, boxes, barrels of stuff seen time and again. The vision of one particular brewery office whose aspect was more like a chemist's laboratory than the sanctum of a functionary who superintends the simple operation of steeping a mixture of hops and malt and pure water, arose before my mind's eye. There suddenly flashed upon me the solution of all that puzzled me. Everything strange was accounted for. The otherwise inexplicable bales of quassia wood, the big parcels of hemlock bark, the bundles of tannin, the barrels of grape sugar, the packages of bi-carbonate of soda, which was fashioned forth in molded morsels shaped each like a candy lozenge—one per barrel of beer, to make it froth—the quarts upon quarts of salicylic acid and glycerine, the hundredweights of isinglass to render the stuff translucent, and the strange recommendation of head brewers whenever hops and malt raised in price, that substitutes for these must be used till their price again fell to a figure commensurate with the market rate of beer by the barrel—all this I vividly recalled. It dawned upon me with a significance never possessed before.

I understood the doctor now. I saw stretched out before me a gigantic traffic from which a dozen men of my own good city of Rochester were rising into ill-gotten affluence—a traffic that ramified over the national domain and was alike dangerous to health and to life—a traffic

* The real character of beer is being carefully considered in many quarters. In the latest issue of the American Reformer, published in New York city, there appeared the following highly significant article, by a leading German lawyer of Rochester, for several years one of a large brewing company, declaring beer a deadly beverage, and giving his personal experience. The Reformer proposes to get at and to make public the bottom facts on this question, and invites all interested to contribute information, whether it helps the beer interest or hurts it.

founded upon the same species of vulgar fraud, imposition and false pretence as that upon which is reared the vending of quack nostrums by itinerant street charlatans. Then I sold my stocks in the brewery and raised my voice in the public press against the concoction of beer. After but two communications published in the Sunday issue of the Democrat and Chronicle, the entire Rochester brewing industry was stirred up and in arms against me. The concerns incriminated gathered like a fester, and broke forth into a circular whose evasive, slippery and unsatisfactory provisions I shall take the liberty of discussing in a future communication. This document was promulgated to set at rest the honest doubts I had created about the purity, the harmlessness, the desirability of beer as a beverage. Here is the circular and of it more anon :

A STATEMENT FROM THE BREWERS IN REGARD TO IMPURE BEER.

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIR—There have appeared in the Democrat and Chronicle scurrilous articles, signed by Jacob Spahn, reflecting upon the lager beer manufactured in this city, and, while we hold such mean concoctions of falsehood, malice and stupidity in utter contempt, we wish to make the following statement for the information of the public: None of the articles mentioned, such as glucose or grape sugar, quassia, aloe or any other spurious material enters into the manufacture of our beer. We are ready at any time to submit samples to any reputable chemist for analysis, such samples to be taken by himself out of our stock, which is now at no time less than 50,000 barrels, and during the busy season is increased to about 85,000 barrels. These figures will be sufficient to prove the falsity of the insinuation of beer lacking proper time for fermentation.

The general enactment of a law of supervision for beer, in the same manner as is done under the statutes of the German empire, would in no way meet our opposition, nor would it cause the least change in our manufacture, because none of our methods in brewing interferes at all with the strictest requirements that could be laid down for the production of a beverage thoroughly healthy and beneficial in its use, and even without any dangerous consequences in its abuse.

All of the above we are at any time prepared to verify by affidavit. and in conclusion, and to cut short all further controversy, which, as citizens well known in the community, we deem beneath our dignity, we agree to pay the sum of $1,000 to any person who will prove that any of the above-mentioned articles are used in our brewery, or to any person who will demonstrate their presence or that of any deleterious substance in our beer.

In further proof to the public that our beer is all we claim for it as to its purity and healthfulness, we shall invite Prof. Lattimore to analyze the product of the different breweries and publish the result of his analysis.

"FOUND DEAD."

BY MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

I had been keeping watch with a sick child, a bitter January night. The air seemed all ice, the sky was moonless, starless, and dark. The side-walks like glass, so frozen were they, and the few who were abroad at midnight, wisely deserted them for the car tracks.

How glad I was when it was daylight once more, but recalled with a shiver the dreariness of the night when I read in the local column of a morning journal a paragraph, headed, "Found Dead—Unknown—An inquest was held, the coroner's verdict, Died of exposure and intemperance."

Some additional comments there were—a few cents in the vest pocket, a newspaper advertisement, a fragment of a letter in a woman's writing, evidently from a person of culture. some traces of manly beauty on the face, notwithstanding the marks of dissipation—and—that was all. I watched for the sequel; it came: "Not having been identified or claimed, the young man who was found dead in the streets on the night of — was buried at the expense of the city." We all know what kind of burials are these!

"Died of intemperance and exposure." It should have been, "Murdered by rum." We think sadly of the heights from which he came step by step to such a strait. Cared for by a woman of culture—"once"—ah! once, loving hearts shrined him. "Unknown," save by God and His angels, and yet there may be somewhere a home where he is still watched for—we cannot tell. "Still some traces of manly beauty on his face"—the face on which once kisses have been pressed—once a pure child-face.

Perchance as life's sands ran out that winter's night, a touch of the Holy Spirit may have moved to prayer the anguished heart, and back on the winter wind may have come the answer, "Thy sins are forgiven thee!" And who can tell but the peace of the forgiven may have left on the dead face something of childhood's rest and purity shining out through the marring and blighting of the rum-fiend's seal. "Dead, and unknown!" Alas for the nameless graves, the blighted lives, the broken hearts!

Similar announcements are not rare in our dailies and weeklies, and yet they seem to make so little impression on the great reading masses. I wonder why we should not collect all such items, some in each state and bring them out in such a form, as to rouse, convict, convince with these facts, the thoughtful public, of the humanity at least of putting away by law the evil traffic, which has written of so many, who, but for this might have been good, loyal, useful, and great—"Found dead!"

A PROTESTANT SAINT.*

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

It was a heavenly day in June 1876, wearied by the "through trip" from Chicago we went out to Skaneateles to spend a few days with dear Fannie Barnes and her mother whom we had never seen. My friend and benefactress, Miss Kate A. Jackson, who shared and brightened my earlier temperance fortunes, was the companion of this charming visit. In and out among the vallies wound our train until it reached the pearl of New York villages, which keeps perpetual picnic around the curve of its lovely lake. In a roomy, old-fashioned mansion, with blessed elbow-room of trees, was Fannie's life-long home—her father having been a merchant of the village time out of mind. Here I met a delicate-faced, fragile-formed lady of fifty-seven whose kind eyes, gentle smile and hair of fine-spun silver were enough to ensure love at first sight in all well regulated hearts. At the first glance I named her "Saint Letitia," and she will always wear that name for me, both here and yonder.

We spent the memorable "Centennial Fourth of July" in the sweet home of this sweetest of women. Bright and early the "Coldwater Army" assembled at the W. C. T. U. reading rooms to march thence to the park where the oration was to be given. Each little girl had brought a button hole bouquet to be worn by the boys, but those ungallant, crude little souls declared (after we had duly decked them out with the flowers), that they "wouldn't have the girls march with them!" Here was a dilemma! The women had bought fife and drum and prepared the uniforms; Mrs. Barnes had made an elegant great banner with "Peace on Earth Good Will to Men" emblazoned on its white folds. The girls had brought their floral offering, and now the boys had shown this pitiable spirit. The little girls looked grieved and many a lip quivered, but no protest whatever was made. "March on boys, beat the drum, wave the banner, forward march!" This was the order given, and the sturdy youngsters strode into the middle of the street. But when their long double column was duly in motion, I turned to Saint Letitia, gave her my arm, took to the street, and these girls needed but a wave of the hand to follow us which they did in good order with faces wreathed in smiles, and thus the new century had one prophecy at least! Think of it! The soft folds of that gray silk gown, the Quaker bonnet, the silvery hair, and gentle face of this dear mother in Israel, this "birthright member" and "Elder" of the "Friend's Society," adorning a military procession with its rattling drum and screaming fife, all for the sacred sake of home, upon centennial day!

Softly she explained to me from within that overshadowing bonnet, "Thee knows that Friends don't believe in fighting and some would blame me, but this is the Lord's army and because it is so women must be soldiers, so what could I do but stand by thee and the girls?"

From that time she was a heroine to me, a sister thrice beloved. The years have come and gone, "the ripe, round, mellow years," and we have often met. That home has been a place of rare refreshment to my spirit. Its very atmosphere was love and peace. The silent communion of family prayers; the twilight talks; the busy plans, all lie embalmed in blessed memory. By the pleasant mill-pond path, along the shady road and in the fragrant garden I see that winsome figure gliding quietly on some errand of good will. Everybody knew her; the Irish Catholics pronounced a benediction as she passed; German beer drinkers bowed to her with reverence; little colored children smiled their love; the rich approved her and the poor adored. I never heard one word of detraction from her lips of any human being. Censoriousness was abashed in her presence; envy and malice were paralyzed; her whole atmosphere was love. Dear heart! she was yet to be made "perfect through suffering." Upon her whom unspeakable tenderness would have shielded, the worst of human maladies fastened its relentless fangs. Cancer searched out the springs of her sweet life and fed upon them. How she strove to hide her great calamity; how she smiled and talked of other things; how she hoped and prayed and left herself with God. Repeatedly, in December last, I saw her. In January I learned that, without anesthetics, and without a murmur she had submitted to the knife; insisting upon the operation, and when her dearest ones could not write the summons to the physician, writing it herself with steady hand and smiling face. When the ghastly wound in her breast was healed, and new hope was in all hearts, she gently passed away while sitting in her chair asleep, with her only daughter's arm around her and her cheek resting in that daughter's faithful hand. They were all alone together, Mr. Allis and Willis Barnes having gone for help when it was seen that her breath grew intermittent, and I can think of nothing on earth more heavenly than that loving young heart so near to that faithful, weary one, as it grew still. Dear Fannie writes me thus: "We sat together, quietly, until my husband came in and then gently laid her on the bed, and as I looked upon that still form and saintly face I said aloud, 'She is the bravest and the gentlest woman that I have ever known.' Oh friend, if you could have seen her courage, her calmness, her sweetness and cheer through the wearisome and painful days of that dreadful operation you would have said that she was rightly canonized a Protestant saint."

What shall we say of the daughter who was at her mother's side during the surgical operation, at the hour of death and through all the process of embalming, never once leaving her until the beloved casket of a royal soul was laid away in the earth?

Because Letitia Allis was the finest type of W. C. T. U. woman with whose life I was intimately acquainted I have written this In Memoriam, and cannot better conclude than by transcribing from her daughter's private letter some account of the blessed closing scene—so different from the regulation funerals of those who have known less of Christ as a life principle and of love as a law:

"Before we left New York a few near friends gathered at our home and the venerable Rebecca Collins, (now honorary president of the city W. C. T. U.) spoke in her tender way and prayed, and all the while as we arranged everything, I could hear my mother saying in her gentle way, 'That's right, dear children, just right.'

"It was night when we arrived at Skaneateles, the lovely village where mother had invested all her life work. About fifty persons, men, women and children, were at the railroad station, with bowed heads, silently testifying their sorrow and their love.

"The snow lay white and thick upon the ground, the hearse was on runners, there were no bells, not a sound but the crunching of the white snow as slowly the little procession came to the dear home. The new moon shone through the parting clouds far down in the west; all was white, silent and peaceful. It seemed like a real journey to the realm of the blessed, until we entered the house, which seemed yet so full and warm with the mother-presence that it nearly crushed us. The next morning we put about the dear form the soft white material she had saved at home for the purpose. Then the people began to come to offer sympathy and to look upon the peaceful face which had not changed since you saw here only grown more placid and calm in death.

"We arranged seats for over two hundred persons in our home, and before we had taken our places the people began to come. Men, women, and children, the lame, the halt, the blind, the rich and the poor,—there never was such a gathering in Skaneateles. Mother had asked us not to send for any ministers out of town, but just to invite the home pastors and not to have long eulogistic services. She said if not a word was spoken she would be as well pleased, for if her life, and her silent body did not speak, words would be vain.

"I suppose there were over four hundred persons present; the house was packed from the dining room to the upper story, and many went away after both piazzas were filled, and all were so quiet and respectful.

"Mr. Thame from the Society of Friends offered prayer and then spoke briefly upon the words, 'The greatest of these is charity.' Mrs. Brown, a cousin of ours, after a few moments of silence spoke as if by inspiration; I never heard such words, and all were deeply moved. Then Mr. Preston took for his text the words, 'Thy gentleness hath made thee great.' (Changing one word from 'me' to 'thee';) The Baptist minister followed briefly, and then the Lord gave me strength to deliver mother's message to the people. A few days before she passed away, I was reading to her the beautiful 14th chapter of St. John and after reading the 21st verse, ('He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him'), mother said, 'That verse, dear, is enough of itself,' and bowing her head she wept for several moments and then said, 'Oh, how I love everybody; all here in New York who have been so kind, and every body at home, and every one in Skaneateles,' adding, 'there is not a man, woman or child in all the village I could not go to and put my arms around and say, I love thee in a Savior's love.' As you may know there was not a dry eye in all that company; every one seemed completely melted in love and sorrow. A brief prayer closed the exercises, and the long quiet procession over the gleaming snow wended its way to the village cemetery just as the pale pink light of sunset shed a faint glow over all. The ministers of all the denominations were here excepting the Episcopal, who was not well, but he sent a beautiful letter of regret and sympathy. The Catholic priest and many of his parishioners were here. One old woman whose husband committed suicide from drink (and at his funeral mother sat beside her, as one of the chief mourners, and the only benediction to the occasion, as the priest would not officiate) when looking at dear mother wept as if her heart would break. There were old men and young men and boys whom mother had helped into the right way. One very old man who had been a hard drinker since boyhood until about six years ago when by mother's efforts and the grace of God he became a changed man and now, although over eighty years of age stands true after a lifetime of dissipation. Another fearful drunkard two years ago by her gentle ministries came to Christ and is now a devout and pious man. Great tears ran down his cheeks when he heard her message of love.

"And now, precious friends, I have written a long, rambling letter, put together any fashion, and with so many interruptions I hope you can read it and pardon what may seem common-place, for it has been impossible in the weariness of the flesh for me to describe what has been so crowned with spiritual presence and blessing."

Beloved sisters of the W. C. T. U. this "Protestant saint" was our sister and fellow traveler a little while ago. God help us to be not all unworthy such comradeship as hers!

THE CAPTURE OF YOUNG MANHOOD.

Dear Union Signal:—The heading which you were so kind as to give my letter of January 3, suggests the question: "How shall we capture young manhood?" It is evidently desirable that our Y. W. C. T. Unions should be the happy medium through which we shall reach and hold the sons and brothers in our households for temperance and all that blessed word is coming to mean. We invite young men to membership, but we shall be wise if we give them some work to do. I have watched the countenances of young men attending our meetings for the first time and I think their thoughts were something like this: "What shall I do in a Y. W. C. T. U.? I wonder if I'm to be useful or merely ornamental?" Now the kind of young men we want in our unions will not be satisfied with being mere figureheads, they want to help and the question is, How shall they do it?

The Philadelphia Y. W. C. T. U. lately revised its constitution and bylaws. The following is an extract from its article on membership: "Young gentlemen may become members by signing the constitution and paying the membership fee. They shall be entitled to vote, to act upon committees and to be members of an advisory board when the union deem it expedient to create one."

Their ladies hold all the offices but they have gentlemen as chairmen on their important committees: Petition work, temperance news, and ward work. Now this has brought a few young men into their union heart and soul and there is very little doubt about the kind of voting they will do the rest of their lives.

In their ward work they are employing all the good canvassers they can secure for temperance papers. When the chairman secures lady canvassers he has their work superintended by the ladies on his committee; other canvassers he superintends himself and their work is reported monthly to the union. Will not other Y. W. C. T. Unions tell us what ways they have found for enlisting the interest of young men?

Mrs. Watson, state secretary for Pennsylvania wants me to write something once a month for Y. W. C. T. U. work in your paper. I want to help all I can, but think I had better not "do all the talking" on this subject and so hoping to hear from others engaged in young ladies temperance work, I am yours very truly,

Rose E. Patten,

A GIRLS' HEREDITY INSTITUTE.

Dear Union Signal:—I have been asked by Dr. Burnett to write, as a supplement to the heredity leaflet lately published, a short account of the starting of a girls' heredity institute, and of its practical working. It may contain suggestions for other girls who are interested in the work but do not know definitely how to engage in it.

Last November four of us made the beginning of our club by putting together all our spare money—it amounted to about fifteen dollars—and buying a few books on Heredity and Hygiene.

After a few of those books had been carefully perused, and we felt a capacity for imparting some of the knowledge thus obtained, we invited thirty or forty of our girl friends to spend an evening with us to discuss health questions. It was not difficult to arouse the interest of the girls in a subject so important to each one, and that very evening our institute was formed. Most of the young ladies joined then. We appointed officers in the regular way, adding a librarian to the number of officers suggested in the Heredity Leaflet. Each member became entitled to take out any book, as from a regular library, and to keep it from the time of one meeting to another. As none of us know very much about either Heredity or Hygiene, the "Health Circulating Library" gave opportunity for individual study, and now forms quite a feature of our society.

The books which we have found to be of the most value are Mrs. Shepherd's "Physiology for Girls," "Heredity," by Ribot, and Blacks' "Ten Laws of Health." We have also been much helped by the lessons prepared by Dr. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., which she has been kind enough to send us. We also obtained from the "Alpha Moral Education Society," of Washington, a number of valuable pamphlets and essays upon heredity, marriage, and parentage.

Since our first meeting we have held about half a dozen regular meetings. We have had either a doctor or a medical professor to lecture to us, or original papers read by members of the Institute. Our topics have been: "Womans' Dress," "Motherhood," "The Care of Health from Youth to Old Age" (a lecture kindly given us by Dr. Richardson of the Pennsylvania University), "The Great Sympathetic System of Nerves," "The Care of the Skin," "Bathing," and "Pure Air and Good Ventilation."

We find that the subjects of heredity and hygiene go hand in hand, and we have now arranged to have a course of lectures from Prof. White of the Woman's Medical college, upon physiology and hygiene.

The meetings are held in the afternoon. Our membership fee is fifty cents, and the fine for absence is ten cents. We are only waiting for a little more money to supply ourselves with casts and engravings and other apparatus suitable to help us in our studies. Every member of the institute is urged to bring her friends with her to the lectures. We have aimed particularly to interest girls who expect to teach, especially kindergarteners.

We are in correspondence with several girls in different parts of the country who desire to form similar clubs.

From our experience, we should say that it is not hard to start these institutes among girls. Once present the subject to them in an interesting and attractive way, lend them a few books to read, and the work is done. And it is the young girls of the present generation, the mothers of the next generation, with whom it is most important to work. If they understood the practical laws of heredity, if they ordered their lives in conformity to nature's highest teachings, the best work of the Women's Christian Temperance Union would be seen in the future race of strong, pure-blooded, healthy men and women.

THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

Dear Union Signal:—The executive committee meeting at Indianapolis was the first ever held by the National W. C. T. U. save in connection with its annual convention. Owing to the distance to be traversed and the expense of time and money involved we had barely a quorum. Miss Willard, Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Woodbridge, Miss Pugh, Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Lathrap, and Miss Mary Allen West were present. Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Nichols, Mrs. Woods, Mrs. Balch, Mrs. Campbell, Miss Lodie Reed, Miss Anna Gordon and others were in attendance, and were invited to sit with the committee, participating in its deliberations, but without a vote.

"Guide me, O thou great Jehovah," was sung; prayer was offered by Mrs. Wallace and Miss Willard and letters of regret for absence read from various members. Mrs. J. E. Foster, who had been invited to attend was prevented by engagements at the east. The subject of the Great Petition to the political presidential conventions and congress, asking for national prohibition of the liquor traffic, was thoroughly gone over, and notwithstanding the time that has elapsed the sentiment of the majority was that the decision at Detroit could neither be reviewed nor over-ruled, and that the general officers should issue the great memorial without delay.

The W. C. T. U. of Indiana had made excellent arrangements and a fine opera house meeting was held addressed by Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Miss Willard and Miss Mary Allen West. Mrs. Wallace made a most eloquent address of welcome. The Episcopal Bishop of Indiana (Bishop Knickerbocker) conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. Wells presided in her usual happy manner. Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, our National Superintendent of Temperance Work at Fairs, presented a lovely floral shield to Miss Willard on behalf of the five hundred children of the Band of Hope in the city. Choice music was rendered by leading vocalists and the only omission was that of a collection, hardly an orthodox procedure in a W. C. T. U. meeting. The local union entertained the executive committee at lunch in their fine and successful restaurant and every courtesy was shown the "visiting states (women)" for which all thanks are herein rendered by

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

NATIONAL LICENSE VS. STATE PROHIBITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Aurilla Furber, in one of your past issues, raises the question of "National License vs. State Prohibition," and asks for information.

If proper for me to volunteer a word, please allow a little space, for this shall be brief.

That "license" from the United States is not a license but the receipt for the payment of the special revenue tax collected by authority of a law of our congress, off the business of selling intoxicating liquors, either at wholesale, retail or by druggists, and varies in amount according to the kind of traffic carried on, and has the same force and effect as any other receipt for the payment of a debt or tax on personal or real property or both, is evidence of the payment barely, and affords no protection to the holder against the violation of a state law prohibiting or regulating that traffic.

State laws, fundamental or statutory, are classed amongst police regulations, like the prohibition and regulation of the use of other poisons or explosives, quarantine, safety valves, sewers, flues, escapes, and all other laws for the protection or preservation of life, health and morals, and are not only the privilege, but the duty of the conservators of those vitals of the body politic to make ample provision, and are left to the states to determine as they deem best for public good, and are so recognized by the United States courts.

These questions have often been carried to the United States courts in different forms and from different states, including the Mississippi lottery case, and always with the same result.

In fine, to repeat and summarize, the "license" referred to is no license at all, but a bare tax receipt, and has no effect upon the enforcement of state laws.

The 5th Vol. of Howard's U. S. Reports is fruitful in decisions upon this question in various forms.

The prohibition of the importation of intoxicating liquors has been decided by that court in the same way.

Fraternally, LORENZO WESTOVER.

ON THE WING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am so constantly "on the wing" that I do not always have the opportunity to see your cheery face and do not know how fully you may be supplied with news from Pennsylvania.

We are rapidly organizing our forces and drilling our troops for a victorious battle before our next legislature, for not only the submission of a prohibitory constitutional amendment, but also for a scientifice temperance law for our public schools. Organizers are now hard at work all over our state organizing local unions. During the months of November, December and January, I, as state superintendent of work before teachers' institutes and normal schools, found all my time occupied in institute work, presenting normal methods of teaching scientific temperance in public schools before teachers' county institutes.

Let me say right here, as indications of the progress of temperance sentiment among our teachers, that of twenty county teachers' institutes to which I was invited to give a lecture before the institute in this state, in all but two cases I was paid for my service by the county superintendent of schools out of the public funds for teachers' institute, the same as he paid his instructors in arithmetic, reading, school government, or any other instructor of the course, so that I came before the teachers simply as a normal teacher to give instruction to teachers, rather than a temperance fanatic representing an outside organization, and begging a little time at the hands of the institute. But a recognized institute instructor in temperance would not have been a possibility in our county institutes five years ago.

During the last month I have been engaged in lecturing and organizing W. C. T. U.'s in the central counties and anthracite coal regions of our state, which latter territory is considered the most desperate portion of the state. I have had crowded houses every place I lectured, the most prominent men of the community attending, although the counties where I lectured were largely inhabited by a German, Welsh, or Irish population, and have organized two new unions in as many days. In fact, during the last three weeks I have organized a union every place I lectured where they did not already have a union. On last Tuesday I organized a Welsh union in the afternoon, six Welsh preachers being present to encourage the ladies to organize. Yes, Pennsylvania is moving onward and her day of victory is not far in the distance. NARCISSA E. WHITE.

IN MEMORIAM.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wrote you yesterday that our young friend Lewis Skelton could not survive many days without some favorable change. The great change, so sad for those left behind but so glorious for him, occurred last night at eleven o'clock, after an unconscious period of about an hour. Up to that time his mind was perfectly clear, and the few words he was able to utter were in the same pleasant manner, always thoughtful for others, so characteristic of him. He was entirely resigned to the prospect of death, and said some days before, when speaking of his wakeful night hours, that Jesus was very near to him. We know that all is well with him. But words are poor to speak the grief and utter desolation of the bereaved wife and mother. Only little Eardley is happy, because too young to know his loss. It is too soon to say what will be the plans of our dear Mrs Skelton. Bravely she worked on and bravely her children denied themselves of her presence for the work's sake, till finally friends and physician said she must come. A telegram found her in the midst of work in southern Illinois. On the next train, without means for the trip, she started for Chicago, where the open hand of noble Mrs. Hobbs was ready to meet her with means for the trip to California. Just four weeks of companionship robbed of its joy only by his suffering and their forebodings of the future, and then came the end. His last visit out was to our home three weeks ago, when he came for some music. With violin in hand he sat listening to old familiar works, performed often by the orchestra to which he had belonged in Toronto, Can., and often he rose and played a few strains till too weary to stand. Now he bears a grander part without any weariness. More later, H. N. HARRIS.

PAYING CEDAR'S DUES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We appreciate THE UNION SIGNAL thoroughly and consider it indispensable. Almost every number contains some article which one cannot well do without. An article in the issue of Jan. 3, by Mrs. Gov. Wallace, interested me exceedingly. The standpoint from which she argues for suffrage for women is somewhat unusual, but she presents the subject in an impressive way. I know that many women deprecate women suffrage because they consider that having received the privilege of voting it would become a duty. But Mrs. Wallace goes back of all such conscientious scruples and places the duty as a present matter upon all Christian women, making it a Christian duty to desire the ballot lest they be found opposing God's ordinances. When Christian women see that the agitation for woman suffrage must take its place with that upon slavery, Mormonism, temperance, etc., as one of the upheavals consequent upon the working out of one of God's ideas, they will be obliged to believe in it and not only accept it, if it must come, but work for it. I confess that I am no suffragist, and yet I am "not far from the kingdom" in that I sometimes think that the full success of the temperance cause waits upon the success of the other. However I approve the high ground on which Mrs. Wallace takes her stand and enjoyed her article very much indeed. HELEN C. LLOYD.

THE WORK SHOP. NO. II.

Have You a Motto?—Lynchpins—Clerk Hire—Work for the Spring Elections—Our Souvenir Fund—Silver Cup Number Three.

—Why doesn't every local as well as each of our state auxiliaries select a Scripture motto? Here is a grand one, quoted by dear Mother Thompson at Hillsboro in that never to be forgotten anniversary prayer meeting of last December "Let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people."

—Shall we not try to form the habit of specific prayer against the saloons whenever we go by them? This is Mrs. Willing's suggestion in her article on "Taking out the Lynchpins." Could we not add to this a thought of prayer whenever our eyes are pained by sight of the drunkard—prayer for those who love and suffer with him as well as for his own imprisoned dishonored soul?

—In replying to the "Sensible Questions" of a correspondent from Dakota in a recent UNION SIGNAL I omitted to mention that at Detroit the executive committee voted $25 per month to me for clerk hire. This is the first instance of the kind and is so recent that I forgot to name it, for which lapse of mental faculty I hereby offer an apology.

—It is interesting to read in the agricultural papers at certain seasons under the head of "Advice to Farmers," "About this time look out for frosts." If our W. C. T. U. workers are not farmers, cultivating the soil of human thought and sowing light that they may reap the salvation of "sweeter manners, purer laws," I do not know what our vocation is. So let me say "Look out for frosts" about the time of the spring elections. The high license craze still has its victims. Majorities for legalizing the liquor traffic are a blight which may fall at this voting season upon communities hitherto protected. What can we do? Well, for one thing, get your town paper to print that compact and unanswerable no-license argument of Prof. Geo. E. Foster M. P. in THE UNION SIGNAL for Feb. 15. Or better still, let the W. C. T. U. obtain from THE UNION SIGNAL office a sufficient number of copies of this article (which has been struck off in leaflet form) and mail one to every voter (get the poll lists from town authorities) accompanied by the strongest, gentlest "appeal of the home" that the best pen in your community can possibly indite.

—Responses are coming in to the suggestion of a "National Souvenir Fund." It was natural that the first should be from the first Crusader. Here it is:

"MY DEAR FRIEND:—How thankful I am for one precious trophy of my girlhood days with which to respond to the inspiration of our zealous southern sister, Mrs. Lizzie Johnson. It is a silver goblet also, and it has a history too! When my dear father became interested in the importation and culture of fine stock, I as a young farmeress took a wonderful interest in the 'beautiful short horns,' so in the course of time I was presented with a fine specimen in the way of a Durham heifer which I named 'Lalla Rookh' (by this you can guess my age). The gentle creature was my special care and many an extra coin was placed in the palm of our faithful 'Prince William Johnson,' (a Virginia servant of royal stamp, as black as he was honest) for his skillful attention to my pet so that she might carry off the prize at the agricultural fair. Sure enough she did so, and after all these years away goes the silver cup that brought my 'Lalla Rookh' home with a red ribbon to which was tied a card and on it 'First Premium.' The 'heirlooms' of past ages and generations in our family have all been carefully divided out among the children and grand-children. Jewelry I never wore. So this cherished 'souvenir' of joyous days, (too precious for private bequest) is just the the thing for 'the cause,' prized by me 'above rubies.' Your devoted friend,

ELIZA J. THOMPSON."

I have other delightful responses of which more anon.

WE ARE COMING.

A BAND OF HOPE SONG.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER COOPER.

We are coming, we are coming,
An army bright and strong;
We are coming, we are coming,
To help the cause along.
Our hearts are young and hopeful,
Our motives pure and true,
So, men and women, if you wish,
We'll march along with you.

Chorus.—We'll march along with you,
We'll march along with you,
So, men and women, if you wish,
We'll march along with you.

We are coming, we are coming,
Like David, long ago,
We are coming, we are coming,
To lay the giant low,
For when we cast our ballots,
He'll surely lose his head,
And on our banners we will write,
That wicked king is dead!
Chorus.

We are coming; yes, we're coming,
An army bright and strong;
We are coming; yes, we're coming,
To help the cause along.
We're proud to show our colors,
The red, the white, the blue,
So men and women, if you wish,
We'll march along with you.
Chorus.

WILLY RAYNOR'S PLEDGE.

BY A. C. MORROW.

There was a temperance guild in connection with the mission school in the town of B—— in Maine. The first Sunday Willy Raynor joined the Sunday school, it was temperance day, and he was induced to sign the pledge. The following Sunday he came to his teacher, before the opening of the school, and said:

"I want my name taken off that pledge."

That would be impossible," replied Miss Miller. "We never take names from pledges. Sit down."

During the singing, Willy took a ten-cent piece from his pocket, and handing it to his teacher, whispered:

"I'll give you that if you'll take my name off."

Miss Miller motioned the hand away.

But, during the lesson, this persistent ten-year-old boy drew twenty-five cents from his pocket, and said:

"I will give you this, Miss Miller."

"Put your money in your pocket, and let us hear no more about it."

But after the school was dismissed, and the rest of the boys had gone, this determined little lad held out a handful of change, and begged:

"Miss Miller, I'll give you half a dollar, all the money I've got, if you'll take my name off that pledge."

Then the teacher's resentment vanished, and she drew the child toward her, and said:

"Willy, I cannot do it, if I were ever so willing. You have promised the Lord, and yourself, and me, that you will never touch ardent spirits. You must not, ever. But tell me why you wish to take back your promise."

The boy hung his head.

"Fourth of July, four of us is goin' up to Valley Wood on a picnic. We always take beer. We're goin' to."

"Willy, I cannot take your name from that pledge, but you may come to my house on three o'clock Thursday afternoon, and bring those three boys with you, and I will promise you a way out of your difficulty."

There was but a vague idea in Miss Miller's mind of the "way out of the difficulty," but long before Thursday afternoon the problem was solved.

Promptly on time these boys were present at Miss Miller's elegant home, on one of the fashionable avenues. The other members of the class had been invited After the lads had enjoyed blind-mans'-buff, with numbers, and many other romping games which delight the hearts of boys, they were summoned to tea, which was served on the lawn. Such tempting biscuits, tender tongue, frosted cake, large ripe strawberries, and cool, delicious lemonade, these boys had never before tasted.

When it was time for them to leave, Miss Miller quietly requested the picnic party of four to remain behind a few moments.

"Boys, Miss Miller asked, "did you enjoy your supper?"

"Tip top," said one.

"Bully," echoed another.

"You bet," shouted a third.

Willy, the only one who went to Sunday school, who was naturally a refined lad, and had observed that Miss Miller never used any such slang phrases, said quietly:

"We liked it very much, Miss Miller."

"And you enjoyed the lemonade?" she questioned.

"Prime," said one.

"Could'nt be beat said another.

When each one had given an affirmative answer in his own phraseology, Miss Miller said:

"Boys, I've a proposition to make to you. Tomorrow you are going on a picnic. Willy Raynor has signed the pledge; he cannot drink beer, nor any kind of strong drink. It would not be manly, nor honest, nor right. Now, I want to help him keep his pledge, and I want you all to help him. So it you will promise me that no beer shall go on that picnic tomorrow, I will agree to furnish lemon and sugar, and a recipe for lemonade, just as delicious as that you had today. Do you agree?"

"Yes, ma'am,—yes, ma'am," was the the eager chorus. And one youth shouted:

"Three cheers for Miss Miller!"

They were lustily given, and the boys departed. Just as they were leaving, Miss Miller said:

"Willy, bring your friends to Sunday school with you next Sunday. We'll make room for them in our class."

The boys came, and, more than that, they all signed the pledge; but that was not the only good resulting from Willy Raynor's pledge, nor why I tell this story.

Late in September, Willy's father, who was captain of a small sloop, came home to remain a few days. The second evening after his arrival, three of his intimate friends were invited to spend the evening and play cards with him. Soon after they were seated the boy's father said to him:

"Willy, take the pitcher and run over to Jones's, and bring us a couple of quarts of beer."

Little Willy, trembling and anxious, went slowly to the closet, and took from the shelf the pitcher which he had so often brought from Jones's filled with the liquid which he had promised never more to touch nor to taste. He came back, some time after, without the pitcher.

"Willy," the father said, sternly, "where is the beer? You were never gone so long before."

"I did not bring any."

"What is the matter? Where is the pitcher? Have you broken it? Get another one; hurry up."

But Willy stood, the very picture of dismay. Something in the boy's face touched the father, and he said,

"Out with it, my son."

"I left the pitcher on Jones's counter."

"And he will send it over soon?

"I did not tell him you wanted any."

"What do you mean? You never disobeyed me in this way before, my son."

"O papa! papa!" the child said, bursting into tears, "I couldn't help it; I couldn't buy nor bring it, you know; I have signed the pledge."

Then, with tears still streaming from his eyes, and sobs almost choking his utterance, he told the story of the pledge-signing. Before he had finished, there were tears in other eyes besides his own.

"Not a bad thing to do," said Captain Raynor, when he could control his voice so as to speak. "If I had one I believe I'd sign it, myself."

"So would I," echoed the others.

"O papa! would you? Would you, really? I'll run up to Miss Miller's and get some; it is only a step."

And before they could stop him, the happy boy was off. He returned presently, with four pledges; and those four men signed them.

Improbable, do you say? Not at all. This is a true story, and happened as I have told you, in Maine.

FINISH WHAT YOU BEGIN.

My great grandmother Knox had a way of making her children finish their work. If they began a thing they must complete it. If they undertook to build a cob-house, they must not leave it till it was done; and nothing of work or play to which they set their hands would she allow them to abandon incomplete. I sometimes wish I had been trained in this way. How much of life is wasted in unfinished work! Many a man uses up his time in splendid beginnings. The labor devoted to commence ten things and leave them useless would finish five of them and make them profitable and useful. Finish your work. Life is brief; time is short. Stop beginning forty things, and go back and finish four. Put patient, persistent toil into the matter, and be assured one completed undertaking will yield yourself more pleasure, and the world more profit, than a dozen fair plans of which people say, "This man began to build, but was not able to finish." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Band of Hope Review.

ONCE a man who had been known as a great fault-finder, was observed to become cheerful and contented. When asked the reason, he said: "I used to live at Grumble Corner; but now I've moved on to Thanksgiving street. I find the air purer, the sunshine brighter, and the people better neighbors." Now, little people, if any of you live near "Grumble Corner," move to "Thanksgiving street."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I have just heard of a little hero, whom I want you to know about.

"What is a hero?" I think some of you are saying to yourselves or somebody else.

It seems to me that our kind of heroes are those who do, or refrain from doing, for Christ's sake, that which if self were to rule us, we should in the one case leave undone, or in the other, should like to do very much.

Cassibianca was a hero because he was obedient, "even unto death," when naturally he would have run away from the burning ship. Kund Iverson, of the early days in Chicago, was a hero, because rather than steal with the rest of the boys, he was drowned by them in the Chicago river.

These are some of the noted heroes, but many a boy or girl whom nobody ever heard of lives a life just as heroic as the death of these brave fellows. He who bears patiently what God sends him in the way of suffering is just as much a hero as the boy who saves his comrade from a burning building. It is one of the patient heroes that I want to tell you of this week

A few years ago he was known to me as a fair-faced, bright eyed happy boy of twelve years. He was unusually intelligent and full of ingenious play. As to his school work, I do not know so well. He may have been a fine scholar and he may not; but of this I am sure, he was truthful, honorable and well behaved wherever he was. All those fine qualities made him a great favorite, and every where he was in the greatest demand as a play fellow and friend. Very quietly a hidden disease came upon him. For a long time he kept about his work and play, but very feebly, and growing constantly worse, until for the last four years he has been lying on his bed, much of the time unable to move. Nobody has ever heard him complain in all this time. His sick room has been the brightest place in a very cheerful home. The frequent outburst of his happy heart has been: "Why, I have just as good times as the boys who play out of doors." And so he did, for his sunshine was all from within, and his good times were those of a contented soul. For weeks past he has been growing weaker and weaker. Books, pictures, and the delicate machine work with which he busied himself when he was able to handle it, all were laid aside, and still the happy smiles played on his face just as the sunbeams do on the lawn. Though he never seemed impatient to leave his suffering life and go to heaven, nevertheless when on the last morning it was told him that he was dying, he answered quickly, with a glad accent and triumphant rising inflection: "What—really?—I hope nobody will cry."

And so the brave mother held his hand and never oried. The gentle father, whose heart seemed bound up in his boy, never wearied in his cheerfulness, and the dear boy was borne on the wings of happy love right to heaven's gates, where his Savior bade him sweet welcome home.

Even his burial was more like a triumph than a sorrow. The beautiful house was adorned and thrown open as for a reception, and every thing seemed like the celebration of a victory over death. It was beautiful—it was heroic—it was just what Cnrist who conquered death would have.

Dear little soldiers of the Prevention Army, you can be just as heroic in life and death as my brave little friend whom I love to think of—and whom I will try to imitate.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

78. DOUBLE CROSS-WORD ENIGMA.

In willow, that beautiful tree;
In liar, that is not you or me;
In light, that is made by sperm oil;
In wealth, for which we all toil;
In paper, we read every day;
In arrow, that flew far away;
In pond, the delight of all boys,—
None else can explain its manifold joys.
Search through these seven words aright;
Two temperance workers you'll bring to light.

A LIQUOR DEALER'S VIEWS.

BY H. L. CHARLES.

Say, Mister Legislature,
You make an awful fuss,
An' do a heap o' talkin'
Jest on account of us;
You sometimes pass a liquor law
To please the temp'rance crew,
But allus leave a loop-hole
Ter let us fellers thro'.

You know we've got a host 'o votes,
An' know we've got the cash;
We've kind o' got you in our power—
Yer dars'nt be too rash.
Yer listen to them women folks
An' meet 'em with a smile,
But they've no votes fer ye ter gain—
Yer know it all the while.

At times yer pass some pesky law,
But soon 'tis done away,
Fer sich as bear too hard on us
We allus disobey;
'Twould save a heap o' trouble
If our advice were asked,
An' whether we'd obey sich laws,
Before yer had 'em passed.

We've only jest two things ter do,
Then rest our happy souls—
The first ter keep the women folks
From votin' at the poles.
We'll let them talk jest all they please
On ev'ry public walk—
In politics the humblest vote
Outweighs the biggest talk.

The other thing we've got ter do
Now, jest 'twixt you an' I,
Is ter keep the two old parties up,
Nor let old issues die.
We'll thus divide the temperance vote,
An' make 'em work agin
Each other, while we hold the power
And make our own men win.

"KEPT FOR THE MASTER'S USE."

BY ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

Annis Brown was puzzled! She had thought herself given wholly to the Lord, and that her offerings for His cause were all that could be expected from one having so small an income. "A tithe?" Yes, certainly! The Christian dispensation required no less of giving, at least, than devolved upon the Jews!

But really, after the necessary expenses of living were met, the tithe of what was left was not very much of an addition to the Master's treasury. Now and then conscience gave a little twinge as the question, "What are 'necessary expenses?'" forced itself to mind. And it was this uneasiness which sent her one day to the story of the first tithes brought "into the storehouse."

There was Jacob's vow at Bethel: "Of all Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee;" there were the directions to the Israelites to bring the first-fruits—"the tithes of the ground"—for the maintenance of the Levites; there was the blessing of the people when, in Hezekiah's time, they brought "in abundance" the "tithe of oxen and sheep and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the Lord their God." Everywhere a tithe of all—no mention of a reserve from which they themselves should live, and then a tithe of the remainder given to God. It is always, "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

This was decidedly a novel view of the case, a troublesome as well as a puzzling view. After a firm belief that one's purse is soundly converted, a comfortable feeling of having always been generous, and a real contempt for stingy people—after all this, you will acknowledge that it is mortifying to find not only that one has never given, but that one has actually withheld what was due—has stolen from the Lord. Add to this the surprising revelation that one is not quite willing to lay aside one dollar out of every ten received, for the Lord's service, and you will not wonder that Annis Brown was both puzzled and troubled.

But there it stood! A duty so plainly shown that she could not pass round it without entering a "by and forbidden path." "Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power." There was nothing to do but to pray for the spirit of the "cheerful giver."

The victory once gained, how delightful it was! Somehow, money never seemed to go so far before! From each payment for services, a tithe went promptly into the box on the bottom of which was written, "Kept for the Master's use."

Missionary Sunday came, and the pastor made a stirring appeal. A year ago, she had heard just such another, and the twenty-five cents which she meant to give was doubled, as a result of the eloquence, when the box was passed; but by the time she reached home, her enthusiasm had somewhat cooled, and she decided that a quarter was really all she ought to have given. But this time she knew just where she stood. She had noted the contents of her box that very morning, and the question was simply, "How much of this money does the Lord wish put into the missionary treasury?" And the two-dollar bill that dropped into the collection, knew—if money has consciousness—that that three dollars left behind were waiting till the claims of the "Woman's Foreign" were presented. Forgive her, dear brethren, that, being a woman, woman's work came a little nearer to her heart than the general work!

"What will you do for these pressing needs at home, for your sisters in Utah and the south?" asked a gifted speaker as she closed the sad story of suffering and ignorance and wrong. Oh, the thrill of joy that came to the heart of Annis Brown at the thought! "There is money to help supply this need, already waiting, 'Kept for the Master's use.'" From the National headquarters came the call for "thanksgiving offerings" for the W. C. T. U. The envelope which carried that of Annis Brown bore the text which she had just found—a fresh nugget from the inexhaustible mine, "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

And if, now and then, the account in this consecrated bank was overdrawn, can you imagine the pleasure of really giving to the Lord? I have no story to tell of wonderful inflows of money that followed the new plan. But, somehow, there was a wondrous blessing "in basket and in store," a spending power like that of the cruise of oil in Zarephath. And with this came such a sweet rest and peace and communion with the Lord, in giving, that nothing would tempt Annis Brown to go back to the hap-hazard way of giving "as the spirit moved," and supposing that she thus fulfilled her whole duty.—Zion's Herald.

OUR COOK BOOK.

Loaf Cake.—Five cups flour, 5 eggs, 3 cups sugar (granulated), 1 cup sweet milk, 2 cups butter, 1 nutmeg, 1 pound stoned raisins (best quality), 2½ tea spoons baking powder will make one large loaf. Bake in moderately hot oven.

Lemon Jelly Cake.—(Most excellent.) One-half cup butter, 1 cup sugar, 1¾ cup flour, ½ cup milk, white of 4 eggs, 2½ teaspoons baking powder. The manner of mixing is very important. First cream the butter and sugar, to this add milk and flour together, and stir these to a cream; mix baking powder in table spoonful of flour and add this and the eggs which have been beaten to a stiff froth, and stir these into the mixture slowly without beating. Bake in three layers in moderately hot oven. Lemon jelly: Beat together 1 cup sugar, juice and grated rind of 1 lemon, yolk of two eggs and two table spoons of water. Boil till sufficiently thick to spread nicely. MRS. H. H. HOFFMAN, Princeton, Ill.

Substitute for Cider in Cooking.—Pick gooseberries when they are just ripe and can them in syrup for use. I neither use cider vinegar or pickles but use the gooseberries instead. They make a mince pie much richer and better than vinegar, and are much more healthy.

The Sunday School Lesson.

MARCH 9. LESSON X. 1884.

TOPIC: PAUL AT CORINTH.

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 18: 1–17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I am with thee and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this city." Acts 18: 10.

TIME.—A. D. 52.

PLACE.—Corinth in Greece.

1. How like the magnetic needle to the pole is Paul's instant turning and attachment to the Christian family of Priscilla and Aquila in Corinth. To him there was evident comfort and support in this fellowship. No one lives independent of such ministry. If it is blessed to receive in this way, how blessed to give. Aquila and Priscilla gained more than Paul by the communion.

2. Paul's earnestness as a reformer may be gauged by his willingness to earn and pay his own way as he went from city to city preaching the new gospel. Too often reform work is entered upon by the half-hearted or the false hearted from motives of selfishness. Many men who are unwilling to earn an honest livelihood by hard work, rush into the advocacy of a cause or the advancement(?) of a reform for the money that can be gotten out of it.

Paul was so much in earnest that he could engage in any trade that would yield him support in order to the promulgation of the doctrine of Christ.

3. Not in pettishness nor anger, but in real sorrow of spirit, Paul turned to the Gentiles, clearing himself of all bloodguiltiness and responsibility for their rejection of the truth. There came great success to his ministry as if in special token from the Lord, and then the added mercy and kindness of a vision, assuring him in the very tones of the Master's voice:

"Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee." There were many souls in Corinth yearning for God's truth, and the Lord encourages him to stay and reap the abundant harvest. This was so great that for eighteen months the restless apostle, always anxious to compass the greatest amount of territory, was kept gathering into the church "such as were being saved."

4. God always fulfills his promises. Gallio, the proconsul, urged by Jewish malice to persecute and drive out the Christian preacher, is so held in and restrained from hurting him by God's care that he is scarcely able to dismiss the meddling Jews with equanimity of temper—he who was kindliness and calmness and philosophy personified. Even the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord—he turneth it whithersoever he will.

5. While not all the results of faithful labor may appear in this life, yet our Father does not permit his workers to go to their graves without some sight and sense of the good they have done, Paul, when he was ready to be offered up, knew but little of what the world acknowledges today as the most magnificent of missionary lives, yet he knew enough to be sure that he had fought a good fight, and that a grand reward of his labors awaited him.

THE greater my experience becomes," writes Dr. Claretson in the annual report of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum for the Insane, "I tend more to substitute milk for stimulants. In every acute case both of depression and maniacal exaltation, where disordered working of the brain tends rapidly to exhaust the strength I rely more and more on milk and eggs made into a liquid custard. One such case this year got eight pints of milk and sixteen eggs daily, and recovered under this treatment. I question whether he would have done so under any other. He was on admission acutely delirious and very nearly pulseless."

IT appears from the gathered statistics of the world that women have a greater tenacity of life than men. Despite the intellectual and physicial strength of the man, the woman endures longest, and will bear pain to which the strong man succumbs.

THE NEW DEPARTURE.

In accordance with the announcement made in a recent number of The Union Signal, a state normal school under the auspices of the departments of hygiene and heredity convened at Battle Creek, Mich., during the last week in January.

Although entirely a new departure, being the first "Normal" of the kind ever held, it was considered a decided success. The purpose of the gathering was to study in a scientific manner the subjects of hygiene and heredity and to introduce, through the delegates, a practical plan of work in these departments, into the different unions of the state. The great difficulty in the prosecution of work in these two departments has always been the great scarcity of proper literature for circulation and the small number of ladies sufficiently well versed in these important subjects to carry on the work scientifically. It was a desire to obviate, in a measure, this difficulty in the state of Michigan, that led the state superintendents to arrange for a few days course of instruction on these subjects to be given somewhat after the normal method and illustrative of the best manner of presenting the subject.

There were some thirty delegates in attendance. The first three days were devoted to hygiene and embraced a course of lessons on the human mechanism; hygiene of the air and ventilation; muscle hygiene; exercise; clothing; food, as related to temperance; what to eat, adulterated and diseased foods; household hygiene, and healthful cookery. The physiological processes, respiration, digestion, etc., were thoroughly explained in connection with the topics discussed, and illustrated by experiments, blackboard outlines and the manikin. The evening lectures were illustrated even more fully by means of stereopticon views.

Special meetings for discussing methods of work were held and addresses given by the state superintendents presenting the importance of these two departments in connection with our work. As a fit closing of the portion of the Normal set apart for Hygiene the delegates were invited to partake of a hygenic dinner at the Sanitorium, and inspect the various means for physical development and culture afforded in its complete gymnasium and mechanical movement rooms.

The "Heredity Normal" included lessons upon the nervous and reproductive systems; the beginning of life; ante-natal influences; heredity and the proper training of children, all of which were most ably presented and illustrated. Some of the papers read were solicited for publication in leaflet form, and can be supplied by the superintendent of Heredity in the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, Mrs. Dr. Mechem, of Battle Creek.

The lecturers were members of the state board of health, professors of medical colleges, and prominent lady physicians from various parts of the state.

As an outgrowth of the meeting the delegates decided that each should endeavor to arrange for special work in these departments in her own union and urge sister unions to do the same, by organizing whenever practicable a society, as a branch of the W. C. T. U. for the especial purpose of studying hygiene and heredity, devoting equal time to each. The societies to be known throughout the state of Michigan as Scientific Health Clubs. A resolution was also passed to urge all future state superintendents of these departments to hold, once a year, a similar Normal furthering the interests of this branch of work.

So successfully has the "new departure" been made, it is certainly no extravagant expectation that other states will speedily follow the lead of Michigan and that the studies so clearly outlined in the leaflets of the national superintendents of these two departments will be entered upon with zest in a large number of local unions.

A WORD WITH OUR CORRESPONDENTS AND NEWS GATHERERS.

A certain "fearful looking forward" to, and contemplation of the righteous indignation of certain good friends and reporters, leads the editor to these few words, written in all kindliness and with sincere regard for the interests of our cause and the paper which tries to be the exponent thereof. A few days since a report of an important meeting was sent us. It was well written and comprehensive, being a faithful transcript of the program, and only differing from it in noting fulfillment instead of promise. The report was returned with the request that the skeleton be filled out with the muscle and fibre of the performance, the "what was said" added to the "what was done." In response came a series of newspapers giving full account of the meeting, speeches and all, but involving a vast deal of work in condensing and preparing for our columns, thus depriving our readers of much valuable matter for some time to come.

Now, dear friends and correspondents will you not let this be the verbum sapienti which shall prevent a recurrence of the experience and add largely to the efficiency of our national organ. Far better than the ordinary newspaper report is your own vivid transcription ("taken on the spot") of proceedings which should be shared with the W. C. T. U. constituency. Only be sure to give the meat and not the bones of the feast.

Yet another hint, and we are done. Do not abbreviate. When you mean to say "temperance" do not write "temp."; nor "con." for convention, "sec." for secretary, or other various devices of the "short hand" reporter. You would not enjoy the appearance of the paper made up of such devices, and because of them somebody often must needs almost re-write a large portion of the manuscript sent us.

THAT was a wise decision of a Young Woman's Christian Association in England met together to consider certain grave moral questions to be discussed by parliament. One said, "We are leagued together for the abolition of laws which protect vice; we are, therefore, working in harmony with the will of God. We must have more dealings with God about it, though not less outward action." Another lady said, "It is impressed upon my mind that while we often say, 'How long, O Lord?' thinking that God is keeping us waiting, it was often the case that we are keeping Him waiting. During these fifteen years of work God has been educating us. He wants instruments after His own heart. We must be purified ourselves and fully consecrated to His will." That is the fresh kernel of truth that needs to be sought for in every hard nut of difficulty. Deal directly with the Supreme Power.

SOME local unions "snuffing the battle from afar," and not so very far, either, are circulating a voter's pledge preparatory to the spring elections. The following is a good model drawn up by a clear headed temperance lawyer, W. S. Harbert of Chicago,—we forbear to introduce him as the husband of Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert of the Inter Ocean, though he never flinches under such proud distinction:

Believing in the efficacy of law in the restriction and suppression of the liquor traffic, we, the undersigned hereby promise not to use our votes or influence toward the election to office of any person not pronounced in favor of the legal suppression of the sale of alcoholic beverages, and further, that we will so far as lies within our power, by attending primary meetings and caucuses, and by all other reasonable and proper means, earnestly endeavor to secure the nomination of temperance men for office.

In addition to this it would be well to circulate freely the No License tract offered by us, and written by that able prohibition advocate, Geo. E. Foster, M. P.

THE local unions of Chicago and vicinity have been greatly aided during the few weeks past by the Bible readings of Mrs. Stroud Smith, of Liverpool, England, who is temporarily sojourning in this country. Her simple faith and her clear expositions of the way of faith as it is marked out in the Scriptures, have been of incalculable benefit to many souls, and have strengthened the unions for service and undertaking. A prominent W. C. T. U. worker suggests that there be added to our already many-sided organism, a new department, that of Faith Culture, and that Mrs. Smith be invited to take charge of it. Surely faith is the sine qua non of all our effort. To increase that essential qualification would seem to be the great need of the hour.

Is it an unwarrantable thing on our part to hold a "praise meeting" for the wondrous mercies of our God to our dear workers. Not one of them has ever gone down with the floods; not one of them has been swept away by the cyclone, and yet their tireless feet press new soil and territory each day and hour. For their marvellous escapes too, let us praise Him whose messengers they are. A few days ago as our National Chalk Talker was returning from a trip through Kansas the train crossed a bridge on the Hannibal and St. Jo. R. R., which in less than an hour went down as the westward train passed over it. Like Whittier's mystic ship the graceful craft bearing W. C. T. U. on its pennant, feels often the impulse of "the shadowy hands" "tugging at its ropes."

THE following letter which passed through the "postoffice department" of a Washingtonian entertainment at Bloomington recently, seems to be very "true to life." Here it is:

SWAMPVILLE, Feb. 6, 1884.

MRS. G. H. READ:—I write to tell you how a very debased and ignorant looking man came in to vote in our township. Said one of the ladies, offering him a ticket, "I wish you would oblige us by voting this ticket." "What kind of a ticket is that?" said he. "Why," said the lady, "you can see for yourself." "But I can't read," he answered.

"Why, can't you read the ballot you have there, in your hand, which you are about to vote?" asked the lady. "No, said he," "I cannot read at all." "Well, said the lady, "this ballot means that you are willing to let the women, as well as the men, vote." "Is that it?" he replied, "then I don't want it. The women don't know enough to vote."

Adieu until next election.

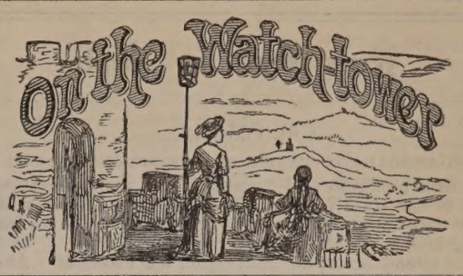
L. J. WOODSON.

"THE Beginning of Life," is the title of a paper read before the State Normal Institute of Heredity and Hygiene in Battle Creek, Michigan, by Dr. Anna Ballard, of Lansing. It was considered of such marked value in the study of heredity that it has been put in leaflet form for circulation among the unions by request. Mrs. Dr. Mechem, of Battle Creek, will be glad to receive orders for them. Packages of twenty-five or upward will be sent at the rate of two dollars per hundred; any less number at three cents each and postage.

THE annual report of the Yorkshire W. C. T. U. has been sent us by Miss Hopkins of Scarboro. This shire or county union has twenty three auxiliaries, is officered by Christian women of tireless activity and numbers over 2600 members in a territory about one seventh of the size of Pennsylvania, containing a population of two and a half million.

ONE of the "most approved" methods of ante-election work that has come to our notice is that proposed by the Normal (Ill.) W. C. T. U. which has subscribed for a sufficient number of copies of THE UNION SIGNAL to place one in the hands of each voter in the township.

"THE German beer drinkers are the most undesirable persons we have in our order," says the the secretary of the Knights of Honor.



Creeds are not all valueless. I predict a long future for this one which is announced by the publishers as that of Woman at Work a valuable monthly edited in a very bright fashion by Mrs. E. T. Housh, our national superintendent of the press department:

We believe reverently in Christianity, respectfully in man, devotedly in woman, and lovingly in children; and that children need to be better cared for, woman better encouraged, man better helped, and God better honored. To help the world in this way, be it ever so little we can do, is the purpose of its existence.

* * * * * *

Mrs. Nichols, the ingenious Superintendent of State and County Fairs for the National W. C. T. U. sees "a way out" financially in the setting aside by farmers' wives of of a pound of butter each month for the W. C. T. U. or the eggs of a certain hen. A temperance bushel of corn or potatoes out of each hundred, or a prohibition pig would be equally acceptable.

* * * *

It gives me a keen sense of pleasure to see a newspaper man acknowledging the favor of the W. C. T. U. in sending him a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. Each local union ought to make it a matter of conscience to see that the local papers have each a copy paid for by the union. That would relieve THE UNION SIGNAL from a very large and heavy pressure on its exchange list.

* * * * *

The acknowledgement referred to appeared in the Lathrop Monitor of Missouri, whose editor said in concluding the handsome recognition of W. C. T. U. kindness:

We will endeavor to give the readers of the Monitor the cream of its contents each week—no light task, as there is very little skimmilk to be found on its pages.

* * * * *

Somewhat in the same line is the testimony of a good subscriber who says, "I cannot afford to do without our dear paper—better, a new bonnet, and I have worn my old one for over two years."

* * * * *

Mrs. McLaughlin, "whose praise is in all the unions," has been speaking in Tioga, N. Y., with electrical manifestations thereat. At least says a paper of that burgh. "The lightning (enlightening) struck about 350 people that evening."

* * * * * *

The $25 prize offered by Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett to the students of Hahneman medical college for the best essay upon "The effects of alcohol upon the nervous system" was awarded to Mrs. E. D. W. Benthall, of Iowa.

* * * * * *

I have heard recently of a conversation that was once overheard on the cars. Two ladies traveling together to a missionary meeting were talking of "zenana work" in India. A third lady sitting near, caught their words, and asked: "Tell me please if the zenana work of which you speak is anything like Kensington?"

* * * * *

Miss Jennie Casseday begs me to tell "all the women" that she hopes soon to write an "open letter" to the Flower Missions. At present her heart and hands are full of care for the flood sufferers.

* * * * *

I am sorry to learn that Mrs. S. G. Strong the W. C. T. U. president of Sangamon county, Ill., will remove to Hannibal, Missouri, where her daughter and son-in-law reside. Her departure from the 13th district will be a blow, for the success of the temperance work in Illinois lies as a burden upon her heart, which she outwardly expresses by constantly working and planning W. C. T. U. work. Her long residence in Springfield enables her also to understand and help so well in the legislative department of our work.

* * * * *

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin has been for a week or more in ice-locked northern Michigan helping the district presidents there. Northport, Elk Rapids, Petoskey, Point St. Ignacia, have all had the music of her voice and "sweet counsel together."

Mrs. C. B. Buell, National corresponding secretary, has been a visitor at Illinois headquarters for several days past. Also the recording secretary, Mrs. Mary Woodbridge.

CALIFORNIA.

SEMI-ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE STATE W. C. T. U.

A most profitable and successful semi-annual convention of the state W. C. T. U. of California, closed with three mass meetings yesterday (Sunday) the convention being held on Friday and Saturday Feb. 9, 10.

The attendance at the convention was excellent. And under the administration of that grand and practical president, Mrs. P. D. Browne, much business was transacted and advance lines of work taken.

Among the many excellent reports read, I can now only allude to the one on scientific temperance teaching in public schools, by Mrs. Mary T. McCall, of which the following is a brief abstract:

Legally enforced scientific temperance teaching in every normal school and public school and every other institution of learning throughout the length and breadth of our land we believe would be one of the most effective and powerful instrumentalities that could be brought to bear to forever avert from the young the perilous evils and temptations leading to intemperance which now beset them on every hand. The march of this grand forward movement has already commenced. In Vermont, New Hampshire and Michigan laws have been passed placing among the required studies in schools "physiology and hygiene, which shall give special prominence to the effects of alcoholic drinks upon the human system," and further requiring that all teachers be examined in these as in other necessary studies. A similar law, though we would go a step further, and include narcotics as well as alcoholic stimulants, is possible in every state—possible here in our beautiful state of California, but to secure its enactment, making the teaching of temperance principles compulsory, there must first be an education of public opinion upon this question. With this then as inevitably as day follows night, there will come in the end a demand for legislative action, for a law which shall embody the crystallized sentiment of the people, in behalf of that which appertains to the best interests and well being of their children.

Never was there a truer saying than this, that "In union there is strength." Individually, the greatest, even, is but a unit, a factor of limited influence; but in the aggregation of individual influence, oh, what mighty force! What transcendent power can there not then be brought to bear in any given direction for the accomplishment of any given purpose? Simply, then, would we forward this movement for popularizing temperance education, we must organize for a regular determined campaign, in a business-like, systematic, thorough-going manner, in order that every effort of workers may be utilized and turned to the highest and best possible account. The last advice of a great journalist, Samuel Bowles, to a talented young friend of his, was: "Would you succeed in life, remember this, 'don't scatter'"—a curt admonition, embodying a truth of widest application, and which we in our temperance work shall do well to heed lest we unduly delay the hour of our final victory.

Whatever methods in the wisdom of this convention, shall be deemed the best and the most feasible to adopt for the compassing of this same object—compulsory temperance education—here in the far Golden State, one thing is certain there must in some way emanate from all our local unions "Light more light," upon this most vital question—the question, as it seems to us, which is together with that of the ballot for woman and prohibition—pre-eminently of the day and hour. As we look back upon the labors of the California branch of the W. C. T. U. for the last two years, in connection with the prize temperance essay writing, effected through the generous offer of Dr. McDonald, and under its auspices so successfully conducted in the public schools of San Francisco, and in the state normal school here at San Jose, in view of this noble work accomplished, does it not come home to the thought of every one that this has been to lead up and to prepare the way for the consideration of the deeper problem, of how, through the inherent majesty of law (for nothing but law will accomplish the work), to provide for the scientific temperance education—not of the few—but for every child and youth, rich and poor, low or high, black or white, within the borders of this great state. And is not the present the auspicious time of all others, for us to inaugurate this educational work, in the behest of our common humanity; in the interest of the young—the state's proudest heritage, the brightest jewels in its crown of glory.

Mrs. M. C. Leavitt is doing a grand work for this coast, and strengthening the faith and work of the W. C. T. U. and all temperance workers here by her earnest practical logic and common sense. Her address last night to an immense audience on "Christianity in governments" was masterly, and heard with almost breathless attention.

The church was decorated through the convention, and yesterday also with flags, mottoes, and the portrait of Mrs. Hayes, while in front of the reading stand, conspicuous against the crimson velvet drapery, hung the picture of our national president, our beloved and honored Frances E. Willard and her faithful secretary friend, Miss Anna Gordon. The picture of these dear ones was enwreathed with choice and fragrant flowers.

Our good friend, Dr. Bentley, pastor of the church in which we met, alluded most eloquently in the introductory service yesterday morning while speaking of God's call to women as to men, to proclaim Him to the world, to Miss Williard as he remembered her a gentle retiring school girl at Evanston. She had heard the voice of the Lord, accepted the call to labor, and through His might was accomplishing so glorious a work for "God and home and native land."

Mrs. Dr. Bentley gave a short talk on heredity.

Mrs. M. Hampson of Liverpool, a lady who commenced twenty-eight years ago to labor for the cause of temperance, gave a history of her first lecture and experience since that time while laboring in England and Australia. She showed that this was a woman's work and just how far that work should extend; that the heart wanted to be touched, and women, while they might not reason sometimes with the mind, had it in their hearts to touch that which would lead the besotted from the mire. The lady also stated what she thought to be the proper sphere of woman, and told of the great work that had been accomplished, under the guidance of Christ, who, she said, should be placed to the front, top and bottom, right and left of all women's efforts in this cause, and that if that was done success could not help but follow. Mrs. Hampson is an able worker and throws out a magnetism that that captivates an audience, holding its undivided attention.

Every week I greet THE UNION SIGNAL with joy, valued always, but now away from home more precious than ever. Yours in faith and hope.

MRS. H. A. HOBART.

San Jose Cal., Feb. 11, 1884.

From the report of the convention as given by the San Jose Daily Mercury, we clip the following :— [ED.

Mrs. H. A. Hobart, president of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, addressed the convention upon "The Goliath of the Liquor Traffic" in most impressive style. She dealt with great directness and force with the evils that grow out of the saloon business and in her closing sentences said that the W. C. T. U is the David that is being raised up to slay the Goliath of the liquor traffic.

MISSOURI.

SPRINGFIELD.—About the middle of November last, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, state president, organized a W. C. T. U. in this city. Since that time a young ladies union and a Band of Hope have been formed. The president, Mrs. Dittrick, is a very capable and enthusiastic temperance lady, and no doubt much good will be accomplished by the best hearts and brains who are enlisted in this work. The ministers are heartily assisting the unions and Band of Hope, and "prohibition" is the theme of all the speeches made by the best men of the city. A Temperance Alliance, and two Good Templar lodges, one in "New Town," are energetically at work. There is need of a large force of workers here as there are, besides scores of saloons, three or four wholesale liquor establishments and a distillery. Mr. George Woodford is to deliver a free lecture at our opera house. He comes by request of the W. C. T. U. THE UNION SIGNAL has been distributed with a view to securing subscribers.

P. E. BALLARD.

BROOKFIELD —We have had Mrs. Clara Hoffman with us for two days, the 9th and 10th ult., and the good which has been accomplished in our little city through her instrumentality, time cannot compute. Eternity alone will reveal. The largest hall in the city was secured for the Sunday evening address, and many had to leave because the hall was crowded to overflowing. Her stirring appeals to "defile not our bodies which are the temples of God" brought new light to many hearts, and many not only signed the alcohol pledge, but also the tobacco pledge. May God abundantly bless and strengthen dear Mrs Hoffman in this great work, is our prayer. MORNA.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

They are gathering homeward from every land,
One by one.

In the death of Mrs. Mary Hill, first president of No. 1 W. C. T. U. of Newark, whom we all loved to call mother in this gospel temperance work, we have sustained a loss which we do not fully realize. So accustomed to meet her at all our gatherings, to listen to her words of wisdom, and to be guided by her long experience, that, not until we see her vacant seat at our conventions, and no longer hear the familiar voice, shall we feel that she is gone from us, to return no more. Wise in counsel, decided when convinced of the right, fervent in spirit, pleasant in speech, loving to all, we shall miss her as no other woman in the work in New Jersey can be missed. It is no idle compliment to say that our state unions have sustained an irreparable loss. So

With reverent heart, upon her lowly grave
We lay this little tribute of our love.

Three of our number have gone home to God since our annual meeting in October last.

Jan. 29 our president responded to a hasty telegram from Mrs. Ellis to fill an appointment at Chester, a mining town of some 700 inhabitants. This town is one of the many in upper Jersey which has been blessed by the labors of the temperance evangelists Mabee and English. A Reform Club and a large W. C. T. U. are in active operation, composed of men and women of all the churches. We met the union in the Presbyterian church chapel and had a most satisfactory and pleasant conference with them. In the evening a large audience assembled in the M. E. church. The opening services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Johnson, Congregationalist. Then, as God gave the message to us, we delivered it to the people. The work here seems permanent, as it does wherever these faithful men go. We tarried for a night at Somerville to attend their meeting. We have long looked to this place with the hope that the women would join our ranks in W. C. T. U. work. We have been traveling for twelve months in the train of these evangelists and reaping the fruits of their labors in the increase of numbers and usefulness of unions formed by them, but never before met them. The meeting was well attended although the streets were icy and dangerous.

At Bound Brook we find the faithful little band have kept up their prayer meetings amid discouragements many, and now help has come in the increase of members through the agency of Mabee and English. On Monday with Sister Smith in Camden, we received a rich baptism of precious fruit. Here we found Mrs. Ellis on her return from Glanboro where she spent last Sabbath greatly to the edification of the people and now accompanied by Mrs. Carr we go to South Camden where we find a goodly number assembled to hear the truth from the lips of this faithful servant of the Lord. Dr. Brown, pastor of the Freewill Baptist church (colored) led the opening services, and a place was made for each of us to say a word for Christ and temperance. Twenty-five persons arose and testified that they had been saved from intemperance through the agency of these meetings.

IOWA.

It is always pleasing to the friends of our great cause, to hear progress reported from a so-called river county. Clayton county is settled by a mixed people, about one-third being Germans one-fourth Irish, the remainder Bohemians, Hungarians and Scandinavians. It is one of the democratic strongholds of the state, but at the election last fall we came within fifty-eight votes of electing a state senator who voted for the amendment, and who openly declared having done so. When the votes were counted the whisky ring was greatly surprised, and since that time one surprise comes after another. A great German wedding took place last week, and not a drop of beer or any other kind of intoxicant was served to the hundreds of guests, and what is the best of the whole affair, it was not missed in the least by the almost exclusively German multitude.

The McGregor News, which three years ago was destined to be annihilated by the saloon power, has now the largest circulation in the district. It is the chosen organ of the W. C. T. U., and the local representative of the most thrifty towns in the county.

About three hundred Germans are taking the News of which at least two hundred and fifty are good republicans of the Iowa pattern.

About a month ago the city of North McGregor passed an ordinance to raise the license to one hundred dollars per saloon, and all the keepers complied with the law but two, whose saloons were promptly closed; one of them sold the contraband stuff on the sly; he was prosecuted under the state law, his whisky, worth about $500. was confiscated, and according to law will be destroyed. The owners of these liquors, Ed and Mike Morrison, became somewhat vexed over the summary treatment they had received from their customers, had papers made out, and confiscated all the liquor in eight other saloons and when the officers searched the first saloon, a general stampede took place, the sweet stuff was all shipped out of the state over of the state over the ice bridge of the Mississippi, and some persons from Prairie du Chieu, Wis., told us that it was the fastest sleighing party that ever landed on the shores of Crawford county, Wis.

Another saloon keeper in South McGregor was about to be prosecuted yesterday; the mayor refused to sign the papers, but it was not without effect. Stampedes are contagious and so like an avalanche they struck our saloon keepers and all the teamsters of our city were busy carrying the whisky across the river to the shores of Crawford county, Wis., where the cursed stuff is now secreted illegally from the hands of the law.

When rogues quarrel, honest people will receive their just dues, and by the truth of this proverb, we now have two cities without a drop of whisky in them. Think of it, two river towns in Iowa, without whisky, and business keeps on all the same, with Morrison Brothers standing on the banks of the "Father of Waters," swearing that they will arrest any man who dares to bring the migrated stimulant back to our state. H.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON.—Our quarterly meeting of January 30 was well attended and represented, forty-five unions in the vicinity of Boston. From secretaries' report of work by state committee we find three conventions have been held, four unions organized, and forty lectures given by Mrs. A. C. Bowles, Miss Mary Wadsworth, and Miss Toby. There have been printed and sent to the unions 3,375 circular letters, and more than the usual amount of literature has been sent out for distribution. Four petitions have been circulated. The papers by Miss Wadsworth on the "restrictions of the license law," Mrs. Prescott on the "results of the Maine law" with one by Mrs. A. J. Gordon, on the "present condition of the prohibitory law" were well prepared and well received. Mrs. Gordon's is to be printed for circulation. Miss L. K. Hawes, read an admirable paper on "temperance literature" and others were helpful and all followed by discussions. Miss Toby brought up the matter of UNION SIGNAL stock and after explanation, seven shares were taken, and others partially promised. After the reading and discussion of the papers, the "question box" was opened and a lively discussion of the various questions occupied the remainder of the time.

The above is but a skeleton of the quarterly meeting, which was really a live, warm, rounded, perfect form, with more beauty than many of our meetings, but in such descriptions all the sparkle and real life are left out.

VERMONT.

To Vermont Readers of The Union Signal and others Interested in the Flower Mission:

Does familiarity with flowers destroy their sweetness? That was the query in our mind as some one suggested that the Flower Mission seemed almost superfluous in our Green Mountain state, where almost every one has flowers. Instantly our mind flew back to our teaching days when with desk loaded with flowers we still had a place and a welcome for the handful of violets or daisies and buttercups.

Nor was the sweetness of the gift destroyed because of its being common. We appreciated it for itself and for the sweet thought which prompted it. If we have an abundance of material there is all the more reason for its being utilized to sweeten and make welcome the message we send.

I want to make a few suggestions which have occurred to me since the issue of my circular:

I think every union might celebrate Flower Mission day with profit. We can make our flowers which grow in such abundance the entering wedge for the distribution of temperance literature.

In smaller places children might be furnished with baskets of bouquets and literature to leave at each door, or a temperance concert might be given in the evening and flowers and tracts given to each person passing in. In larger places students, clerks, and those who labor in manufactories, or on corporations might be met at the door as they go home in the same manner. In large boarding houses perhaps you could obtain permission to place a bouquet and text on the tea table at each plate. Remember your pastors, physicians and editors with a large basket or bouquet with appropriate text.

But I have said enough to set you on the track and I am sure the ready wit of our women can devise some plan for celebrating the day, and they will find room for much missionary work and a genuine appreciation of flowers outside of prisons and jails.

CLARA EASTMAN, Supt. Vt. Flower Mission.

CABOT.—Mrs. E. G. Green, our state president, has been with us. She had just attended a very interesting county convention, holding one day and two evenings at Mansfield. Good immediate results followed the convention, as a union of thirty-three members was organized. Coming here, where we have had a union for two years, Mrs. Green gave us a Bible reading on Sunday, telling us as Christians to submit our wills entirely to Christ and trust in Him with hope and faith. So beautifully did she illustrate her ideas that every thinking Christian must always remember and be benefited by her words. In the evening she spoke upon our temperance school law, and left us with hearts filled with love for her, in her humble devotion to her work, and good resolutions to press on with our own.

S. J. W.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MANSFIELD VALLEY.—We invited the ladies from each of our churches to assemble in the M. E. church Jan. 29. About seventy responded; they were welcomed by a few words from the local president. Our state president, Mrs. Swift, then took charge of the meeting which was opened by singing followed by reading of an appropriate chapter with explanatory remarks and prayer from Mrs. Mair, of Allegheny City. Mrs. J. D. Weeks read a paper on scientific temperance instruction in public schools. Mrs. Swift followed with very practical hints and instructive remarks. A lunch was served by the ladies of the union in the basement of the church. We feel that the meeting was a success, as we received sixteen new members, and many old members renewed their connection.

Our four pastors, Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist Episcopal unite in a monthly temperance service. The collections are given to our union. So far we have received $13. The total received from the four sermons last year was $48. We have large audiences and think the influence from this source wide-spread and lasting. Our Band of Hope meets every Friday evening at four o'clock in one of our school rooms. We use Miss Colman's catechism and manual. One of the principals explains Dr. Sewall's charts to the children in a very interesting manner. Last year they gave a temperance entertainment which realized $86. With this we purchased an organ. Once a quarter we have temperance lessons in our Sunday school. They all take the Temperance Banner. Our union meets once a month at present. We feel encouraged and want to do our share in this work for we have in this small town from thirty to forty saloons.

MRS. M. L. CARNAHAN.

MANSFIELD.—The half dozen W. C. T. Unions in our county were organized by Mrs. Wittenmeyer two years ago, when she was traveling in the employ of the Constitutional Amendment Society. Not having been instructed as young converts should be some of these unions have been in a languishing, declining state.

Last week we were so fortunate as to secure the services of Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin for a series of addresses. She disarmed prejudice, won hearts, instructed the people, toned up the old unions, added to the membership, and formed two new unions in the face of discouraging weather, floods and other adverse circumstances. Womanly, eloquent, persuasive, earnest, practical, she elevated the standard of the W. C. T. U. in Tioga county, and left its supporters more zealous and resolute than ever before. God bless Mrs. McLaughlin!

FANNIE B. PITTS.

BROWNSDALE.—Our most successful work, up to the present, has been the distribution of temperance literature. Ours is a rural union; we have no saloons to fight but plenty of work notwithstanding. One trouble and discouragement with us is we are so scattered, some of us four miles apart, but our greatest discouragement is apparent lack of interest among our members, only a few seeming to be alive to the importance of the great work committed to us. Owing to a great many causes we have not been able to do as much as we would like, but through the strength of the Master we do not intend to give it up, and we hope some day to show to the world that we have done something to help bring about the desired result, viz., the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

MARY A. BROWN.

EAST SMITHFIELD.—The union here, composed mainly of farmers' wives, all women of many cares, is doing a quiet yet effectual work. Meetings are held every two weeks for prayer and study. Temperance literature is circulated and resolutions and appeals are sent to our teachers' institutes and high schools asking the cooperation of the teachers in our efforts to create a public sentiment favoring prohibition.

NEW YORK.

REPORT OF EIGHTEENTH QUARTERLY CONVENTION, DUTCHESS COUNTY W. C. T. U.

We look for reports of work from New York in every issue, but seldom find any, which leads me to think either there's not much doing in our state, or the work is not reported, or if reported it is not published. [All that is received is published. Our cry is "more." ED.] I believe our state is second in the union in number of subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. M. H. Hunt, of Boston, has been and is still lecturing in this state in the interest of the compulsory temperance educational bill, which has already passed the senate at Albany, and is now pending in the assembly. We expect to get the law. She has delivered five lectures in this county at the following places: Poughkeepsie, Pawling, Poughquag, Pine Plains and Millbrook. Her audiences have been large, and great enthusiasm possesses the people, after hearing her on the subject of educating the children in scientific temperance principles, so much so that they all sign the petitions and rise "en masse in favor of the compulsory temperance education law."

The eighteenth quarterly convention of the Dutchess county W. C. T. U. was held at Poughquag, Feb. 12 and 13.

At the close of the opening devotional meeting, conducted by Mrs. Eliza Wright, of Beekman, convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. W. I. Eno. Address of welcome was given by Miss Atchinson. Response by Mrs. E. D. Baright, of Poughkeepsie, Mrs. H. A. Nelson, the delegate from this district to the tenth annual meeting of the N. W. C. T. U. at Detroit, gave a very excellent report of the same. Secretary of temperance literature reported twenty-seven regular subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL during quarter, and sixteen for the state paper, Our Work, 11,320 pages of temperance tracts distributed, etc, Mrs. Thurston introduced THE UNION SIGNAL as the best educator for temperance workers, and distributed forty copies of the "Memorial Issue."

The young people's meeting was addressed by Mrs M. H. Hunt, in which she explained the a b c of drunkenness, taking for illustration the intoxicants, ale, beer and cider.

The evening mass meeting was addressed by Mrs. M. H. Hunt, subject, "Waiting for the Verdict." Her arguments were clear and convincing, and the intelligent and appreciative audience were delighted and enthused.

Morning session was opened with a devotional service conducted by Mrs. Hunt, who selected Isa 49, for the Scripture lesson, which seemed marvelously adapted to the present day and generation. The rest of the session was devoted to reports of local work, etc. Mrs. R. A. Swift, of Millbrook, opened the subject, "Who is Responsible for the Continuation of the Liquor Traffic?" with a carefully prepared paper, answering the question in a clear positive manner so that every one present was able to see his own responsibility in the matter. The question box was opened by Miss M. E. Hoag, of Pawling, revealing many important questions which were discussed by a large number of persons. A consecration service, led by Miss Emily Underhill, state superintendent of Young Woman's Work, occupied the last hour. This was a precious service closing most appropriately this convention of Christian workers.

CONVENTION OF WYOMING CO. N. Y. W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. of Wyoming county met at Castile, N. Y. February 13 and 14. It was an excellent meeting, and much earnestness and interest was exhibited. The exercises were all given with promptness. Special mention may be made of the short address given by Mrs. T. B. Catton of Perry, upon "The need of the hour" and the address in the evening by Mrs. A. M. Wickes of Attica, who is president of the county union. She spoke from Exodus 2: 11; and Matt. 28: 10. The address was delivered with much earnestness and was well received. The Bible reading by Mrs. White Thursday morning was an excellent exercise and every verse quoted showed how expressly strong drink is condemned in the Bible.

"Satistics of the liquor traffic" by Mrs. King of Perry was given without notes and instead of its being dry figures only, such facts were woven in as brought tears to the eyes of hearer as well as speaker. "The Key to Success," by Miss Minnie Long, of Castile was a beautifully written essay. The "Key" was prayer. "Lost Names," a poem, read by Miss Barnes, was said to have come from the pen of our county president.

INDIANA.

RICHMOND.—The W. C. T. U. of Richmond numbers over one hundred members, many of them earnest, devoted workers, who have held on persistently, meeting together weekly, praying and doing whatever their hands found to do, trusting God for a harvest some time and it has come even before they looked for it.

James M. Dunn came here the third of this month. His first meeting held in one of the largest halls in the city was a surprise to every one. Hundreds were obliged to go away because there was not room for them. He had been here a short time three years before when he won many warm friends who were only too glad to welcome him back. There is not more than one other person in the temperance lecture field that could have drawn together such an audience in Richmond.

The meetings have been going on for two weeks and the interest has not abated in the least. More than 2,000 have signed the pledge and put on the blue ribbon, many of them drinking men. The afternoon meetings are for prayer and consecration, and many reformed men attend them who have not gone to church for years, and we are hoping to see many conversions.

ILLINOIS.

CONVENTION OF W. C. T. U. OF NINTH AND FOURTEENTH DISTRICTS AT MINONK, WOODFORD CO.

First session opened on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 7, at 2:30 with consecration meeting led by Mrs. Hathaway, president of fourteenth district. An address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. M. E. Fort, of Minonk, to which responses were given by Mrs. M. E. Kline, of Henry, for the ninth district and Mrs. G. H. Read, of Bloomington, for the fourteenth district.

After cheering words from our state president, Mary Allen West, Miss Frances E. Willard gave the opening address upon the faith and aims of the W. C. T. U., in her own beautiful and forceful style. Capt. Linscott followed with brief remarks.

The mass meeting in the evening was addressed by Miss Willard.

Friday morning session opened with consecration meeting led by Mrs. Louise Andrews, of Maroa. The morning was occupied with a paper upon "What is Temperance Work?" by Mrs. E. P. Hall, of Eureka. A discussion upon finance resulting in the appointment of a committee from the ninth district to decide upon a plan of work for that district. A paper by Mrs. M. N. Whitmore, of Metamora, and a "Worker's Experience Meeting," conducted by Miss West. Juvenile Work was the the first topic taken up. The discussion proved so interesting and beneficial that other business was waived and the remainder of the morning devoted to this topic.

Miss Emily Shedd, of Forrest, led the afternoon's devotional service. The committee on plan of work for ninth district, made their report which was adopted and ordered printed. This plan of work includes the financial plan recommended by the Alton convention, which is being very generally adopted throughout the state.

Mrs. M. A. Cassell, of Metamora presented a fine paper upon "juvenile work," and Miss West spoke briefly upon the "Mission and work of the W. C. T. U." The children's meeting at four p. m. was large and enthusiastic. Captain Linscott delighted and instructed the children with an illustrated talk upon the effects of alcohol.

Minonk has a flourishing Band of Hope, meeting weekly, also a temperance Sabbath school, held once a month. Despite the storm, the audience and lecture rooms of the M. E. church were packed Friday evening.

Mrs. Mary B. Willard was announced for that session, but was detained by the illness of her mother. After a paper upon young woman's work, and a talk upon temperance work in Dakota, by Mrs. M. E. Kline, Captain Linscott gave a pointed, practical address.

One admirable feature of this convention was the free distribution of temperance literature. Each delegate took a sample package home with her, also a supply of the state leaflets and reports, and Friday evening a copy of Miss West's annual address went into every household represented; each young lady received a copy of Mrs. Best's leaflet upon young woman's work and each child an illustrated tract.

Saturday morning session opened with devotional service led by Miss Helen Walker of Barry. Miss Emily Shedd presented a paper upon "Work an element of success" and a paper upon the "W. C. T. U. as Christ's servants" prepared by Mrs. Blackstone of Salem, was read by Mrs. Kline.

By request the "workers' experience meeting" of Friday morning was resumed. "Gospel work" constituting the theme for discussion.

A consecration meeting closed this convention which all pronounced a grand success in every way.

About forty delegates were in attendance, and each session was well attended by the citizens of Minonk.

The ninth district has gone to work with renewed earnestness. The officers for the present year are as follows:

President, Miss Emily Shedd, Forrest; corresponding and financial secretary, Miss Alice Briggs, Metamora; treasurer, Mrs. Lizzie Bullard, Forrest; superintendent Evangelistic work, Mrs. E. P. Hall, Eureka; superintendent juvenile work, Mrs. M. A. Cassell, Metamora; superintendent young woman's work, Mrs. L. A. Simpson, Minonk; superintendent foreign work, Mrs. M. Ellwood, Metamora; superintendent camp and grove meetings, Mrs. W. G. Mc Dowell, Fairbury; superintendent county fairs, Mrs. M. E. Fort, Minonk; superintendent scientific temperance, Miss E. J. Dickenson, Eureka.

Ravenswood.—Owing to the terrible weather and consequent difficulty of getting about, we were not able to prepare for a celebration of December 23. But our president, and one of her helpers thought we might have some impromptu exercises. Even this however was deferred until the following Sabbath evening. Some of the young people from the Sunday school were invited to read extracts from different articles in the beautiful crusade number of The Union Signal. The exercises opened with the singing of one of the crusade hymns, the reading of the crusade psalm and prayer. One of the members of the union then, in a few introductory remarks presented the theme of the evening, (so as to give significance to the extracts), touching upon the thought that the idea of prayer meetings in saloons had gradually taken root in the minds of praying women in many parts of the land, as an idea sent by God in answer to their petitions of many years for direction. Extracts from the various articles in The Union Signal followed; the crusade hymn was sung. "The Palm Branch" was recited, and the husband of our president made a few earnest, and exceedingly appropriate remarks.

The general sentiment of the audience was that the little affair had been a success. We have a few gentlemen here who are thoroughly in earnest and on the right side of the temperance question. One of them was engaged in the Murphy movement in Ohio, and is always ready to say a few earnest words, spoken in such a manner of deep conviction on his own part that they carry great weight with them though spoken in the quietest and calmest tones. Another is deeply interested in the subject of heredity, and if all our gentlemen were as determined as he to keep saloons out of the precincts of our village they would form an invincible company.

Miss Willard's lecture was a treat to all. No words of mine are worthy to describe her fitly chosen words, or the delight and pleasure she gave her audience. To carry us up to the flood-tide of interest, or rather to keep us there a little longer.

It fortunately happened that the annual meeting of our union occurred the day following the lecture. The president, Mrs. Bennett, invited the members to an elegant collation at half-past one o'clock p. m., the appropriate discussion of which was followed by the business meeting at three o'clock. Twenty ladies were present, and all took an unusual interest in the business, election of officers etc. The president gave a short talk on the duty of Christian women as to their attitude on the temperance question, showing what that work was in its aims and so forth. Portions of Miss West's annual address were read. Mrs. Bell was elected president after an unsuccessful attempt to induce our honored retiring president to retain the office, the secretary and treasurer retaining her place. A delightful and helpful part of the afternoon consisted in a talk by Miss Cray the new and efficient matron and chaplain of the Martha Washington Home, which is situated a mile west of our village. Miss Cray has a heart thoroughly in sympathy with her work. If any, after hearing her appeal and her account of her work could fail to be enthused and ready to do their part in "lifting up the fallen," they would be quite different from the women "kind-hearted and true" who heard her that day. This is the work at our hand just now: To help Miss Cray in her duties as chaplain; to prepare garments for those who come to the Home needy and destitute; to help provide industries for them; to find a market for the various useful articles they make; to take the reclaimed into our families and lend them a helping hand.

By "beginning first at Jerusalem" may not our sisters learn to carry the gospel of temperance beyond our own borders. Is not that gospel? Helen C. Lloyd.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The W. C. T. U. of Evansburgh, Pa., is making determined effort to carry their town for no license, and expect to succeed.

The union at Beekman N. Y. is in a growing condition. It has under its supervision two juvenile temperance schools, both of which are well attended. About fifty children have signed the pledge, and more are considering the matter.

Southwestern Missouri is being thoroughly organized and worked up on the temperance question. Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of the W. C. T. U., for the state, is organizing unions in all the principal towns, and getting the women to work.

Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Boston, is doing good work in New Hampshire for the temperance cause. Jan. 22, she spoke in Lake Village, and organized a branch of the W. C. T. U. Sunday, the 26th, she was in Manchester, and stirred all hearts by her eloquent appeal. She had previously spoken in Concord.

The saloons and gambling halls of Harper, Kansas, have been closed, to the chagrin of the saloon keepers and gamblers that had flocked in from Wichita, Newton, and other towns that shut down some time ago. These towns are in Sedgwick county, where the $10,000 fund mentioned in The Union Signal of Feb. 7 was raised for prosecution.

Breckenridge, Mo., has recently enjoyed a visit from Mrs. Clara Hoffman. A pressing invitation was extended Mrs. Hoffman to return and give a number of lectures at the earliest possible date. So many are calling for her services and needing them all over the state that it is simply impossible for her to give more than a night in very many places.

Of Miss Willard's visit to Galena, Ill., Feb. 14, the secretary of the W. C. T. U. writes: "It was a date long to be remembered in Galena. It was remarked that no public speaker had ever called out as large an audience here, which through an entire evening had remained so perfectly quiet and attentive. We hope for great good to our community."

The South Paulina street Band of Hope organized in October with about fifty members now numbers one hundred and twenty-eight members and claims recognition as a power that promises to be mighty in helping to demolish the strongholds of King Alcohol in this part of the city of Chicago. An entertainment given by the Band February 1 for which an admission fee of ten cents was charged, netted over twenty-five dollars.

A reception was given Mrs. Foster during her Kentucky sojourn at the executive mansion in Frankfort. Mrs. Gov. Knott was too ill to be present in the parlors, but Mrs. Wickliffe Chapman, assisted by Miss Martin, Miss Purrington, of New York, and Misses Katie and Elodie Helm, of Elizabethtown, received the callers. Mrs. Foster was accompanied by Mrs. Carrie Apperson Leech, of Louisville; Dr. and Mrs. Daniel Gober and Miss Owen, of Frankfort; also Mrs. Reuben Runyan, president of the W. C. T. U. The opera house was crowded at night despite the rain that was pouring down. Mrs. Foster's lecture on "Constitutional Prohibition" is pronounced as novel in the presentation of the facts as unanswerable in the argument.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Alexander Cooper has had crowded houses at Leland the past week.

—A union has been organized by Miss Addie Goodrich at Leaf River.

—Parties desiring the services of Francis Murphy can address him at No. 51 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn, New York.

—Mr. G. W. Bain writes to headquarters that he can fill dates for Illinois from April 5 to 28. Unions should send applications to him at Louisville, Kentucky.

—The executive committee of the eighth congressional district of the state of Illinois met in room 36, 161 LaSalle street, on February 7, in response to the call of the district president, and arranged the program for the district convention to be held in Joliet, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4 and 5. It is important that the unions of the district be represented, and the workers in large numbers be in attendance.

Mrs. L. A. Hagans, District President.

A Whisper from the Treasurer of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

Amid the hum of voices there comes to me this message from the Illinois women concerning our annual report and the various leaflets so eagerly sought for. "The last annual report and those leaflets are almost a little encyclopedia of temperance literature for our workers and are fully worth all they cost and more too." (Our reports cost us $315 and the leaflets already out $300.)

A nice little message of "good tidings" you must carry for me. The financial secretary of the sixth district leads the van in quarterly report. Seventy-five dollars of the $300 pledged for state work came to me today. Whisper that loud! Sound the praises of the old sixth district, and see if it does not make the rest of us bestir ourselves. We expect better work this year than ever before, as headquarters are sending out all the help possible. Mrs. G. H. Read, Treas. Ill. W. C. T. U.

MICHIGAN.

Jackson.—A series of meetings of unusual interest has been held in our city within the last week with results which bid fair to be of substantial benefit to our community.

Mr. Paxton, the agent of the Citizen's League of Chicago, has been with us, giving an account of the workings of the League in Chicago and advocating the formation of one here.

The audiences have been large and appreciative, and Mr. Paxton's remarks full of interest and of convincing force.

At the last meeting an organization was perfected, and the Citizen's League of Jackson is now fully organized, numbering among its officers many of the first men of our city, men whose names are a guarantee for the performance of the work proposed by the League, viz., the enforcement of the laws regulating the liquor traffic, laws which are now systematically and openly violated, particularly in regard to the sale of liquor to minors.

Let our boys and girls be thus protected, and much of evil may be averted. Let the good work go on, and may God bless every effort to overthrow the liquor traffic in our land. H. M. Frazer.

The list of those who have promised to prepare these lessons for the future has the names of some of our most eminent scholars and divines in the country, and Sabbath schools can order their lessons for the year with the assurance that they will not be disappointed in the quality and helpfulness of the same. Will not every local union secure, if possible, the use of these lessons for the year?

More and more we are coming to understand the importance of the religious education of our children and young people upon this subject. We want not only thus saith nature, thus saith reason, but thus saith God.

Dean Stanley says: "Each age of the church has, as it were, turned over a new leaf in the Bible, and found a response to its own wants."

It would seem indeed that a new leaf had been turned by this age in that blessed book whose teaching upon this subject is so clear and explicit, not only when it deals with it directly but in the spirit that pervades it from beginning to end.

Let us hope that in the future our children and youth shall be so thoroughly and intelligently educated in the Bible principles of temperance, that when they go out from us and meet the dangers which will surely beset them, what David said of the godly may be true concerning them: "The law of his God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide."

AFTER DINNER.

Persons who suffer from Indigestion can arrest the progress of that painful malady by the use of an after-dinner pill, so composed that it will give tone to the stomach, prevent heartburn, rouse the liver to healthful action, invigorate the kidneys, and thus, through the activity of these organs, promote the natural movement of the stomach and bowels. AYER'S PILLS are so compounded that their action, though mild, effectually produces the above results. They also, in curing Constipation, remove the cause of Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, and many other serious ailments.

AYER'S PILLS

contain no mineral nor poisonous substance, and do not gripe unless the bowels are irritated, and even then their influence is healing. To continue their effect in constipated or chronic cases, they need only be taken in diminishing instead of increasing doses. For seamen, and inhabitants or travelers in sparsely settled countries where physicians are not at hand, they are of inestimable value. There is hardly a sickness they will not alleviate, and in most cases cure, if taken promptly. To young girls just entering upon womanhood, and to women whose period of maternity is drawing to a close, Ayer's Pills, in moderate doses, merely sufficient to ensure regular action of the bowels, will be found of ## Incalculable Value.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

F. CROSBY CO., 664 and 666, 6th Ave., New York

Miscellaneous Selections.

A PRACTICAL temperance argument was one day very deftly put forth by Prof. Houghton of Trinity College, Dublin. A friend sitting by him ordered brandy and water with a plate of oysters. Professor Houghton implored him not to ruin his digestion in that way, and sending for a glass of brandy put an oyster in it before the eyes of his friend. In a short time there lay in the bottom of the glass a tough leathery substance resembling the finger of a kid glove and just as digestible.

A FEW days ago a man in New York was fined $300 for giving tobacco to a giraffe in Central Park. Almost simultaneously a tavern keeper in Chicago was fined $5 for selling whisky to children. From these two facts it would appear that the preservation of the morals of the giraffe stands higher than the protection of children.—Bloomsbury Journal.

Pilgrim's Progress.

A large edition of this intensely interesting and instructive book has been placed at our disposal by the publishers, and we are enabled to offer it to ou subscribers at a wonderfully low price.

The author's biographer, speaking of the circumstances under which this book was written, says:

Although cut off by his protracted confinement from all opportunity of public preaching, he was, in the overruling providence of God, more extensively useful than while in the enjoyment of unfettered liberty; for having during his leisure hours exerted the extraordinary talents with which he was endowed, he produced the PILGRIM'S PROGRESS —a work which has been more extensively circulated, and done more good in the world than any other book except the Bible alone."

The great popularity of this book is shown in the fact that it has been translated into every language on the continent of Europe.

It should be in every family. Parents can give no better instruction to their children than by laying before them a copy of this excellent book.

Sunday School and Band of Hope Teachers and Superintendents cannot do better than supply each scholar with a copy.

Board covers, 127 pages, printed on small but very clear and easily readable type on white paper.

Price, single copies, FIFTEEN CENTS, postpaid. In large quantities, $10 00 per hundred by express.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. THE PENOGRAPH.—For more than thirty years inventive genius has industriously labored to produce a perfectly automatic fountain pen. Numerous devices, possessing various degrees of merit, have been patented and extensively sold; and most of them have worked splendidly till one or more of their delicate parts gave out and had to be repaired. But all defects hitherto encountered have been remedied in what is termed the Penograph. In the Penograph all small and complicated contrivances are dispensed with. Although the pen appears to be small it will write just as well as the largest. It is capable of producing the finest hair lines as well as heavy shaded strokes. The pen is of solid gold, first quality diamond pointed. With fair usage it will last a lifetime. The case is vulcanized rubber, handsomely finished. In our opinion the Penograph, as illustrated above, is well calculated to supercede all other writing pens and pencils in daily use. Its flow of ink is automatic and free, but never too profuse. It sheds ink when in use and stops when the pen ceases to move. It needs no wiping and no dipping for ink. It is carried in the pocket always ready for use on any kind of paper. It costs no more than is usually charged for a first class gold pen and "older without the fountain." It is fully warranted and may be returned if it fails to meet the expectations of any person who shall read the above. Price $3, postpaid. An extra pen will be given to any subscriber who shall send us $9 for a club of three Penographs. All postpaid.

We offer the above Penograph as a present to any one sending us four new subscribers at $1 75.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 10. CHICAGO, MARCH 6, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE south believes that education and morals should go hand in hand. Consequently the people of Mississippi have impeached their state superintendent of public instruction on account of his habitual intemperance.

LOCAL option has been defeated in the legislature of Wyoming. Its significance was so enhanced by the woman's ballot, already in hand, that liquordom trembled before it, that is to say its pocket-book shook—and conquered.

HIGH license is said to be very successful in Elgin, Illinois. But the last grand jury of Kane county indicted all of the Elgin saloonists, twenty-one in number, on from four to six counts each, for selling liquor to habitual drunkards and to minors, principally the latter.

THE Woman's Journal says that the number of this year's petitions for woman's ballot in Massachusetts (20,650) is the largest ever presented in any state for an extension of suffrage. Illinois "rises to explain" that last year the W. C. T. U. of the state sent petitions to the general assembly to the number of 27,214, asking that the word "male" be stricken from the electoral section of the state constitution.

IT ought not to surprise us, after the years of liquor license that it is proposed in the national capital to provide for the poor of the city by compelling the more than five hundred gambling houses of Washington, "to pay ten cents from the pot of every hand played, the same to be paid over to the charitable institutions of the city for the alleviation of the many poor and distressed applicants for charity." A writer in the Washington Post thinks that $2,500 could be raised every night by imposing such a tax. Can anyone give a good and valid reason why this should not be done in any city that licenses the seller of liquid poison?

"THERE'S lovely fighting along the whole line" of high license in Chicago. The whisky sellers are anxious that a uniform license of $500 be imposed on all liquor sellers—beer and wine no exception—while the beer sellers are clamorous for the state law which gives them the advantage of a comparatively low license. Meanwhile the mayor and council are quietly viewing the battle, and saying and doing not much of anything. The eighteen saloon keepers who have taken out licenses since July 1—four of them paying $500 for the privilege of selling whisky and fourteen $150 for beer licenses are all selling whisky and making very little secret of it. So does high license enforce itself where prohibition could certainly do no worse.

IF we must have wars and rumors of wars, it is something to have such warriors as "Chinese" Gordon, who before leaving England for the Soudan, went into one of Canon Wilberforce's meetings and asked the prayers of the church.

When the cotton famine reigned in Lancashire, in order that he might contribute something to the relief fund, he took a large gold medal which he had received from the Empress of China, scratched out the inscription, and sent it anonymously to Canon Miller. "Never," he afterwards wrote to his brother, "shall I forget what I got when I scored out the inscription on the gold medal. How I have been repaid a million fold!"

IOWA'S dominant political party has in spite of all predictions to the contrary, and with undaunted singleness of purpose fulfilled its pledges to the people. On last Saturday the lower house of the legislature ratified the senate bill which strikes out the wine and beer clause from the present prohibitory law of Iowa, thus giving statutory prohibition of the sale of all alcoholic beverages to the state which has repeatedly declared its determination to be free from the slavery of the drink traffic. This law will go into effect on the Fourth of July next, and a grand Independence day it will be, when a jubilee will doubtless be held all over the state. Five thousand dram shops must on this day of days put up the shutters and take a long legal holiday. The railroad saloons must suppress their wine list as they cross the fair and fruitful prairies of the state, and Hawkeye vigilance will watch the drug stores. Thank God for the brave and true hearts that have battled for this glorious victory.

THE crusade days are not past as we may have supposed. In proof of this statement witness the W. C. T. U. of Madison, Wis., which has lately made a very civil but earnest plea with the state board of agriculture for the prohibition of beer and all other liquors on the state fair grounds. After learning of the favorable attitude of the board toward the beer sellers, the W. C. T. U. through its corresponding secretary, Mrs. Emma C. Bascom, sent an open letter to the president of the board, asking that this body consider the true interests of the agricultural community and of the city, by placing an interdict on the sale of liquors on the premises subject to their control. The secretary of the board responded also in an open letter made up of poor morals and poorer logic, the gist of which was that license is the established law of the land, and the board must conform to it Mrs. Bascom has replied to this through the State Journal in a clear, convincing argument and the W. C. T. U. has possession of all the logic and legality of the situation. The position taken by Mrs. Bascom is, that the state board exceeds its powers in granting license, that it receives money for a protection it cannot give, that it betrays the law because it usurps its functions, and that it betrays the public by using these usurped powers in the interest of disturbance and demoralization.

WESTON, the pedestrian, who agreed to walk 5000 miles in a given number of days without recourse to stimulants, completed half of his self appointed task, some three weeks since. He expects to finish this demonstration of the excellence of teetotalism on March 15, his forty-fifth birthday. He travels during the day from one place to another, always a-foot, and in the evening walks a course appointed in some public place, making up an even fifty miles per diem, after which he delivers a temperance address to the assembled crowd. Judges accompany him on all his "tramp" whose testimony will not be gainsaid. His friends and the friends of the cause advanced sufficient money to cover his expenses for the first month, but since then he has been dependent on his own private purse. No purse or prize awaits him if he is able to get to the end of his five thousandth mile, and no wager has been made by him or by any of his supporters which if he won would be to his advantage. "I have undertaken this walk," he writes to a friend, "simply to demonstrate that, after all my previous exertions, and relying solely upon my natural strength, I am physically no worse a man at forty-five than I was at thirty-five years of age. In addition, I am anxious to exhibit the benefits arising from a consistently temperate life, and from the total avoidance of alcohol as a beverage. I hope to conclude my task in London on the 15th of March, which will be my forty-fifth birthday. When I go to bed I am generally asleep within five minutes after I lay my head on the pillow, and I sleep soundly for six hours each night, with an occasional further nap of thirty minutes just before daybreak, and with forty minutes of sleep after dinner. During my journey I have again and again been examined by medical men, who pronounce that my pulse is regular, and my temperature normal."

WORK.

BY BERTHA H. ELLSWORTH.

We pray for rest; but would it be true rest
To idly spend the hours life doth give?
Is not the boon of which we are in quest
Rather the strength and aims by which to live?
And living is not idle ease nor play,
But earnest striving for a nobler type
Of manhood and of womanhood each day,
Till for God's "better land" we shall be ripe.

And not by a few acts or words do we become
The images of beauty God will place
Within the keeping of the angel's home;
But even as doth sculptor's chisel trace
The form of loveliness from out the stone,
By every daily deed and word and thought
The soul is fashioned; and the flesh outgrown,
Reveals the form life's slow, sure work has wrought.

Then let us take the means with faithful hands;
Nor think the work is other than our own:
For, though the Master near, to help us, stands,
Would we be better than the senseless stone
If passive, mute, inert our souls could be Given their forms as marble statues are?
Oh, Father, no! and if unskillfully
We sometimes work, and fair proportions mar.

Thou still art kind; and thy perfecting hand
Deals needful strokes, from which with human pain
Recoiling we may cry, nor understand
How much our present grief is future gain.
But, since we feel these are thy means and ways,
Ought we to scorn our earthly toil or sphere?
The work that winneth here no mortal praise
To God and angels may be found most dear.

HOW THE DRAM SHOPS PAY THE TAXES.

BY PROF. GEO. E. FOSTER, M. P.

Whenever in city, county or country, an attempt is made to close the dram shops, the supporters and proprietors of these institutions raise the cry of revenue and taxation. In some strange and unaccountable way the idea has been impressed upon the public mind that there is no better way of raising municipal and provincial revenues than by setting up dram shops, placing men in them to collect money for the drink sold, and then compelling these men to pay over a certain amount of their gross takings into the public treasury. The liquor sellers industriously nurse this idea, and no cry is more ready to their lips than this: "If you close the bars, you will lose the revenues, and so have to pay higher taxes."

It needs but an exercise of average common sense to enable us to estimate this cry at its proper worth, and to arrive very speedily at a few fundamental facts in the light of which we may easily come to just conclusions.

1. The dram shops inevitably lessen the amount of assessable property.

The property of a community is what bears the taxes. The more property there is to be assessed, the lighter the tax rate will be. Suppose an amount of $3,000 is to be raised by a certain time. If the assessable value of the town is $600,000, the tax rate will be 5 mills; but if the assessable value of the town is $1,000,000, the tax rate will be only 3 mills to the dollar. So we see that whatever increases the accumulation of property decreases the rate of taxation; whatever decreases the accumulation of property, increases the rate of taxation. This is a simple principle which any one can see at a glance, and it only becomes necessary for us to consider, in addition, the influence of the dram shops upon the accumulation of property. In the first place, they are enemies of thrift, the teachers of waste.

Day and night they stand open to invite each passer by. In them the workman spends his dimes, the youth his dollars, and the richer man his hundreds. They are the waste banks into which slip, bit by bit, the small surplus of the working man, and the spare change of the artisan. Every week they gather in thousands of dollars which would otherwise be deposited in savings banks or be spent on home improvements and comforts.

Not only do the dram shops invite to first waste, but they turn this occasional spending into a fixed habit of waste, and drag, by the chains of appetite, their victim into constantly increasing expenditure for what is both needless and harmful. And all the while the earnings of the patrons of the dram shops are not allowed to accumulate into property, and consequently the assessable value of the community is not increasing so far as they are concerned, but rather is continually diminishing.

The dram shops, therefore, "help pay the taxes," by decreasing the tax rate. How thankful all rate payers should be for the "help" of the saloon!

2. The dram shops inevitably diminish the number of tax payers in the community.

Please think for a moment as to where a town or city or county gets the money necessary for its expenses. It must of course come from the people, and from people, too, who own property. Paupers and spendthrifts pay no taxes. Each man's property is assessed, and he pays to that amount into the public treasury.

Suppose we watch the assessors as they go over the list. They find A's name, and say "There is A., he has lived here for fifteen years, been earning good wages and has saved his surplus; he possesses now property which we can assess at $5,000. He must pay into the funds $15." And so they go on over the list of residents. At last they come to R's name, and one says, "Well, at what shall we assess R.?" "Assess R.?" replies another, "why we shall simply pass him by." "And for what reason," says the former, "has not R. lived as long in this community as A., and earned quite as large wages? Why, then, should you pass him by?" "Oh! yes," replies the second, "R. has lived here just as long and been paid as good wages as A., but instead of saving his surplus he has been supporting the dram shops and therefore has not a mite of property for us to tax."

And so R., who has enjoyed all the advantages of the town, can pay no property tax to the town treasury, because the dram shop swallowed his surplus earnings, and every thrifty citizen has to "chip in," and pay a little higher tax to make up R's deficiency.

3. The dram shops inevitably cause the heaviest burdens of taxation.

When a citizen is turned into a pauper he becomes a non-producer, and the community has to support him. Nine-tenths of all the paupers graduate from the dram shops. When a citizen is turned into a criminal the community is taxed to punish and support him. Four-fifths of all the crime of the country is the result of the dram shop. Lunatics and idiots are kept up at the expense of the tax payers. Three-fifths of the lunacy and idiocy of the country comes directly and indirectly from the intemperance of the dram shop. Calls for charity are to be met by the public and private subscriptions of the abler people. Four-fifths of all the charity cases of a community may be traced directly or indirectly to the impoverishment caused by the dram shops. Police have to be kept and maintained by the people. Fully three-fourths of the work of the police is to look after the dram shops and their products. If a rate payer will carefully examine the items of his tax bill, he will find that, excepting the items for schools and improvements, nearly the whole of what he pays is saddled upon him by these "helping institutions."

We see therefore that the dram shops:

(a) Lessen the amount of assessable property. (b) Diminish the number of available tax payers. (c) Impose heavy burdens of taxation on the community.

This is the way they "help" the tax payers! Shut up these waste banks, give the people a fair chance to be saving, increase the property and lessen the crime, pauperism, and insanity of the country, and thus lighten the burden of taxation.

"But," says the sellers of liquor, "we pay the license fees, we pay the license fees;" and this chorus is chanted by the whole fraternity, from the democratic proprietor of the beer pump and whisky keg, up to the more aristocratic vendor of "Pure Wines and Brandies." This cry is as hollow and misleading as was the other assumption that they "helped" the tax paying community. A slight investigation will convince any one that:

4. Dram shop keepers are merely tax-gatherers.

Here is a city of 10,000 people. In this city we shall suppose there are 2,000 rate payers, and that these rate payers own equal property and so will pay an equal tax. The city needs $10,000 for expenses and improvements for the year. So the two thousand tax payers are called together and the statement is made that $10,000 are required, and advice is asked as to how it can be best raised. Some one suggests that the easiest and best way seems to be, as the city needs $10, 00, and as there are 2,000 rate payers and all equal in property, simply to assess each rate payer $5. $2,000 x $5=$10,000, which is the amount required. All assent to the proposition, and are about to pay the $5 each. But just then a person arises and thus addresses the rate payers:

"Gentlemen, just put back your pocket-books. I have a plan by which the $10,000 can be raised, and not one of you be asked to pay a single cent of taxes."

Immediately the pocket-books are put back, and loud cries demand the plan by which it is proposed to raise the tax without asking the rate payers for a cent.

"Gentlemen," continues the speaker, "I know one hundred men who desire to start business in this city. They are prepared to give you $100 each for the privilege; $100 x 100=$10,000, the sum required, and you will have to pay nothing."

An approving cheer breaks from the assembled rate payers, and they ask that the matter be further explained and the business men introduced.

"Gentlemen," the speaker goes on to say, "these 100 men wish to sell liquors, they will each give you $100 annually for the privilege, but they insist upon one condition, viz.: That you will not ask them for the $100 each until they have taken it in. The first $100 they make they will pay you."

There is no dissent from this proposition, and the 100 business men set up their business, each takes his place behind his bar, and the rate payers watch with interest the making of the first $100

The one hundred men stand behind their bars with their hands in their pockets as if waiting for something. They are not making leather into shoes and selling the shoes; not making wood into furniture, nor rags into paper; not raising fruit, nor planting potatoes, nor sowing grain. They are simply standing there, waiting. By-and-by, the rate payers become impatient and whisper among themselves, "Poor prospect for our $10,000; these fellows are not doing anything." And they call upon the treasurer of the city to stir up the 100 men so that they may do something, and earn and pay over the $100 each. So the treasurer steps up in front of the long line of bars, and says: "Well, gentlemen, the people are getting impatient for their money, and wonder how you expect to earn it by standing still. You seem to be doing nothing to earn this money, but simply stand here in expectant mood with your hands in your pockets. What are you waiting for?"

"What are we waiting for?" they reply, "Why, what should we be waiting for? You surely don't expect us to coin money. Waiting for? We're waiting until your 2,000 rate payers come up to our bars and pass over ten cent pieces sufficient to make up $100 for each of us When you do this you'll get your $10,000 for your treasury, and not before. You can each of you drink something when you pay over, in order to make believe you are getting value for your money. Come, hurry up."

So the treasurer reports. The rate payers make a wry face and say they supposed the $10,000 was to be paid by the 100 business men and not by themselves. But they "eat the leek," and step up to the bars and pass over the money enough to make $100 for each of the one hundred men.

The one hundred business men then gather up the $100 out of each till, and hand it back to the treasurer and say, "Here is your $10,000—you see that as soon as you gave it to us, we were in a position to pay it back to you!"

And the two thousand rate payers look at their pocket-books, and shake their heads and dolefully declare, "Why, after all, we've paid the $10,000; these fellows simply collect it from us. That is all. Of course we drank a "heap of whisky," to make ourselves think we received something in exchange. But we should have been far better off if we had drunk none of it."

But events thicken.

The 100 men are still standing behind their bars in an attitude of expectancy. They are not making shoes, axe-handles or furniture; not planting, sowing, or reaping. There they stand, with their hands still in their pockets, waiting. By-and-by some of the citizens approach them and say, "Well, why aren't you at work, how do you propose to get your living if you don't do anything? What are you waiting for now?"

"What are we waiting for? What should we be waiting for? You've brought us here and we've paid you our fees: now we are waiting for our living. Do you suppose we can exist on air? That we and our families can live and clothe ourselves for nothing? Waiting for, indeed! we're waiting until the 2,000 rate payers step up to our bars and pass dimes and dollars over them sufficient to keep ourselves and our families for this year. We've gathered your taxes for you, now the tax gatherers want their living."

There is no help for it, and so the rate payers have to step up to the bars day after day and pass over sufficient to keep the 100 tax gatherers and their families for the whole year.

Of course they drink a "heap of whisky," to persuade themselves that they are getting some value for their money, but confess that they would be infinitely better off if they had drunk none.

How then stands the account?

There were two methods by which the amount could have been raised. The first was by a direct tax. Each payer would have been called upon for $5, and the 2,000 rate payers would have paid only $10,000. The second was to pay the tax indirectly, through the medium of the dram sellers as tax gatherers. These collected $10,000 from the tax payers, and then gave it back to the city treasurer. They then collected from the rate payers their living and profits for the year, an average of fully $2 500 for each dram seller—a total of $250.000. Upon this they lived, kept their families and laid up their profits. The whole amount gathered by them from the rate payers was $260,000, and this was all taken from the pockets of the people.

First method, direct payment:—

|---|---|
| The city pays $5 for each rate payer..... | $ 10,000 |
| 2nd method, payment through dram sellers:— | |
| The city pays $130 for each rate payer..... | 260,000 |
| Total loss to the city directly..... | $250,000 |

Surely the time will speedily come when the enlightened common sense of the country will abolish such a system of raising revenue, dismiss the tax gatherers to earn an honest living, and save our communities from the dreadful rapine and pillage of the rum traffic.

THE BALLOT FOR WOMAN.

BY MRS. J. F. WATROUS.

Women of full intellectual, moral and spiritual development are deeply interested in true reforms. So far as circumstances permit they go to their help as spontaneously as the mother bird rushes to the nest of her young when she suspects they may be in danger. If conditions prevent their doing the best that might be done, they, in conformity to existing conditions do what they can. This is why the great Iowa campaign found so many women early on the battle ground earnestly working for the triumph of temperance. Where is there a woman of the intelligence and sympathy usual in her sex, who has not been deeply moved by the woes inflicted on humanity by the use of alcoholic drinks? Are there not among these multitudes whose nearest and dearest ones have become drunkards and then criminals? But for these sad facts the Ohio crusade would not have been and the large society known as the N. W. C. T. U. would not exist. It does exist as an intellectual, moral and religious force; but its sublime mission never will be fully achieved until it exists also as a political force.

The idea that "the polls" is necessarily an unsuitable place for women to go to register their names and to deposit their votes appears entirely inconsistent. Why is it more improper to vote by the side of men than it is to congregate with them at church, to meet them in places of business and amusement, to spend hours in their society at parties, etc.? If the polls are at unsuitable places let them be removed to suitable ones. We could vote with more facility, efficiency and permanence of influence than can ever be realized by hours of conspicuous labor at the polls year after year to persuade men to vote as we think best. Women have immensely failed to perceive the necessity of their votes. When they in large number realize this necessity by far the greatest barrier to woman's political influence will have been removed.

A picture of the voting of women so revolting has been presented by opposers of the cause, that many refined, sensitive women had come to the conclusion never to vote even in the interest of schools. When one of this class was refusing the entreaties of her stronger minded sister to vote for school commissioner, her husband came to the rescue, saying, "My dear, you understand it is for the interest of our children, that you vote in this case." She voted, and did not find it the unseemly act she had supposed. Another, who had been equally prejudiced, said she saw that school matters would go wrong in the town where she resided if women did not help the right side by their votes as well as by moral and religious suasion. May the women of our entire republic perceive that this important, brief act, is by far the surest means of confirming the influence of their moral and religious efforts in reform. To call the act ridiculous is false. To call it inconsistent is nonsense. To call it unwomanly is unjust to the true, earnest woman, who lives best, and thrives most, in her God-appointed position of a true helpmeet to man in all the relations of human life.

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS. NO I.

BY MISS C. S. BURNETT.

No. 1.—Some of the mistakes we make.

By we in this article I mean the temperance workers; not all of them I am glad to say. First, there is a large class of men who may be termed middle men; men who are not in the advanced rank of temperance workers, yet who are above the whisky ring and hate it. We make a great mistake in assailing this body of men as careless of the public weal. Some of us anathematize the man who will talk for temperance, but will not vote the prohibition ticket, as a hypocrite, thereby losing a good worker. Some of us will throw suspicion on a total abstainer who does not feel it his duty to sign the pledge, forever alienating him by our misconception. Some of us accuse those ladies who cannot find time to attend all our meetings, of lack of interest in the cause, offending them so they withdraw altogether. In short, some of us draw an exceedingly small circle and call upon all temperance people to come inside of it or be classed with the friends of whisky. But we don't ALL do it. We want to disarm criticism by inviting it to be friendly. We want to make our platform broad enough for all enemies of intemperance to stand upon. Let him that is not against us be for us.

Again, we trust too much to our organizations and do not make enough individual effort. We are in too much of a hurry. We want results immediately, forgetting it is God's work and that we are only workers. God is the motive power; to Him we appeal. Let us carry on this enterprise in the spirit of that good old reformer, Nehemiah, who prayed while he worked. While building the walls of the city he says, "We made a prayer unto God and set a watch." Human means are necesssary. God will not perform a miracle to do what we can do ourselves.

Another mistake we make is in removing the responsibility from the drunkard. We lay the blame upon the seller, while the fact is the drunkard is himself a criminal and deserves not only censure but punishment. The fact that a man is tempted is no excuse for doing wrong. Intemperance is the one great sin of our times, and surely the drinker is one of the parties involved in the sin.

Again, we make a mistake in not enforcing the laws we have while we are laboring to secure prohibition. We all know that if liquors were not sold to minors, nor drunkards, nor on Sundays, we would not have one saloon where we now have five. The business of selling liquor to good temperance people would not be very profitable. Our boys are ruined before they are of a legal age to purchase liquor, yet parents sit quietly down while their sons nightly visit these haunts, because they dread to expose them by bringing them before the law.

It is a mistake to allow one class to live in open violation of law while others must obey.

Yes, we do make mistakes, but through them all God isleading us to sure and speedy victory.

PERSONAL CONTACT.

BY MARGARET E. WINSLOW.

Some years ago a great, because a good man, set himself to think upon the various miseries of his fellow creatures and to devise means of alleviating them so far as one man might. He saw around him all manner of charitable enterprises, hospitals for the sick, almshouses for the poor, asylums for the blind, etc. But a class that no one seemed to have any thought for were the poor imbecile, idiotic children, born apparently without all the faculties of a human being, and generally considered as not having souls, utterly incapable of improvement, and only to be endured, abused or kindly treated as the characters and dispositions of those around them might dictate.

Remembering who had once recalled life and intelligence to the idiotic, and restored even those possessed of devils to their right minds, this philanthropist resolved to devote his life to experiments upon the possibility of bringing some light and comfort into these otherwise dark and dreary lives, and he advertised for idiotic children to be brought to him.

Among a number of these unfortunates thus placed in his care, was a boy of about five years, who had never stood upon his feet, never given an intelligent look nor uttered an intelligible sound, never even swallowed any solid food. He was just a mass of animate flesh and that was all. For days, weeks, and months, the good man plied his experiments, but with no shadow of success, and at length all but discouraged, he gave up all plans but one, which was to lay the unfortunate child on the floor during the noon hour which he allowed himself for rest amid the fatigues of his arduous life, and lying down beside and in contact with him read aloud in a monotonous tone whatever book he happened to be reading.

This went on for six months without any apparent change, when one day the philanthropist, too weary even to read, dropped his book and closed his eyes. In a little while the idiot boy manifested a strange restlessness, opening and shutting his eyes, rolling over uneasily and making weak attempts to raise his hitherto useless hands, which at last after many failures he succeeded in doing and placed his wavering finger on his friend's lips; thus indicating a desire that he should continue to make the accustomed sound. The glad philanthropist forgetting his fatigue sprang to his feet with a shout of thanksgiving that his patient waiting was so blessed.

It would be interesting to trace the gradual steps by which that dawning spark of intelligence became the "perfect day" of intellect and culture, but all I know of the case is that at the close of five years more the boy appeared at an exhibition of the institution which grew out of these successful experiments, looking and acting much as any ordinary child of five might do, recited a little poem with correctness and grace, repeated a list of the kings of England and the presidents of the United States without a mistake, could read, write a little, sing and play like any other child of his apparent age. His first five years of existence were a blank but the last five, thanks to the patient sympathy of a Christ-like man, had developed all that the first five years usually develop in average child-life.

I say Christ-like man, for there is One greater indeed than a philanthropist, and yet including that in his many sided nature, who for thirty patient years lay down by the side of and in contact with debased humanity that He might rekindle within it the flickering spark of Divine life, and who now sees of the travail of His soul and is satisfied, not only as multitudes of redeemed individuals enter His kingdom upright in the glorious liberty of the children of God; but as the whole fallen race gradually rises and gives an earnest of the promised dominion of universal brotherhood, righteousness and peace. Let all of us who aspire to be fellow helpers with Him by working among and for the degraded and unfortunate, follow His example by coming down to the level of those we would save; not by personal degradation but by loving sympathy; bringing our higher moral status into contact with the dull insensibility of vice, and waiting patiently till the miracle is wrought, the blind and dumb devils cast out, the idiot and the maniac clothed and sitting in their right minds at the feet of Jesus.

HOW SHALL THE BRAIN HAVE REST.

Dear Union Signal:—Without claiming wisdom in hygiene I will venture a few remarks in reply to "G.'s" query in The Union Signal of Feb. 7, 1884. Before considering remedies it is often well to first study into causes.

Let us draw a picture of the life training of a girl, preferably of the city; to which additions or substractions may be made to suit individual cases.

Naturally active as all heathly children are, and bright, mother and teacher exert all their energies in directing the child's activity into channels calculated to develop mental precocity. It is "unrefined" and "so very coarse to play like a boy" the girl is denied the active games of her brothers. The restraint is increased as she nears womanhood, and at the age of eighteen or twenty years she has reached a mental development greatly out of proportion to her physical development. Her mental development is as great if not greater than her brother's who has received many times the amount of physical development. His has been constant and gradually increased with his years; hers has been spasmodic and of a character to exhaust—the dancing school, etc. The little out-door exercise of her life has been obtained principally on the way to and from school.

At the age of twenty she enters the school room as a teacher. Heretofore her life has been care free; she now assumes cares and responsibilities incident to a well ordered school.

Standing upon her feet nearly all of each day's session, she sustains an additional strain due to muscular efforts in maintaining the upright position. The great difference between the mental and physical development soon asserts itself and the young woman's burdens are greater than she can bear. Her nervous system so long used in surveillance over mental activities is now forced to exercise surveillance over new sets of activities heretofore neglected. She is sustained for a while by the physiological processes brought about by food and rest. But she is soon overpowered by the continued strain incident to a work requiring a physical ability nearly if not quite equal to the mental. A perversion of functions is soon manifested; sleep fails to refresh; food is not relished; headaches occur; there is "nervousness," and the overworked woman "tosses in restless wakefulness" after retiring. She is no longer "naturally active" but abnormally so. Rest during waking hours is "enforced idleness" and is torture.

From a study of causes it is evident the first and best remedy is prevention, which consists in maintaining a physical development commensurate with the mental, and observing all the physiological demands of nature.

But the damage being done how shall we relieve the sufferer? Bathe the back of the neck with very hot or very cold water, before retiring. Sleep in a cool room, sixty degrees Fahrenheit, with pure air; exclude the outer air, it is too stimulating and may add to the wakefulness. Three to six deep inspirations, easily and slowly taken after getting into bed will often induce a tendency to sleep. The reading of light and pleasing reading matter, just before retiring is not a bad plan.

For waking hours, rest must be obtained by a change of occupation, a trip on the cars to see a friend, though short, will often produce the very best results, it occupies the mind and, for the time relieves it of effort. Any measure that will occupy the mind and change the channel of thought, at the same time insure relaxation of mental and physical effort will produce rest and induce sleep—unless the strain has been carried on to a condition threatening organic integrity, then the family physician will be the best counsellor. Eliza H. Root, M.D.

UNARRESTED THOUGHT.

Dear Union Signal.—Shall I give you the latest manifestation of the ingenuity of some of our young ladies that has come to my notice?

Happening recently into the store of a leading florist, just as he was putting the finishing touches to what appeared to be a number of exquisite bouquets, of immense size, floral fans, etc., he called my attention to them saying, "Aren't these queer bouquets? They are for a leap year party this evening?" The air was heavy with perfume, but as I looked more closely I said, "What are these, anyway?" "Queer flowers, ain't they?" he answered with a smile.

And this was the fashion thereof. A huge bouquet the size of a half peck measure, composed entirely of crimson tulips, had one dozen cigars (at a cost of $1.50) most ingeniously mingled here and there among the flowers. Another, of lovely rosebuds, lilies of the valley, mignonette in abundance, maiden hair fern, and every blossom of beauty that money could buy, had on one side two dozen vile cigarettes. A large palm leaf shaped fan, made of rows of carnations and roses alternately, had all around its border, cigars, projecting like so many iron spikes on top of a fence. Last, and worst of all, there was a great bunch of lovely carnations and all among them, fastened on wire, were at least two dozen champagne corks, looking as if the bottle certainly was hidden beneath the blossoms.

I don't know whether indignation or pity was uppermost in my mind. Especially was I astonished as there flashed upon my memory the family history of the young lady who was giving special directions regarding the arrangement of the flowers. I remembered the sorrow the champagne bottle had brought into her own home, and the handsome father who, not many years ago, had fallen a victim to his appetite for stimulants.

What can the girls be thinking of? Could any young man who received these tokens, think their donors had any objection to wine or tobacco? And when the future sees many heavy-eyed, sad-hearted wives in place of the laughing girls who are now giving such leap year "favors", will it be any wonder to us?

I hope the knowledge of the mischief into which our girls are going and leading their young gentlemen friends will stimulate our workers among the Y. W. C. T. U.'s to redouble their efforts to capture for temperance work all these merry, careless girls who have never yet had the "arrest of thought," of which Miss Willard speaks.

While traveling abroad last summer, my heart used to ache when I watched our pretty American girls (and they were the prettiest ones I saw) at luncheon or table d'hote. The wine bottle was almost invariably beside their plates, and it astonished me to see how much wine they were compelled to drink "to prevent the water from hurting them". Our party of three, father, mother and child, drank all the water that was needful,—no wine at all,—and were perfectly well during four months of constant travel, proving what I already believed, that it is always safe, for all classes, to drink neither wine nor strong drink.

Evidently, there is need of doing great work among our young people in America, and for this reason would we urge untiring efforts everywhere, to secure systematic temperance instruction in our public schools.

Mrs. Jos. D. Weeks,
Supt. Scient. Temp. Inst., Penn.

WHN SHALL BE THE JUDGE?

Dear Union Signal:—I have of late seen many complaints made to the effect that Christian people do not do for the cause of temperance a fractional part of what the whisky element do for intemperance. This is certainly true, for the attention of moral people is not all centered on temperance, it is given to many questions of perhaps equal importance and this could not well be otherwise. There are our schools and churches our foreign and home missions, our charities and our homes. All these demand our time, our money, our thought. The great majority of Christians, I fear, give the subject of temperance but little attention; other matters crowd it out. Ministers even are frequently so absorbed in their individual churches, in pastoral duties, and denominational questions, that, unless asked to speak at some temperance convention their attention is not directed to the important subject. They cannot then be taken as guides, for they know little of the issue before us. Now how is it with the enemy, the saloonist? His whole attention is centered on his business. He gives his money to no other object; his purse, his voice, his pen are all fully employed for the advancement of his interest, intemperance.

Now who is the better judge of what will work to the advantage or disadvantage of the alcoholic traffic, the minister who has given but little thought to the matter, who is often wanting in keen, business, worldly common sense, or the brewer and saloonist who are constantly on the alert to forward their interests? Undoubtedly the latter.

Then when ministers like Beecher are favoring the license system, and declaring that prohibition will not succeed but will rather aid the traffic in intoxicants, and when, on the other hand the whisky men are doing all in their power to defeat prohibition to what conclusion are we forced? Either that the saloon element do not see what is so often declared to be to their advantage, constitutional prohibition, or they understand the situation better than Beecher and can be trusted to look out for their own interests. I think all must say that the latter is the correct conclusion, and if we as temperance workers would succeed, we must advocate and work for what they so persistently oppose, constitutional prohibition and woman suffrage.

I have just bound last year's Union Signals and I now have them in good form for reference or for loaning to my friends. I do not agree with last week's correspondent who does not believe in preserving papers. Our Union Signal is too valuable for future use not to carefully preserve. Pardon me for again asking if an index of the contents for each number could not be given each week? It would be of great value.

One of our largest saloons advertises to cure drunkenness. Is not that rather incongruous with the business?

THE WORK SHOP. NO, III.

That Souvenir Fund Again—New Orleans Exposition—Finance Cards—Twenty Dollars of Our Million—The Home Vote.

A postal just received from our Illinois superintendent of hygiene is full of suggestion and refreshment. It reads thus:

Carlinville, Feb. 29, 1884.

Here is a point too good to lose. While reading "The Work Shop. No. II," with Sister Gwinn yesterday she remarked of the silver cup number three, "How appropriate that the women give up their cups to persuade the men to give up theirs." Those blessed harmless cups which have given only pleasure and happiness to their owners and all others concerned, to be given to enable the work to go on which persuades people to abandon their "cups" in which lurks the "worm of the still." May the Lord bless the gifts and the givers, was our prayer then and now. Sincerely yours,

Lucinda H. Corr.

Blessed old Oberlin, Ohio, sends a "responsive throb" to the appeal for souvenirs and appoints Mrs. Josephine Marlet as the committee to receive "according to what a W. C. T. U. hath and not according to what it hath not." So Mrs. M. sends the little gold-lined cup of her little boy in heaven, which she "couldn't give to a cause less dear."

"Illinois ahead!" exclaims Mrs. Emma Kirkpatrick of Monmouth, handing me a jewelled ring given her a year ago by Miss Alexander, a teacher, who said as she could not invest much time, she offered this memento. Whereupon Mrs. T. B. Carse placed a heavy gold ring in my hand as a "companion piece." Here is a letter from the Golden state:

Pescadero, Cal.

Have just read the article respecting the N. W. C. T.

U. Jewelry and Souvenir Fund, and wish to contribute something immediately. I have no doubt but the "Fund" will prove one of the greatest successes financially that the W. C. T. U. has yet realized. While I hope there may be thousands of gifts from the Pacific coast, I cannot help having a little wish that mine may be the first from the far west.

I will send a cup given me by beloved pupils and one I highly prized.

With best wishes,
Yours sincerely, L. M. CARVER.

There are many other responses filed and the "Fund" is a pronounced success already. Keep on, dear sisters, Miss Pugh has provided a safe place for all your precious gifts.

The spirit of divination is evidently upon our women along the line of that "wherewithal" so "needful" but so niggardly in the time past. From widely different localities come the following with suggestions full of practical value. Let us have more—the more the merrier! We could not make a "Fair" succeed, but one booth is surely not beyond our compass. Who will help supply the bric-a-brac, fancy work, etc., for the New Orleans exposition and thus aid the Southern W. C. T. U. Girls, here's a chance for your ingenious fingers, and boys, the scroll saw can be turned to good account just here!

The following is from our president at Louisville, Ky., Mrs. N. E. Munnell:

As soon as I ascertained that the Centennial Exposition was an assured fact, I wrote Mrs. Merrick, of New Orleans, and suggested that the W. C. T. U. there, procure prominent space in the building and a call be made by you through THE UNION SIGNAL, asking each union to send to it one article at least, to be placed on exhibition and to be sold, the proceeds to go to the N. W. C. T. U.

It does seem to me, by a united effort, a fine collection could be secured. Each union could afford to furnish one article—bric-a-brac, embroidery, paintings, fancy work, anything and everything—and if it should be sold for less than its real value, it would still be a gift. The visitors at such places, usually desire something to take home as a souvenir, so I think there would be no difficulty in "selling out". New Orleans will be the attraction and the great multitude must be supplied. Why can't we furnish the articles? Is it impracticable? Suppose, an article worth twenty dollars, should sell for fifteen or even ten (they could be sold for less than their value to secure customers) what was made would be clear profit. And suppose one half of the unions sent one article, worth one or two dollars, of course many would sell for ten times that sum, would not the proceeds be quite satisfactory? It was a wish, but has passed into a prayer, that we try this plan to put money into the treasury of our mother.

This is from one of my brightest pupils at "Old Genesee," Lima, N. Y. She is now state superintendent of literature work in Mo.:

Give me credit for an idea. Whether it is practicable or not remains for you to decide. I have written a letter for my unions throughout Missouri, in which I send a dime collection card, begging that every one of our unions shall fill at least one of these cards, which contains room for subscriptions for $3. This from Missouri would send to our national treasury at least $300. Suppose now each of our 300 unions do this and send to Miss Colman $9000. Allowing now to each union one half the subscription sent in returned literature, the fund passed into the national treasury would be $4,500. and could not this be used to pay this debt which so troubles us all? This is my question. MARY P. SWAN.

The debt is paid already, so what is sent will count for our "Forward march."

OLYMPIA, W. T., Feb. 7, 1884.

The command in Gal. 6:2 is, "Bear ye one another's burdens," etc. I saw a statement in THE UNION SIGNAL "If we had a million of money we could carry prohibition in three years." I send this twenty dollars, and you may call it the first installment of the "million," and make a call through THE UNION SIGNAL for others to respond to the request in sums as small or large as they will, you using it as though you had the whole amount in hand, just trusting God to dispose hearts to send. Do not use my name, but say a member of a local union in West Washington Territory.

One more extract on a different but not less important theme is a letter of Chief Justice Greene, of Washington territory, apropos of the newly enfranchised class:

We here, who love order, hope much from woman's co-operation in public affairs. Average woman has a less blunted moral sense, and an intellect less inclined to be technical than the average man. She has already been tested on our grand and petit juries, greatly to her credit. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

THANK OFFERINGS.

TREASURER'S REPORT OF COLLECTIONS DEC. 23, 1883.

DEAR SISTERS:—I realize that the patience of those who sent their offerings promptly has been tried by waiting for the more tardy, that they may know the amount. The money has continued to come to the very moment that I send this to our paper, and I have had to keep a perpetual alteration of the report since it was prepared. It will be seen that Boston sends an equal amount with Yonkers and San Jose. This was in the hands of the treasurer at the time of the thank offering meeting, but the report of what W. C. T. U. sent it had failed (through the mail's delay) to reach her till after that date. Please notify me by postal of any change necessary to be made. Sums received hereafter will be published in THE UNION SIGNAL. ESTHER PUGH, Treasurer.

CIDER.

BY LIZZIE T. LARKIN.

I curse the day, said Farmer Brown,
That ever I made a drop;
For there's my Fred to ruin gone;
I doubt if he can stop.

And yet I've made it year by year,
And in my cellar stored;
I've drank it with my family
Around the social board.

And if a neighbor happened in
To have an evening chat,
'Twas, "Have some cider with us friend,"
Ere he could doff his hat.

And so the cider-mug went round,
And all must have a drink;
How strange it seems to me today
I didn't stop and think!

There's Harry, too, he loves the taste;
I see it more and more.
I've been a fool, it seems to me,
To be so blind before.

I saw him going up the road
A day or two ago,
And wondered why he looked so queer
And walked so very slow.

I'm glad I saw and took him home
Before he got to school,
To show to all who saw him there
His father was a fool.

The boy was drunk; on cider, too;
I smelt it in his breath.
I laid him on on his mother's bed,
And oh! she looked like death.

A fool and blind I've been for years
To make the wretched stuff.
I'll make no more, God helping me;
It's cursed us long enough.

My boys! what can I do for them?
'Twas said in days of yore,
"'Tis useless, when the horse is stole,
To lock the stable-door."

I'll lock it, then, for other boys,
Lest they to ruin go;
I'll labor night and day for Fred,
My boy; I've loved him so.

God help me win him back again
To soberness and truth,
And grant my Harry may not be
A drunkard in his youth.

BLUEBELLS, OR THE BOOTBLACK'S STORY.

BY MRS. M. ORRELL.

One fine morning as I was leisurely walking down Main street, with no particular object in view, my attention was attracted to a little bootblack. Some one in passing had dropped, or carelessly thrown away a small bunch of bluebells. My attention was first attracted to the little fellow by his stooping to pick them up, but what was my amusement to see him tenderly kiss them and then carefully fasten them in the button-hole of his faded jacket. My curiosity was aroused, I made up my mind to quiz the boy, so I walked up to him and asked him for a shine. I looked at the boy carefully, he was very small and very poorly dressed, he was pale and thin, and the large blue eyes looked as if they were full of unshed tears.

"Half-a-dime," he said, when he had put a fine polish on my shoes.

I took out a quarter, and said, as I balanced it on my forefinger. "Here is ten cents for the shine and fifteen cents for those flowers," pointing to the bluebells in his button-hole.

He put his small hand over the flowers quickly, and gave a quick gasp.

"No, sir; I can't sell them; if I was starving I would not sell a bluebell."

"And why not, my little man?" I inquired.

He looked at me so piteously that I was almost sorry I had asked him. I put my hand on his head and said:

"Excuse me for asking, you need not tell me unless you wish to, and you can keep the quarter besides."

He looked up at me a moment and then said:

"I like you, and if you care to listen I'll tell you."

"Of course I am anxious to hear why you love the lu ebells."

"I will commence at the first and tell it all to you, but first let us go down there and set down," pointing to some dry goods boxes not far from where we stood.

We went, and after seating ourselves on a small box behind some larger ones, where we would not be observed, he took the bluebell bouquet and holding it carefully in his hand began by saying:

"It is just a year this month, and it has been such a long year I thought the bluebells would never come," and then he stopped and put his hand over his eyes as if trying to shut out some horrid sight. I did not interrupt his reverie. Presently he took down his hand, and said abruptly:

"My father was a drunkard. We once owned some fine property, I've heard mother say, but that was before I was born, for we always have been poor as far back as I can remember. Mother says that father drank up the farm, the oxen, horses, sheep, cows, hogs, furniture and everything else. We got so poor that mother had to go out and wash by the day to get food, for baby Bess and me to eat. We lived in a little log house a quarter of a mile from any one; it was half a mile to town. Mother used to walk to town every day, except Saturday, to wash for somebody. On Saturday she washed for ourselves and ironed on Sunday."

"Sunday is the Lord's day, your mother certainly did not work on the Sabbath!"

"Yes, sir, she had to. Mother said the Lord made six days for the saloon-keeper and one for Himself, but He forgot to make a day for the drunkard's wife. She said the saloon-keepers had confiscated the Lord's day, but she hoped the Lord would consider her circumstances and forgive her for working on the Sabbath. She said if there were no saloons she would not have to work on Sunday. There were just four of us, father, mother, baby Bess and Willie, that is me."

"So your name is Willie? but go on with your story."

"Well, as I said, mother was away all day, and sometimes she would not get home until after dark; she was not very strong, and sometimes she had awful big washings, and sometimes we didn't have much to eat, because the ladies mother washed for didn't have the right change or they would forget to ask their husbands for it. Mother always hated to ask for money after she earned it; she said it did seem as if they ought to know that she needed the money or she would not wash for it, and it generally happened that when one didn't have the change none of them did, so sometimes we got awful hungry while we were waiting for folks to pay us."

"Why didn't your mother ask for her money, it was hers after she earned it?"

"She was afraid to, for sometimes they would get mad and say she didn't half wash their clothes, and then they would hunt up a new wash woman. It was one of those weeks when nobody had any change; it was Friday morning; we had very little to eat on Thursday and on Friday morning there were only a pint of corn meal and about two spoonfuls of molasses. Mother baked the meal into bread, and told me to feed baby when she woke, and to keep a sharp lookout for father; he was in town on a big spree; he was awful cross when he was drinking; it was not safe for him to get his hands on us, so we always hid when we saw him coming, if mother was not at home. Little Bess would nearly go into fits when she saw him coming home drunk.

"'Don't let Bessie cry if you can help it, Willie. I am afraid I won't get home until after dark tonight, Mrs. Gray always has such large washings, but I will come as soon as I can, and I will bring home some provisions, for I must have some money tonight or we will starve.' She kissed baby Bess as she lay asleep and then kissed me at the door. 'Be a good boy, Willie, and take care of little sister.'

"Bessie slept a long time that morning, and I passed the time in sitting by her and in going to the door to watch for father. When she woke up she said the first thing, 'Baby is so hungry, Willie get something to eat,' but I said, 'Get up, Bessie and let me dress you and then we will have breakfast.' I had not eaten a mouthful nor had mother tasted food before leaving home, and I was awful hungry myself. She got up, and I dressed, washed and combed her; but when we sat down at the table Bessie looked at the food and then she just dropped her curly head right down on the table, and sobbed out, 'Oh, Willie, I am so tired of corn bread and molasses I can't eat it. I want some meat and butter.' 'Don't cry, baby,' I said, stroking her curls, 'mother will bring home something tonight.' 'But it is long to wait—this is Mrs. Gray's day and mother is always late when she washes for her.' 'Try to eat,' I said, and I put a spoonful of molasses on her plate, and she did try, but she only swallowed a few mouthfuls, and then she left the table. I ate a small piece of dry bread, I thought maybe she would eat the molasses, so I did not touch it. All day she kept saying she was hungry, but refused to eat what we had. It was a long day to both of us. Father had not come home and it was nearly dark; we were both sitting on the door step, Bessie laid her head against my arm and began to cry, 'I'm so hungry, Willie, mother stays so late tonight.' 'Don't cry, baby, mother will soon be home.' 'Of course she will,' exclaimed George Anderson. He lived a mile beyond us, and as he spoke he tossed a bunch of bluebells into Bessie's lap. 'Oh, how pretty!' she exclaimed, while the tears dropped from her sweet blue eyes down on the pretty bluebells. 'Come, Bessie,' I said, 'let me fasten them among your curls.'

"She got up and stood on the doorstep with her face toward the house. I stood behind her and tied the bluebells in her golden curls. I had just fastened the last one when some one jerked me off the bottom step. It was father; he was drunk, and I knew by his looks that he was almost crazy with drink. He pushed me aside and stood between little Bessie and me. Bessie turned to run, but he caught her and said, 'You have been crying; what did Willie do to you?' She was so white and scared that I thought she would faint. 'Willie didn't do nothing,' she gasped out. Father let go her and grasped me; he commenced to shake me awful. 'You rascal, what did you do to Bessie? Tell me or I will shake the breath out of you.' He shook me so I could not answer. Then little Bessie caught him by the arm, 'Please, father, don't hurt Willie; I was so hungry it made me cry.' He looked in at the table and saw the bread and molasses. 'You little white-faced liar, you are not hungry; look at that table, there is plenty to eat, and good enough, too, for such a brat as you;' and he shook her roughly. She began to cry and I tried to put my arm around her, but father pushed me away. 'If you can't eat anything I will give you something to drink,' and he caught her up in his arms and started down the path that led to the pond where we got wash water; it was not a frog hole, the water was as clear as a lake, and it was surrounded by green grass and several large trees grew near its bank, it was a lovely place for skating in winter. It was only a short distance from the house. Bessie hushed crying, but she looked so awful scared, I followed close behind father. 'I'll give you something to drink,' he exclaimed, when he reached the edge of the water, and he walked right into the water, and I followed, scarcely knowing what I was doing I was so frightened, he waded in about knee deep, then he took Bessie and putting her feet under one arm he put her little curly head down under the water, she threw up her little white hands and cried out, 'Oh, Willie, take baby,' just as the curly head went down.

"I waded around father and tried with all my strength to raise her head out of the water, but father held it down. I begged father to to take her out, but he did not listen to me. She threw up her hands wildly, there was a gurgling sound, and then all was still. I begged father to take her out, I prayed God to save Bessie's life, but all in vain, God was far away and did not hear my cry, at least it seemed hours to me, but at last father lifted up Bessie's white dripping face. I called her name frantically, madly, wildly, but her blue lips didn't move; she was dead. Father carried her and lay her down on the green grass. 'I guess she won't be hungry for a while,' he said, as he laid her down. I was so stunned that I neither moved nor spoke, until I saw the bluebells that I had twined in Bessie's hair floating out on the water. I could not bear to see them drift away, it seemed as if it was dear little Bessie's sweet, dead face drifting away, I could not bear the thought, so I waded out after them, the water was deep and on I went, it was up to my arm pits, now over my shoulders, still the bluebells were just beyond my reach, but I must have them, the water touched my chin, another step and I caught them, and, just as I did, I heard mother call: 'Willie, oh, Willie! where are you?' I looked for father; he was seated on the ground by Bessie. 'Willie, oh, Willie!' came mother's voice again. I was out of the water now, but so weak I could scarcely stand. 'Bessie, oh, Bessie!' I called back, 'Here, mother, at the pond.' Father gave one mad leap into the water; he plunged in face down. I was so terrified I did not know what to do. I heard mother coming. I trembled so I could not walk, so I crawled up to Bessie, and taking father's old straw hat put it over Bessie's dead face to keep mother from seeing it. In a moment she came in sight. She saw I was dripping with water. 'Willie, Willie, what is the matter?' I could not speak. She lifted the hat off of Bessie's face. She stood for a moment as if turned to stone. 'Tell me how it happened, Willie; tell me, quick.' Then I found voice and told her everything. She heard me through without a word, but when I had finished, shriek after shriek rent the air. She stood with clasped hands over Bessie, and shrieked such unearthly cries that soon the neighborhood flocked to the spot. Father had drowned himself; his body was taken from under the beautiful water and buried in the cemetery along side of Bessie. Mother was a raving maniac from the moment she uttered the first heart rending cry over her dead baby Bess. I put the bluebells in a little box and hung them around my neck, but after the funeral I lay in the hospital, sick for weeks with brain fever, but when I came to myself the box was still around my neck; here it is," and he drew from his bosom a small box, which, upon opening, revealed a few withered leaves.

"They speak of sweet little baby Bessie," he said, as he closed the box and slipped it back under his shirt bosom. Then he looked me straight in the eye and said:

"Please, Mr., don't ever vote for whisky. It killed father and dear little babie Bessie, my only sister, and it locked mother up in the mad house. Please, don't vote for rum."

And I, man that I was, drew the little bootblack down and kissed him, and said:

"God helping me, I never will vote for license, or whisky men again."—From the Temperance Crisis.

SPARROWS.

BY MRS. A. D. T. WHITNEY.

Little birds sit on the telegraph wires,
And chitter, and flitter, and fold their wings.
Maybe they think that for them and their sires
Stretched always on purpose, those wonderful strings;
And perhaps the thought that the world inspires
Did plan for the birds among other things.

Little birds sit on the slender lines,
And the news of the world runs under their feet:
How value rises and now declines,
How kings with their armies in battle meet;
And all the while, 'mid the soundless signs,
They chirp their small gossipings, foolish and sweet.

Little things light on the lines of our lives—
Hopes and joys and acts of today;
And we think that for these the Lord contrives,
Nor catch what the hidden lightnings say;
Yet from end to end His meaning arrives,
And His word runs underneath all the way.

Is life only wires and lightning, then,
Apart from that which about it clings?
Are the thoughts and the works and the prayers of men
Only sparrows that light on God's telegraph strings—
Holding a moment and gone again?
Nay: He planned for the birds with the larger things!

A TEMPERANCE WOMAN'S DREAM.

Which was not Perhaps all a Dream.

BY MRS. SARA FAWCETT.

I had been appointed to the presidency of a district. A new year of effort and planning lay before the temperance hosts. There seemed to be great need for earnest, consecrated effort. The enemy was presenting a bold and defiant front, while a few of the professed friends of the cause were faltering by the way. (It takes a cloud no larger than a man's hand to cause some people to lose both faith and courage). And thus it was those whose purposes were fixed were gathering up for the conflict, relying on the strong, Almighty Arm for support. I had spent a weary day in looking up the boundaries of my district and calculating the best and most available forces to set in motion for an active campaign. On returning to my home I was conscious of great fatigue and sought my couch for a few moments' rest and soon fell asleep, dreaming a dream which was not perhaps so unreal as are many dreams. I dreamed that I was in a place of utter darkness, where I had seemed to have been sleeping and that I was wakened by voices that seemed to come from out untold distances, warning me of near and approaching danger. Starting up and looking around, lights, not unlike calcium lights, began streaming out over the darkness, and I discovered just before me a huge serpent, so large he seemed indeed to outrival all my wildest imaginings. These lights of which I speak only shone over parts of his body, as he lay in a direct line before me; the strongest light seeming to shine about the monster's head, changing in the color of the light, at times becoming perfectly lurid. His head was raised from the ground full two feet thereby giving him a defiant attitude.

If there is one thing in the world that I have a greater horror of than another, it is a snake, and to be alone with such a monster as this, and no light save those colored flashing ones that only seemed to make the scene one of more intense horror—little wonder that I began looking and trying to call for help. Soon I heard voices and knowing that I was safe, at least so long as his snake shipseemed to be moving from me, I stood perfectly still, almost powerless to move, keeping close watch in the meantime that he did not turn his head toward me, and soon I discovered a second figure. Standing only a few feet from this terrible creature's head was a little child apparently about four years of age. She had long golden ringlets and was so fair and innocent looking, so unconscious of danger, that I lost all thought of myself in planning some way to rescue her. Just as I had made up my mind to rush forward and seize the child, the snake seemed to turn his head a little more toward her, and with one frantic cry I rushed forward to grasp her from him, with the great fear that I should miss my hold and see her devoured. With this cry I awoke and was so thankful that it was a dream—and yet my friends there is much in it for reflection.

There truly is a serpent aboard in the land, false lights are gleaming all about him. Wealth, wicked legislation, prejudices of the people, social position, etc., and there is not only one child in danger, but thousands as fair and beautiful as was the one of my dream, and the youth and the middle aged, are alike in peril from the poisonous fangs of this reptile.

Women of Illinois, of the northwest, of the nation, shall we stand quietly by and offer no remonstrance, or will we with true hearts uplifted to God, move to the rescue, not scorning the small effort, nor deeming the larger of any account without His blessing, but doing with all our might whatsoever our hands find to do against this common foe, ever remembering that if God be for us, He is more than all they that are against us.

OUR COOK BOOK.

Delicious Soup.—1 quart tomatoes, ½ teaspoon of soda. Let stew until tomatoes are thoroughly cooked. Let 1 gallon milk boil and pour on tomatoes, stirring well. Boil together 15 minutes and strain; then reheat, adding pepper, salt and tablespoon of butter, with a little pounded cracker, if preferred. This soup is especially nice for lunches, dinner parties and invalids, because of its delicate, peculiar flavor.

To Roast Mutton.—Take hind quarter, wash and put in basting pan 2½ hours before dinner, adding 3 pints water and pinch of salt. When warmed through put on the dressing, stuffing with the same, and basting at intervals until done. For dressing peel and cut two medium sized potatoes and one medium sized onion. Grate 4 biscuits or an equal quantity of light bread and add 1 dessertspoon of flour. Mix 1½ tablespoons sugar 1 teaspoon mustard, 1 dessertspoon salt, 2 tablespoons vinegar and 3 tablespoons tomato catsup. Pour over and mix with potatoes, etc., and the dressing is ready for use. Spread 1 dessertspoon butter over top of dressing.

Two Egg Pudding.—2 cups sugar, ½ cup butter, 2 eggs, 1 cup milk, 3 cups flour. Bake in a dripping pan. When cold cut into three or four pieces for layers, spreading between each layer stewed apples, cherries, or any fruit you prefer. Eat with butter and sugar sauce.

Boiled Custard.—Put 2 quarts new milk into a jar, and set in boiling water until it boils up. Have ready the yelks of 8 eggs beaten light, and stir into the boiling milk, which should continue to boil until it thickens, when you add sugar and flavoring to taste. When ready to use the custard line your bowl with sponge cake, put a piece of plain jelly on each cake, pour on the custard, having the whites of the eggs well beaten for the top.

Meringue Cakes.—Into 1 pound of granulated sugar, break the whites of 8 eggs. Beat well ¾ of an hour until stiff and season with a few drops of vanilla. Drop from desert spoon on ungreased paper, laid in a baking pan, and cook slowly in a moderately heated oven. The cakes ought to leave the paper clean, otherwise they have not been beaten enough or the stove is too hot. If they scorch the least, cook with the stove door ajar.

Prawlines.—3 pints of pickled nuts mixed, 1 pint cream, 1 pint water, 2 pints and 2 tablespoons coffee A sugar. Put sugar and water on and let boil 5 minutes without stirring; then add cream, stirring all the time. Let boil until ropy when dropped in cold water, then pour over nuts, stirring well together. The candy should form when cold a rich dry coating round the nuts and makes a delicious confection.

Turtle Bean Soup.—1 pint beans in a gallon of water to soak over night. In the morning put on soup bone, or 1½ lbs lean beef in the water drained from the beans. Add beans after water has boiled and been well skimmed. When nearly done take meat out, and make into force balls with bread crumbs and a little spice. Have ready 3 hard boiled eggs which are to be sliced with two lemons into the tureen. Strain soup through a colander, let boil up, and pour over meat balls, eggs and lemon. Excellent substitute for mock turtle soup.

Lemon Jelly for Cake.—Juice and grated rind of 2 lemons, 1 cup of sugar, 2 eggs well beaten, butter size of an egg. Beat butter, sugar and eggs together, and stir in the lemon. Boil until clear, stirring constantly. When cold put between layers of cup cake, baked in jelly pans.

The Sunday School Lesson.

MARCH 16. LESSON XI. 1884.

TOPIC: THE COMING OF THE LORD.

LESSON TEXT.—1 Thessalonians, 4: 13–18; 5, 1–8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him. 1 Thess. 4–14.

PLACE.—Written from Corinth to Thessalonica.

TIME.—A. D. 52.

1. Everywhere the teaching of the apostles was that Christ the Lord would come again and receive unto Himself those who believed. The little church of believers at Thessalonica was surrounded by a gainsaying community which reviled and scoffed at the credulity of the disciples when death came and robbed them of their beloveds. No doubt faith was sorely tried, and fears began to annoy and perplex the faithful. In no letter is the great apostle's tender sympathy more beautifully witnessed than in this to the bereaved Thessalonians, as he comforts their hearts and enlightens their souls. He writes because he has failed to tell them as specifically as was needed, that just as surely as Christ died and rose from the dead, just so surely shall these "lost ones" come back again. Since this is so he exhorts them not to sorrow, but to be distinguishable from unbelievers in this, that they rejoice instead of mourning when believers fall asleep in Jesus. When "to depart and be with Christ is far better," Christians fail to properly represent their belief if they weep and wail over those who go. Said Cyprian, "we must not give the heathen an opportunity justly to blaim Christians, by sorrowing for those whom they speak of as living with God, as if they were lost and perished men."

2. How much do we comfort each other with words and thoughts like these? "The air is full of farewells to the dying," but how many of these farewells are like the joyous "Au revoir" (to meet again), which is the right of all who follow Him who said, "and if I go, I will come again and receive you unto myself"

A man riding in his buggy was the other day driving down into the LaSalle street tunnel. On the walk a friend was going by. The two hailed each other with a merry greeting, and the driver passed on into the darkness under the river. Why was the "Hail and farewell" between these two friends so joyous, when to all appearance one was going down into blackness and darkness forever? Simply because they knew, or thought they knew they should meet again. But their hope was empty compared with the Christian's faith as he leaves his loved ones to go before them to "the other side." Why do we not act upon such faith and joy in its assurance?

3. The coming of the Lord is too dear and sweet to all His friends, to be a matter of fright, or to be dreaded like the coming of a thief. If we be the children of the light, the coming of Him who is the true Light in whom is no darkness at all will have no terrors

4. Children of the light will be sober, i. e., allowing nothing to darken the "dome windows of the soul" which look out toward God. Drink befogs not only intellect, but weakness, and deadens the moral sense. It cannot be indulged in by the true Christian even moderately, without blinding his eyes to its effects and its place in, or rather outside of the kingdom of Christ.

5. Children of the light will be workers and watchers. Clothed in the Christian armor they will not only be loyal soldiers of Jesus Christ themselves, but they will take the world for Christ.

A TALK WITH THE Y. W. C T. U.

It is so easy to set the keynote of life at a pitch too low for the sweetest, truest harmonies; so easy to regard life as the place and time for enjoyment only, and in seeking for it, and even working hard for it, to miss the keenest pleasures after all.

It is for this reason that it is a special pleasure to address a few words to that band of earnest young women who are taking a brave view of life, who think of it as a place for work, for making two blades of grass grow where but one sprang up before, who see in humanity a great need, and in themselves a great desire to help. It may be that this thought has not actually shaped itself in your minds according to any such formula as the above. One would not accuse you of goody-goodyism. No doubt you are earnestly seeking a good time—to get the most out of life. But a conviction more or less clear, has taken root in your hearts that to get the most out of life you must give the most to it; and she who gets most is one who gives most largely of all that is precious to her—most largely of herself—for you know, our Master is made to say by one of our greatest poets,

"Who gives himself with his gifts, feeds three Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me."

If you desire real happiness, make others happy and take your happiness on the rebound as you go along.

And now, in giving yourselves to the work of the W. C. T. U., how are you feeding the hungry, and through them the dear Savior Himself? Doubtless this is the question that comes to you. You have formed yourselves into a society, but right here there seems a great chasm between you and the next thing. How to bridge this usefully, is the question. It is often difficult to tell which is more commendable, the spirit which says, "Give us a work to do and then we will organize, but not simply for the sake of having a society and the name of it, with stupid meetings that never have any practical outcome," or that other spirit that says, "Let us organize that we may have an instrument, an agency to work with," and then goes ahead assured and serene in the faith that the instrument once ready and placed in God's hands He will not leave it to rust.

Our society—what is it? What is it for? First of all to make sentiment for total abstinence and first again by reform work. Seeking to transform the lives of men who have gone down through drink. That was the first thought in our work, but out of that idea of reformation have grown a hundred others all tending to the same great end, and bearing on the uplifting and transformation of character. Drinking men are hard to reach. One of God's miracles takes place whenever a drunkard is reclaimed and permanently reformed. A thousand temptations beset such an one. It is our work to remove these in so far as it is God's plan that they be removed. He will never place us outside the possibility of temptation, at least not in this world, but He, Himself, says, "Woe to the world because of offenses," "Take care that ye offend not one of these little ones," and "Woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." It is your work then to make sentiment that shall remove the occasion of offense and stumbling from their way. How will you do it?

The W. C. T. U. takes hold of many levers in this work, but finds its greatest difficulty in reaching the masses.

The masses do not willingly put themselves in the way of being made better. How then shall we go to them? The very shortest route is by way of the juvenile masses. Get the hearts of the children and you have won the fathers and mothers. "Where the lambs go the flocks will follow." The child "set in the midst," taught cleanliness, temperance and godliness will be as leaven, leavening the whole lump. Gather then, these little ones into the kindergarten, the kitchen garden, the industrial school and you will be amazed at the speedy changes in squalid homes. The Y. W. C. T. U. of an inland city unable to establish a kitchen garden, gathered a number of little girls together in an industrial school where they were taught to sew. After a little, a prize was offered to the one who should most neatly make up a bed in her own home. This necessitated inspection of these homes and the beds therein. The mothers wakened up to the need of what aunt Dinah called a "claring up time," and thus the homes were made respectable for the nonce, and the spirit of cleanliness and order was evoked in many dwellings from which it will not depart very speedily, especially now that the children have taken hold of such matters. In some instances the work of the Y. W. C. T. U. along these lines, has led to mothers' meetings, the mother heart called out in gratitude for what had been wrought in the homes, and so brought within the reach of gospel influences to which it was never before accessible.

The W. C. T. U. should have in every place a "local habitation" as well as a name; a home in which there should be a hall for meetings, a reading room for men and boys, a school room for the kindergarten and kitchen garden or industrial school, and then if the need grows and appears beyond a doubt, some sort of a temperance coffee room or restaurant, where at absolute cost the hungry, tempted, drinking man may get his free lunch with his cup of coffee just as well as with his glass of beer.

Indeed one of our most successful gospel workers says that she cannot with a clear conscience preach the gospel of Christ to a poor hungry fellow who has had no breakfast or dinner. Often the warm meal brings him over to praying ground far more quickly than any other possible manifestation of your interest in him.

In such a home as this, the Y. W. C. T. U. should be as a daughter of the house, her place as assured and well defined as the mother's.

But it is not alone here that her work will be. She in a far larger sense than any other, controls society. By the time she has learned the best ways of uplifting and reaching fallen humanity through the children of the fallen, she will have a very clear notion of what should be done to keep humanity from falling. She will not look with favor on the tippling habits of the nice young man in society after she has become so familiar with the misery and degradation which has been the legitimate outgrowth of those habits in their more advanced stages.

She will not only be a loyal, thorough, total abstainer herself, but she will want to set before her friends good reasons why they should be total abstainers also. And right here, you will find your own work branching out into the society in which you move. It is not true that we are a nation of total abstainers. As wealth increases and the opportunity for social enjoyment widens, many errors creep into our social life, and one of the most dangerous today is the practice of treating among men, and social drinking in society. We are to set our forces against this, but how? You cannot nowadays use with force the argument, "If you take a social glass now and then, you may become a drunkard." The young man does not think he will, nay, he stoutly refuses to believe any such thing. If you tell him he ought to abstain for the sake of example, he may heed you if he is a Christian young man, but if not, he will say, "O, those weak fellows will have to go to the wall anyhow." The survival of the fittest is his motto in his strong independent youth, while yet it is untouched by that higher principle of love which was inaugurated by our Lord's dispensation of sacrifice.

We have had moral suasion and legal suasion, and good work is done and will be done by both, but another force is coming to the rescue. For want of a better name, let us call it scientific suasion. It is the persuasion of the intellect by means of scientific truth, by facts substantiated beyond a doubt, by statistics gathered from the most reliable sources, that the law of total abstinence has been written by our Creator on the tissues of the human body, and that he who destroys by the use of strong drink this temple of God, "him shall God destroy," both body and soul. Study this scientific argument for total abstinence. It may well engage your afternoon meetings. Soon you will find yourselves armed with such a panoply of truth that you will be able to meet and quench all the fiery darts of the adversary as they are hurled at your devoted heads by the uninformed tipplers of your acquaintance. You will then perhaps find a fruitful field in temperance sociables to which you will invite your young gentlemen friends, and by discussion, essays, or a properly stuffed question box taken in hand and answered in your own bright, truthful ways, be able to win them over to your side and to co-operation with you.

A hundred ways of making sentiment are open to you. These are but a very few of the many that will occur to you as your work branches out as it is sure to do.

There is scarcely time to suggest one other thought; that of the nobleness of life and purpose which this work is sure to bring to you. The best development of heart and brain are in it, the sure ennobling of character. God has been so good to you in your beautiful homes. He has gifted you with personal endowments delightful to realize and set your lives in a network of precious opportunities and privileges.

You remember the motto of that ancient house of the French nobility, "Noblesse oblige."

What is your obligation? Grade it, estimate it by the nobility of thought and purpose into which by providential care you have been led, and O, be sure it measures up to the height of your own endowment.

---

"High License" is the title of a neatly published pamphlet, written by Col. George Babcock of California, which has just reached us; and which would jar with the force of dynamite the fancied security of deluded high licensists, if it could only, like Archimedes' lever, be placed in position. The "knee deep" plan of circulating temperance literature ought surely to belong to the organization which has learned all methods on its knees. By the side of this brochure is another, "Prohibition for and Against," the curious consorting of Dio Lewis' vicious argument (?) against and John B. Finch's masterly plea for prohibition. Did the National Temperance Society fear to publish this, and is that the reason why Mr. Jno. W. Cummings' name figures as publisher at the old stand? The temperance mint at 58 Reade street, has few more finely stamped pieces in its coinage.

---

The "Prohibitionist's Hand Book" is the latest and best compilation of statistics and arguments that has come to our table. It is from a practical and discriminating hand at prohibition figures, that of the Rev. Dr. Jutkins, corresponding secretary of the prohibition home protection party. The work of his pen is traceable among the compilations and binds the whole together according to a symmetrical plan. Our workers will rejoice in the possession of such a book of reference.

---

The Cherokee nation is in a total abstinence ferment. Three hundred and twenty citizens of Talequah signed the pledge in one week of Mrs. Emma Molloy's labors, among Chief John Bushyehad.

---

Next Sabbath is the day designated by the Synod of Illinois for preaching temperance sermons in Presbyterian pulpits.

The Christian Woman is again in the field of Christian temperance journalism, and at the head of its editorial columns stands the familiar name of Mrs. Annie Wittemeyer, so long the guiding spirit of its former usefulness. Mrs. Wittemeyer is at home in the editorial chair.

* * * * * *

There's nobody more generous than our temperance workers. What with their precious gifts to the national treasury and their bread cast on the water "as they sail, as they sail," I don't know what is to become of them financially. Here is Gov. St. John, for instance, who learning in his Colorado trip of the good work wrought by the W. C. T. U., turns around on leaving the state and says good by to Mrs. Shields, our state president, with a check for $120, as "a donation to the cause."

* * * *

The North Carolina W. C, T. U. are "out" in a beautiful monthly magazine, at only fifty cents a year. It is called the Woman's Temperance Advocate, is published for the W. C. T. U. by Susie E. Williams, and has Mrs. F. M. Bumpus, and Miss. Willard as its editorial contributors. This is enterprise.

* * * * *

A good minister of the Empire state has just died, the Rev. George Grafftey, pastor of the First Baptist church of Oswego, N. Y., of whom it is said that for four years he has preached every Sabbath to the prisoners in the county jail, and every Sabbath has called upon his people to join in his morning prayer for the success of the temperance reform. "His works do follow him."

* * * * *

Another "high license" murder in the $600 saloons of Bloomington. A few nights ago the county physician, Dr. Miller, shot a young man in the office of one of the hotels, about midnight. Both had been drinking. Four bullets entered the body of the victim. "Fatally shot," was the first report, and yet he may live. The young man was probably the first aggressor, but drink was at the bottom of the affair as usual.

* * * * *

"Alcio," who is, I happen to know, one of "our women," writes these pathetic verses in the Weekly Magazine—which is, let me say, one of the best weeklies anywhere.

Swift o'er her face there came the old love-light,
Shining through tears, as tenderly she said,
"Long, long he wandered, lost in gloom and night,
Safe now!—dear God, I thank Thee!—He is dead.

"Oh! evil Fate! that stole my love from me!
Alone I walked for many weary years;
Death, kindly Death, has given him back, and we Shall weep no more—nay! these are happy tears.

"You will not longer wonder, when I say
That I can reach across the mystic sea
And clasp my darling's hand,—oh bless alway
The angel Death, who gave him back to me."

* * * * * *

Ten little boys—belonging to Mrs. Barnes' Boys' Loyal Legion of New York city, have made up a club in their own names and right, for The Union Signal. Ten little voters—soon to be—may The Union Signal tow them safely into the port of good citizenship.

* * * * *

"The Devil's own" is the name of a new brand of cigars. If all the devil's property were as correctly labelled, temperance reformers would have far less to do.

* * * * *

It is said in this connection that three of our colleges, Oberlin, Girard and the United States Naval school prohibit the use of tobacco. So also does Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass. But at Cornell University it is reported that the large majority of the students have voluntarily pledged themselves against its use.

* * * * *

Mrs. Harris, the new police matron at the Four Courts station St. Louis, has reported of her first three week's work, that sixty-one women have fallen to her care, thirty-five of whom were arrested for drunkenness.

* * * * *

A finely chosen tribute to the faithful secretary of the Iowa state Temperance Alliance, Mrs. A. E. McMurray, also state superintendent of The Union Signal work in the W. C. T. U., was the beautiful gold watch and chain given her by the Alliance at its last convention.

On Duty.

News From the Field.

MISSOURI.

Things are rushing along at such a rate, that we hardly have time to breathe, let alone writing for the papers, though we know that The Union Signal should chronicle "all these things." More effective temperance work has been done in Missouri this winter than ever before. Not quite so many "booms" reported as heretofore, for which I am profoundly grateful, for I have noticed that these "booms" have frequently been in the interest of the "boomer," and in such cases blaze and sputter fiercely for a little, but soon go out, because the foundation was not laid broad and deep, because the superstructure was "Hay, wood and stubble;" in short, because the materials (i. e. the people) that stick, were not reached.

George Woodford has been doing good work in the state; truly, a gospel temperance work. With the gospel for a foundation, and Christ for the chief corner stone, a reform must progress. At Hannibal, Joplin, Lamar, Macon City and Springfield, hundreds of men have taken the pledge under the searching, Christian influence of Mr. Woodford's labors. Hundreds of Christian men also have this winter taken the tobacco pledge.

The tobacco crusade in Missouri has fairly, fully begun. At West Plains, on the Memphis R. R., where I formed a union of forty members, who paid in their dues and sent to state treasurer in less than an hour after the union was formed; also got up club for The Union Signal on the spot; there were many signers of the tobacco pledge, a prominent pastor of the place being the first.

This awakening of men's consciences is noticeable everywhere. Thousands have been pledged this winter in the state; at Greenfield, Golden City, (both new unions), Lamar, Joplin, new also, Grant City, Maryville, Cameron, Brookfield, Breckinridge, Clarence and Macon City, where I now am. Col. Woodford was at Macon ten days. He left no ground unturned. After I spoke last night, sixty-two men, young and old (but more old than young), took the tobacco pledge, amoug whom were two Sunday school superintendents and many prominent church members. I am convinced that tobacco is a super-inducing cause of the drink habit. Especially is this true with the young, for many and obvious reasons.

When "judgment begins at the house of the Lord," our pastors, church members, Sunday school teachers and superintendents pledge themselves to abstain from this vile, degrading and therefore sinful habit, we may hope to see a better, cleaner state of things existing with our young men and little boys; may hope that they will understand and obey God's law written in His temple—their mortal bodies. Sarah Hooffman.

REPORT OF TWELFTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U of the twelfth congressional district, held its first convention at Nevada, January 31.

The morning was spent by the convention in disposing of a large amount of miscellaneous business In the afternoon, after the convention was duly called to order by the president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, the first order of business was the election of district officers of the twelfth congressional district. It resulted in the following choice: President, Mrs. J. W. Ingraham, of Nevada; secretary, Mrs. Willet Gardner, of Schell City; treasurer, Mrs. Woods of Lamar; county presidents, Bates, Mrs. Walle; Dade, Mrs. Mrs. Merrell; Vernon, Mrs. Nixon; Barton, Mrs. Robinson; Cass, Mrs. Marie Russell.

Presidents for Henry, St. Clair and Cedar counties, to be appointed by the district president.

Mrs. Ingraham, the district president elect, is one of Nevada's popular ladies, and an earnest worker in the cause of temperance. The convention made a wise choice when they selected this estimable lady. Mrs. Ingraham made a brief but appropriate inaugural address. The rest of the session was spent in hearing reports. Mrs. Hoffman spoke in the evening. About thirty-five representatives from abroad were present.

The next meeting will be held the first Thursday and Friday in October next, by which time it is hoped all the counties will be organized and represented.

The convention has been of great advantage to us. The paper that opposed us most gave us a long and kindly report. We are pressing right along with the work, pulling out brick after brick from the temple of Bacchus until in the sweet bye and bye the whole structure will topple and fall. May God grant that the fall of it may be soon and forever.

Carthage.—In the year 1875 at the close of the almost incredible events of the "Crusade" in this place, a few women organized a W. C. T. U. and held regular meetings till the flood of the Murphy tide came in, then as the number at each meeting seldom exceeded five, we debated whether it were better to continue a seeming nominal existence, or disband, but the point was invariably settled by some sister demurring, "for the time was coming when we would win the battle by waiting with drawn sabers" and our weekly prayer meeting bound us firmer together and stronger to the cause, and we made convenient ballast for any temperance craft, or pilot to any wrecked on "drunken reef." April 1883 brought good sister Clardy, who aided the sisters in reorganizing, and filled their hearts with joy and gladness, as her efforts gave a new impetus to the work with increased numbers.

In December, our beloved state president, Mrs. Hoffman, was here, and with her talent and indomitable energy gained new victories for the women, and they "thanked God and took courage," but the men, "Where are the men?" expressed the situation, as the cause pressed itself close upon us; with a few noble exceptions, activity in temperance work, was as rare as it was unpopular.

On the eleventh of February, 1884, the C. T. W. of the state sent to us their organizer, Mr. C. J. Holt, and he commenced work amid surroundings so depressing that any soul but his would have gone down with the ship. Only a few women were pledged to his support, but they had God's promises to back them. From night to night the interest in his meetings has grown, till now the audiences fill the largest hall in town.

On the 16th he sent out 285 children on parade with their uniforms. Our young ladies and young men are coming into the work, and the list of our W. C. T. U. members increases under his labors. A.

Centre View.—About the seventeenth of last September, Mrs. Clardy came to this place, and on Sabbath afternoon gave a good and stirring lecture, which ought to have aroused all the ladies of Centre View to active work in the cause of temperance. The evening of the same day she gave another lecture, and invited all the ladies to meet with her and organize on Monday afternoon at half past two, in one of the churches.

We met in the Presbyterian church and elected our officers, there being only enough ladies present to form an organization without electing any vice presidents.

I see in your valuable paper an account of the "cyclone" in Centre View, and it is not necessary to give any remarks on it. Our society is flourishing. On the twenty-seventh of December we gave an entertainment and oyster supper combined, and cleared seventy-five dollars in one evening. The Masons allowed us to use their hall, which we consider a favor and the gentlemen gave us their aid in arranging the hall. We have sent for books for the library wi h part of the funds, and the remainder will be used for lectures.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

New unions have recently been formed at Bethlehem and Franconia. The white ribbon army of New Hampshire was never more resolute than now. One or two of the school boards of our towns propose not to enforce the new school law, but the W. C. T. U. is thoroughly in earnest to see it enforced in every town in our state.

The recent two weeks' tour made through our state by Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston, was eminently successful in every respect. She was greeted by large and enthusiastic audiences and won all hearts by her clear reasoning, earnest appeal and rare eloquence. The universal testimony was that her addresses were above criticism. Through her efforts weak unions were strengthened, new ones wer formed at Portsmouth, Newmarket, Lake Village, Whitefield, Plymouth, Laconia, Tilton and Suncook, and thus over 300 new members were enlisted in the work. She was accompanied by the state corresponding secretary, who assisted somewhat in the organizing, and also formed a union of forty members at Meredith.

As ever, N. H. King.

NEW YORK.

ANNUAL JAIL REPORT FOR 1883.

Troy.—During the past year the jail has been visited by one or more ladies of the union nearly every week, and we are happy to report a growing interest in this important work. This is shown by an increased number of voluntary helpers.

On flower mission day, a number of ladies went to the jail and presented each prisoner a bouquet, attached to which was a text of Scripture.

A very large number of temperance and religious tracts, papers, Sunday school journals, Scripture cards, Testaments and Bibles have been distributed. Much of this literature has been supplied by the union.

The union subscribed for five German Messengers and has purchased German tracts, as frequently as there were German inmates unable to read English. Both the New York Witness and Jerry Mc Auley's papers are favorites with the prisoners, and when we make our weekly visits to the jail we take as many copies of each as we can secure. We engage in personal conversation with the inmates, and frequently prayer is offered, hymns sung and gospel truths presented.

In our visits, we have found that strong drink has wrought the ruin of nearly all, of both sexes.

Two hundred pledges have been taken during the year. Some of the good seed sown we have reason to believe has sprung up to bear fruit to God's glory, for several have given good evidence of having found Jesus. We feel that we can rejoice and take comfort in promise "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

Brockport.—We have been greatly blessed here in western New York by the efficient labors of our dear sister Obenauer, and we want all to know and appreciate her as we do. She is especially adapted to our W. C. T. U. work and for depth of thought and clearness of argument she is equalled by few public speakers, while her beauty of expression, pith and earnestness, produces a deep impression on her audience.

Being highly educated in English, as well as in German her work is much needed in all large towns and cities where there is a large German element to be reached, and this organization should not overlook the valuable aid of this true servant of the Lord. Her spiritual Bible readings speak a language which cannot be foreign to any earnest heart.

As she is to remain in this state for a few months, we advise all unions needing help to engage her services at once. Her terms truly indicate she is working for a higher good than enriching self as she fills all appointments for each day for the low sum of $5, including the best of sermons and the finest evening lectures.

PENNSYLVANIA.

EAST END W. C. T. U.

Pittsburg.—We have been for a long time meeting and praying together, and in our closets asking the kind Father in Heaven to open our way for work and send us workers. He who gave the promise, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done," has proved Himself faithful, and has sent to us grand, noble, whole-souled workers, women of God, full of zeal, energy and love for souls; and we are now under way, prosperously. Our work among the colored people is quite encouraging, our union has been sustaining two meetings of this kind, one of which is under the management of one of our members, the other is fostered by the union as a body. The main object, we have in view at present, is to secure a suitable room for a reading room, and if possible a lunch-room. We are looking to the dear Lord to help and direct us in this matter, for our only destruction is our poverty. To the accomplishment of this object, we have been successful in gat ring quite a little sum of money through the means of a sewing committee, who are industrious and zealous. We hold regular weekly parlor meetings, we find them more attractive and interesting. Once a month we have a tea meeting or social meeting, at the house of some member who shall invite it, where a very plain temperance tea is provided by the hostess, and the evening spent socially in readings, music, or hearing the experiences of different workers. The second week in the month, our meeting is devotional, at which time we seek a self-examination and urge a more entire consecration to God, for qualification for work. Some we trust are inquiring for the rest of faith, to be attained by the true believer. We find our parlor meetings the most successful of all our former efforts.

We do not at present, find any discouragement; we believe that "our God will supply all our needs." B.

McKeesport.—Our union is a new one, organized one year ago last September. We meet weekly; have an average attendance of eight or nine from a membership of thirty. We are indebted to our business men for our comfortable headquarters, situated in the central part of the town, the rent of which is secured for a year.

We made an appeal to our citizens to elect temperance men at our municipal election. The result we do not yet know.

We have secured monthly finance cards and intend to circulate them. We have districted the town and expect to visit every one seeking helpers and those whom we may help. We brought the anniversary of the crusade before the ministers, and temperance sermons were preached on that day by nearly all of our local ministers.

Our most successful work at present is simply holding on. We have a press committee who secure the insertion of temperance items in our local papers.

A ladies' prayer meeting is held weekly, but we have not as yet made any public effort to interest outsiders. One thing we desire to do is to place temperance lessons in our Sabbath schools. We have ten Protestant churches and one Catholic; shall try them all.

Mrs. Anna M. Bailie.

Every week when my Union Signal comes I turn to the "News from the Field," for I often find a deal of inspiration in that corner of the paper. I see so little from my own loved Keystone state that I am going to report for Mercer county at least.

We are one of fourteen organized county unions in Pennsylvania. Our president, Mrs. Rob't Wolfkill, resides in Sharon. Seventeen local unions, nearly all live ones, are reported this year.

Last week and part of this week John B. Finch was in the county and lectured at five points: Wilmington, Sharon, Mercer, Greenville and Fredonia, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The press are giving very favorable notices of his lectures, and all places that I have heard from report full houses and good collections.

Greenville, a new union organized in December by Miss N. E. White, promises to be much help to the county. Mrs. Chas. Wray is the president, and the whole force, rank and file, show an earnestness that evidently means business. They have held two mass meetings which have been very successful.

A nnmber of our county superintendents of departments have been doing good work, worthy of mention: Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, of Sharon, whom many of the readers of The Union Signal know personally, has done splendid work in her department, "Unfermented Wine." She is one of our systematic ones; her report was commented on in the state minutes as the best in the state. The statistics are as follows: Whole number of churches in county 129; heard from in response to inquiry 113; using unfermented wine at last report 81. Mrs. H. says many of the churches not using it would do so if some Christian women would make it and plead for its use. She has supplied seven churches outside of her own town.

The county supports about a dozen local papers. These of course require quite a large press committee from our W. C. T. U., as nearly all these papers are favorable to our cause, or at least are very courteous in publishing articles and notices for us. We have an able press committee of eight headed by Mrs. Rev. Crawford as superintendent.

Through the efforts of the committee on scientific temperance instruction the county superintendent of schools, Prof. A. J. Palm, secured the services of Miss White to present this subject at the teachers' institute. The W. C. T. U. text book superintendent was also present with "Teachers' Manual," "Alcohol and Hygiene," etc., while several hundred pages of teachers' series of tracts were distributed.

Six of our unions celebrated the crusade anniversary—perhaps more—but only six have been "heard from."

This year we appointed Mrs. J. D. Wilson of Sharon as superintendent of department county fairs and as we now have a local union at each of the four points in the county where fairs are held, we hope to have something done in this branch next fall.

Don't imagine that all our bright good women live in Sharon, because they don't but I'll tell you about some of the rest and what they do some time again.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Beverly.—Has been favored by a visit from our state secretary Mrs. Ellis. Miss Smith will speak in the interest of rail road work at Camden. We have planned for Mrs. Foster to speak in Camden Sunday p. m. March 16. Also for an address from Miss Willard at Newark, on Saturday evening of conference week in Halsey street M. E. church.

Jersey City.—Last week there was a grand temperance demonstration of the women of this place. Forty churches had been invited to send delegates to consult as to ways and means. The day was very stormy and only a part responded to the call, but they meant business. Mrs. Dr. McLean president of Hoboken union and Mrs. Hammer, national superintendent of juvenile work, spoke on the issues of the work, and the best way of organizing. Mrs. Hammer also addressed a large and interesting temperance juvenile union and taught them the triple pledge in verse. An organization of a W. C. T. U. will be the result.

Trenton.—Is being blessed with temperance evangelistic work, by Mabee and English.

Plainfield.—Will welcome them next week and we hope ere they leave, our fifteen liquor dealers, will be brought to Christ and become pledged members of our gospel temperance work.

This temperance troupe consists of five persons, viz., Mr. and Mrs. Mabee, Mr. and Mrs. Burnett, and Mr. Joseph English. Mr. Burnett is cornetist, Mrs. Burnett is organist, Mrs. Mabee is the soprano singer, while the two leaders are both good talkers and good singers. All of their performances are short, pithy and very impressive and effective.

A brother writes: "Shoot your heaviest guns at the men in the church who refuse to do what they can to put down the rum power. Send your grape and canister into their ranks; pour an enfilading fire upon them until they vote and work as they pray. The church is able to destroy the liquor traffic if it will unitedly and earnestly attack it. We want temperance men every day in the year, more especially on election day." Our correspondent is right, the church is able to destroy the liquor traffic if it will. When the church arrays itself against rumselling as it did against slavery, prohibition will come.

Every pulpit ought to send forth a certain sound on the question of temperance.

The usages of coffee houses, holly tree inns and reformed men's homes, two clubs on the question of tobacco, is greatly desired. Address, Box 1422, Plainfield, N. J.

CALIFORNIA.

San Jose.—October first, or thereabouts, an ordinance was enacted by the board of supervisors, requiring any person opening a saloon to give $10,000 or bonds, signed by ten reliable men in the immediate vicinity of said saloon. The liquor men asked a repeal. The matter was brought before the union as deserving some action on the part of all advocates of temperance. A thorough canvass was at once effected, and a petition with the signatures of one thousand ladies of this county presented to the board, praying them to maintain their act. Notwithstanding the result of this was defeat, that defeat is to be the incentive to final victory. On December 23 our pastors were invited to devote the evening service to the subject of temperance, and the collection to the N. W. C. T. U.

The Presbyterian, United Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches contributed about $30.

The department of heredity, though a new branch of the work, has a committee fully alive to, and sparing no pains to set forth the subject, as viewed from its God-given standpoint. The literature committee are earnestly working to secure temperance teaching for our youth. The juvenile committee report the kindergarten work happily progressing.

Receipts of coffee house have more than met the expenses, leaving a surplus for outside work, which heretofore has been crippled for want of funds.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The following tribute to the late Mrs. E. A. Adams of Northampton was written by one who was a co-worker with her in all good causes and had opportunity to knew her well:

Seldom does a lady win by the force of Christian character and ceaseless activity in Christian and philanthropic labors, such general respect in a community, in so short a time, as did the late Mrs. Ellen A. Adams president of the local W. C. T. U.

At the last annual meeting of the W. C. T. U., she was elected its president. Since then she has ceaselessly toiled in the good cause both with pen and voice, and much of the increased activity in the temperance cause in the city is due to her untiring zeal in working herself, planning work for others, and then inciting them to do it.

Sabbath after Sabbath during the summer and fall she might have been seen, sometimes alone, at other times in company with other members of the Union going up to the poor farm to read the Scriptures to and to pray with the inmates who were unable to attend the house of God.

The day before she was taken sick was spent in service for the temperance cause, and even a few hours before her death she had to be urged to cease planning for future work for the union. Whilst it is not given to every lady to undertake, and to successfully do so much Christian and philanthropic work as Mrs. Adams, yet doubtless her example should bestir each woman to do what she can, and should cause the sterner sex to arouse to new activity in the cause she loved and labored for so much and so well. Certainly she has earned the epitaph

"She hath done what she could."

RHODE ISLAND.

For some months past a petition has been in circulation under the direction of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., asking the general assembly, as the Rhode Island legislature is called, to take the first steps toward constitutional prohibition. The usual drawbacks, sickness among members of our unions, inclement weather, and the widely scattered condition of the country unions, have militated against anything like a thorough canvass, but a great deal of persistent, earnest labor has been done, resulting in the securing of nearly 11,000 signatures to the petition, with tardy sheets still coming in.

On Wednesday, Feb. 20, the petitioners were given a hearing by the joint committee on constitutional charges, to whom the petition had been referred. Four ladies appeared in behalf of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. J. K. Barney, state president, spoke first, referring to the work, extent and influence of the organization which she represented. She showed how our efforts with young and old and in different departments were thwarted by legalized liquor shops, and pleaded for more permanent and righteous legislation, and presented strong arguments for immediate action in securing constitutional prohibition.

Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, state corresponding secretary, spoke next. She said the numerous petitioners did not ask the assembly to pass a prohibitory law at this time, whatever might be their personal wish in regard to it, but asked rather that the people be allowed to express their opinion in regard to constitutional prohibition. Such a number of petitioners should have their wishes respected. But recognizing the fact that the committee stood in the position of those who must first recommend such a constitutional change, arguments were presented for the principle of prohibition, both as to its rightfulness and also for the probability of the efficiency of such a movement.

Mrs. H. D. Tingley, superintendent of the legislative department in our state union, was the next speaker. She discussed the relative merits of the principles of license and prohibition, gave a running review of the history of temperance legislation in the state, showed how the license system has failed, and quoted from recognized authority in regard to the advantages of the measure petitioned for.

Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of the Providence Union, referred to the evil of intemperance as it had existed in different periods of the world's history, spoke of the failure of different methods to cope with it and urged the trial of the new method as something promising more permanence and efficiency.

Several gentleman afterward spoke for other temperance organizations, which had presented petitions for the same thing, after which Samuel Austin, a venerable Friend, presented in behalf of a thousand members of his society, a similar petition, reading in its defence and as a plea for its recognition, a carefully prepared and valuable paper.

ILLINOIS.

REPORT OF FOURTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of the fourth district held its first convention for 1884 in the Congregational church at Evanston February 18 and 19. The convention was called to order at 2 p. m. by the president, Miss Helen L. Hood. The session was opened with devotional exercises led by Mrs. A. W. Wood, of Oak Park. The committee on credentials reported all officers present and twenty-one delegates. There were many topics of interest discussed during the convention and some important plans of work decided upon.

Among the many prominent temperance workers present were, notably, our national president, Miss Frances E. Willard with her magnetic words of cheer and encouragement; Mrs. Mary B. Willard with concise plans of work; Mrs. Stroud Smith, of Liverpool, Eng., who is delighting so many with her beautiful Bible readings; Mrs. T. B. Carse, Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, and Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball.

There were reports from eleven of the thirteen unions in the district. All were full of good tidings of the past and promises of earnest and consecrated work in the future. Each union reported the organization of Bands of Hope as auxiliary to their work, excepting Evanston which has an industrial school under the charge of Mrs. Marcy and is doing a grand work for these hitherto neglected little ones. Three young ladies' unions have been organized in the district recently. One at Oak Park during the past month which had a membership of fifty-five at its second meeting.

During the sessions of the convention Mrs. Smith gave one of her impressive Bible readings illustrating the teachings of the Scriptures in regard to temperance. Miss Kimball who had just returned from Iowa gave a very encouraging report of the outlook there.

The Maplewood Union through their president, Mrs. E. C. Higgins presented a request for financial aid to purchase a building offered for sale at Maplewood and which they were anxious to secure possession of for gospel temperance work.

After much discussion pro and con it was finally agreed that the district should raise $250 for this purpose, provided the Maplewood Union would incorporate and purchase the building. The committee on apportionment are to fix the amount to be paid by each union.

Mrs. M. B. Willard, chairman of the committee on plan of work reported in substance as follows: Each union should in the next quarter double its membership, establish Bands of Hope, secure the introduction of the temperance lessons in the Sabbath schools and subscribe in toto for The Union Signal. Also that an organizer should be sent out to establish local unions throughout the district.

The last topic on the program was "The Needs of the District," presented by Mrs. Willard. Among other interesting items she presented the following statistics: More liquor was distilled in the fourth district than in any other in Illinois excepting the Peoria district. Population was 200,000 of which 25,000 were foreigners. There were all told but seventy-five churches and thirteen W. C. T. Unions. The president of the National W. C. T. U. resided in the district, but also the president of the National Distillers' Association.

After voting resolutions of thanks the convention adjourned with the doxology.

Mrs. C. F. Lockwood, Sec.

Downs.—Letters and circulars keep coming to me from different departments of W. C. T. U. work addressed to E. M. Cook, president W. C. T. U. Also several offers of lectures at $20 per night and correspondingly liberal offers.

Now in justice to myself I want to say I am not president, and there is no union at Downs, nor has there been for I think about three years. And I can in some small degree sympathize with Elijah when at the cave of Horeb he says "I even I only am left."

I am only a "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" woman and expect to live working for its interests and die in its ranks.

While on this subject I think I will give some of the good resulting from our work here during our short life. In the first place I can think just now of several men who were going down, down to the drunkard's doom who at our very first open meeting signed our pledge, and today are working Christians, filling their place in the Sabbath school and church of God. Said one of these men to me not long since, "I bless God for your work here." Again, fermented wine had been always used at the Lord's table prior to our organization but the ladies of the union refused to partake, and though it raised quite a commotion in the church at the time, yet it has never been used since, but the pure juice of the grape instead, prepared expressly for this purpose.

The children of our Sabbath school are almost all pledged against the use of all intoxicants including wine, beer and cider. A considerable amount of temperance literature has been circulated although it was not sent into our school district until we bought it. There is a loan library, not strictly temperance it is true, but all good standard works, thus cultivating a taste for good books, and shutting out by so much the bad ones. This much has been done that we can tell, and how much that we cannot see, how many silent influences have been felt I suppose eternity alone will reveal. And as for one I purpose "whatever my hand findeth to do that I will do with my might," not as an officer of a mythical union, but as a Christian temperance woman, bound for the bar of God there to give an account of my work done here, and I have no higher ambition than to hear the plaudit "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter thou into my rest." Mrs. E. M. Cook.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—A union has been organized at Pleasant Plains by Mrs. S. J. Strong.

—A convention of the twelfth district will be held at Jerseyville, March 12 and 13. Miss West will be present.

—Mrs. Lucy Simpson is now working in Decatur. Her next engagements are Lincoln, Rankin and Springfield, a week in each place.

—A Band of Hope has been organized at Tampico, of forty-two members, with the following officers: Anna Bastian, president; Jennie Maxfield, vice president; Ina Smith, secretary; Nellie Aldrich, treasurer; Ethel Smith, organist.

—District and county presidents will please send dates of conventions to be held by them to headquarters, that reports and leaflets may be sent them. Let every convention have its table of this literature which shall be free to all.

—The sixth district is enjoying a two weeks' visit, not strictly for pleasure, from Miss West. In company with the energetic president of that district, Miss West has visited Byron, Monroe Center, Rockford, Freeport, Mt. Carroll and several other points, speaking two and three times each day.

—The secretary of the Leland W. C. T. U. writes: "Mr. Alexander Cooper has been with us five days, working in his earnest and enthusiastic way. The pledge was presented every evening, and a number of signers secured. Mr. Cooper is now at Sandwich, where most encouraging results are attending his efforts."

MAINE.

Caribou.—It is a long distance to send items of our W. C. T. U. work to Illinois, but as The Union Signal finds it way into many remote corners, some eyes no doubt will rest upon this paragraph with interest. Aroostook county lying in the very northeastern corner of Maine, and forming the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick, has three flourishing unions, and now numbers a fourth, as a new one was organized at Washburn, February 11. This union is formed in a new and thriving town, and we expect to see some good accomplished. It has started with the purpose of procuring a temperance library for the Reform Club of the town.

As we have hitherto not asked much space in the crowded columns of The Union Signal, we may be pardoned for a little further allusion to our county work.

Fort Fairfield, that said when our good state president urged an organization of a W. C. T. U. in that growing and prosperous town, "We see no need of one here," now has a union of sixty members, and so many plans and opportunities for labor that the busy hands are never idle for a moment.

Caribou and Presque Isle unions, though not so large numerically, are doing earnest work. One method of our work in the educational line I believe to be original with the efficient teacher who first adopted it, for I have never seen the suggestion in print.

Miss Eliza M. Gardner, of Caribou, teacher of a primary school of eighty pupils, uses the leaflets and illustrated tracts supplied by the union for supplementary reading, and says the children are delighted with them and preserve them carefully until all worn out.

No objection can possibly be made to this method of temperance instruction, for only the usual time allotted for reading is taken, and as she in common with many other teachers, require supplementary reading of some sort, is it not a good way to work in some temperance seed sowing that will spring up and bear a harvest by and by? We can all testify that the lessons we first learned from our reading books have been retained, when many other early events have faded from the mind. So until compulsory temperance instruction be gained, let us labor in these small beginnings with faith and perseverance, knowing that in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Mrs. C. W. Porter.

Skowhegan.—We find so much pleasure in reading reports from other unions, that we thought perhaps it might please the readers of The Union Signal to hear from Skowhegan, as many people who have never visited this section of country, have an idea that this place is as far into the backwoods of Maine as it is possible to get. Now we want to tell you all about ourselves. In the first place, we are not in the woods, but in a thrifty, beautiful village on the Kennebec river, surrounded by fine sloping hills, the views from which, are second to none in our beloved Pine Tree state.

Our population is nearly five thousand. We have all the advantages of our smaller cities, and superior facilities for manufacturing and educational purposes to some of our sister villages, whose population far exceeds our own.

Our temperance organizations number four, viz., a lodge of I. O. O. G. T., Band of Hope, Reformers—am sorry to say in a dying condition—and above all, our W. C. T. U., whose members, especially its officers, are heartily at work to advance the cause of temperance and to hasten the death of King Alcohol, as die he must.

Last crusade day was devoted to dime collections, temperance sermons, and the distribution of temperance literature, of which we circulated 1200 pages. Had a fine temperance address in the afternoon, also one in the evening.

We feel that we are doing all in our power to help the work along, and are proud to know that we are one of the small twigs, if no more, that constitute the far spreading "temperance tree," whose health giving shade has been felt upon so many rum cursed homes of our land.

Not long ago one of our number, whose name in connection with the reform work is as familiar as household words, offered from her own purse, a prize to the junior class of our high school for the best essay on alcohol. All, or nearly all of the class wrote upon the subject, and we are proud to state that on examination by a committee of two, Mrs. L. W. Weston and Mrs. A. S. Norris, all the essays gave good satisfaction and were decidedly creditable to the writers, evincing careful study and fine mental perception of their subject.

The final decision awarded the prize to Miss Stella Foster. We predict for her a brilliant future, hoping she will beoome an efficient worker in the temperance reform. May she continue to write until not only the community will acknowledge the influence of her ready brain, but the rumseller will feel the mediumistic power of her pen. The W. C. T. U. have now offered a prize to the first class in the grammar school for essays on the same subject, and have presented to the high school an addition to their library, consisting of four books, viz: Reid's "Temperance Cyclopedia;" "Our Wasted Resources," by Dr. Hargreaves; Dr. Story on Alcohol, and Cowan on Tobacco." These books will prove of invaluable assistance to the pupils in writing their essays.

Mrs. G. Nolin, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

VERMONT.

Fearing you will forget your friends in our "Green Mountain state" unless we bring ourselves oftener to your notice, we are going to tell you of our convention. The W. C. T. U. of Washington county held a convention at Marshfield, January 30 and 31. As this is the only mid-winter meeting of this kind held in the state, we think it worthy of passing notice. The president of the Vermont W. C. T. U., Mrs. E. G. Greene, of whom we are justly proud, was with us, and contributed largely to the interest and success of the meeting. The exercises of the first session, held on Wednesday evening, January 30, consisted of a service of song, conducted by a well-drilled choir; Scripture reading and prayer; a recitation; and an address by Mrs. E. G. Greene, upon "The new school law" of Vermont. Her remarks were well received by a large and attentive audience. The first half-hour of the morning session was devoted to a prayer service. At ten o'clock the convention was called to order, committees chosen and we proceeded to the business of the day. A very fine address of welcome was given by Rev. C. H. Farnsworth, who dwelt in a pleasing manner upon the reasons why we should be welcomed, which are found in the words forming our title, "'Temperance,' 'Christian,' 'Woman's,' 'Union.'" A response in behalf of the convention was given by Mrs. Rev. H. A. Russell, of Cabot. Mrs. Greene responded in behalf of the state.

Reports were given from the various organizations showing much good work done. The W. C. T. U. of Montpelier meet regularly every two weeks. Are doing much work in various directions, especially in Sunday school and in the jail. Mrs. D. L. Fuller, state superintendent prison and jail work is a member of that union.

The Cabot union has been in existence a little more than two and a half years. The report of the secretary showed that its president had been absent only once during the entire time.

Waitsfield W. C. T. U. is doing a grand work with the triple pledge reaching nearly all in some schools. The Y. W. C. T. U. of Montpelier and Barre are wide awake organizations, doing much which the older unions cannot accomplish.

We should like to tell you of all the good things which were served out to us in the way of papers, recitations and music but space forbids.

The time was fully occupied, a large audience was present and all seemed enthusiastic. We separated at night feeling a new love for our work, and an increased conviction that women have a work to do in the suppression of this world-wide curse.

As a direct result of the convention, a W. C. T. U. was organized at Marshfield, of thirty-three members and several honorary members.

A union was also formed at Plainfield on the following Monday. Mrs. B. P. Elmer,

Pres. W. C. T. U., Wash. Co.

OHIO.

Granville.—We have a very flourishing Band of Hope, which meets every Sabbath afternoon. We met in our W. C. T. U. rooms, and organized the 22d of July, with twenty-nine members. Our numbers increased so rapidly we were soon very much crowded, and decided to move to the town hall, which we rented for one dollar per Sabbath.

Some said we could not pay the rent, but the ladies of our union, though few in number, are quite persevering when they undertake anything, and decided it could, and should be done. An entertainment was given by the Band the 5th of January, which was well attended, and was quite a success, though the weather was very cold.

The next day we met in the hall for the first time, had a large attendance, and many visitors were present.

At our last meeting there were one hundred and eighty-four present, all taking part in the exercises, as we have a class of adults, as well as a large class of young ladies, and another of young men.

We use Miss Colman's catechism for general exercises, and D. C. Cook's quarterlies for class recitation. We have Cook's temperance library, and are going to add his Sunday school library soon.

Mrs. L. P. Bancroft.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The Sunday afternoon meetings at Ottawa, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., are accomplishing much good.

At Marionville, Mo., A town of about 800 inhabitants, 455 have signed the pledge, a result of the labors of Messrs. Holt and Critcnfield.

A most encouraging report comes to us of the Y. W. C. T. U., of Quincy, Ill., A Band of Hope has just been organized with ninety-one members, officered entirely by the girls, which is "worthy to be a model for the state."

The W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania, together with the W. C. T. U. of Lewistown, presented the Bloomsburg Normal school with twenty-five volumes on the subject of temperance. The beneficial results from such a source of knowledge are certain.

A coffee house and reading room was opened in Helena, Ark., on Main street, opposite the International Hotel, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., on the evening of February 13. The room was crowded and many stood about the door

The county commissioners of Kingsbury county, Dak., having submitted the question of license or no license to the people on the 4th of March, the ladies of the W. C. T. U. have declared their intention not only to work and pray for an anti-license victory, but to vote, as they pray.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Georgetown, Ill., has evidently been organized for work. "Fourteen girls that are interested" can do wondrous things anywhere, but especially in a small town. One noteworthy feature of their work is the "loan library" which they have already established.

Cornwall, Canada W. C. T. U., is circulating a petition from the women of that town, asking the voters to vote in favor of the Scott act. Monistring union, through whose efforts several licenses were cut off in that town last year, is taking steps for a continuance of that desirable state of things.

A new, live union has been formed at Ganaroque, Canada, with fifty-four members. Much aggressive work has been planned, and the whole county will soon be organized to help in the coming Scott act campaign. Unions have recently been formed at Guelph, Baltimore, Stouffville, and Bracebridge.

At Greensburg, Ind., December 10, Mrs. M. L. Wells and Amanda Way, the president and vice president of the Indiana state W. C. T. U., organized a branch union. It commenced with about forty members, and has more than doubled since, with the prospect of many more to come in. The union is composed of live, active, enthusiastic workers of all the different churches.

At Franklin, Pa., the temperance revival, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U of this city, is booming. Will J. McConnell, the gospel temperance advocate, conducts the meetings, and each evening delivers eloquent and interesting addresses which awaken great enthusiasm in the hearts of the people. The court room is crowded each evening, and large numbers have signed the pledge.

Of Mrs. Marion B. Baxter's recent visit to Emporia, Kansas, and her lecture, "Handwriting on the Wall," the secretary of the W. C. T. U. sends the following notice: "Mrs. Baxter is an able, and at times, eloquent speaker, and has given much study and research to the subject matter of her lecture. She is thoroughly familiar with the workings of legislation on the temperance question. Her audience was both instructed and entertained, and we trust the many practical truths she voiced will have a good effect upon all who heard them."

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."
